When all was ready, and the last hawser cut, the schooner started slowly for the water. Then with a rush she plunged into the icy slip and an immense wave forced the ice and steamer Forbes in the air. The Forbes rolled until half over and then the crowd on shore saw a sight which chilled them. Those who had remained on the upper deck were clinging on for life if they could find projections, while less fortunate ones were flying headlong toward the water. Fully thirty were thrown overboard and in an instant the black forms rose to the surface between the two boats and in the field of broken ice. How many are lost has not been ascertained but George Hawkins and Ross Bennett, boys living in this city, and Fred Peel, a Michigan Central conductor, from Detroit, are missing. Fully a dozen were injured, among them being Fred Babcock, George Doyle, William Battishill, and George Clark. Battishill is probably fatally injured.

WELCOME HOME.

All Indianapolis Turns Out to Greet Mr. Harrison.

Indianapolis special: Ex-President Benjamin Harrison arrived home on a special train over the Pennsylvania line. He was given a reception as a citizen of Indianapolis that was far greater than any he ever received as President of the United States. The crowd was larger than that which bade him Godspeed when he left for inauguration four years ago. The members of the reception committee met him at Knightstown, taken over on a special car, which was made a part of the returning train. When the train pulled into the Union Station is was greeted with cheers from 5,000 throats, and as the ex-President walked through the depot with Mrs. McKee he was tendered an ovation. A procession made up of the local militia and civic organizations escorted him to his home. The evening reception occured at the State House between the hours of 8 and 10 o'clock.

Short addresses of welcome were delivered on the part of the State by Governor Matthews, and on behalf of the citizens by Hon. C. W. Fairbanks, to which Gen. Harrison responded. After these exercises Gen. Harrison and Mrs. McKee, assisted by Governor and Mrs. Matthews and Mayor and Mrs. Sullivan received the large concourse of citizens, irrespective of party, until a late hour.

COLLAPSED.

A Big Building Tumbles to the Ground at Indianapolis.

The front floor of an old brick building, No. 25, on the south side of Washington street, Indianapolis, collapsed. The top floor struck the second and struck it down, taking with it to the cellar Henry Benning and William Brockmeyer who were on the first floor at work. Another man had just stepped into the room, but he heard the cracking of the timbers and ran out in time to escape being hurt. Benning was struck over the eye by a timber. The blow was a glancing one and his injury was only a severe cut. Brockmeyer, however, went down with the debris into the cellar. The fire department was called out and the work of rescue began admidst a vast amount of excitement. Brockmeyer was dug out with apparently no more serious injury than a broken leg, and it was soon discovered that there were no victims. It proved later that Brockmeyer was hurt internally and died.

MAY STRIKE.

The Toledo, Ann Arbor and North Michigan Engineers Have a Grievance.

Toledo special: It is almost a settled fact that the engineers of the Toledo, Ann Arbor and North Michigan Railroad will be ordered out. Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, held a conference with General Manager Ashley of the road with the result that he latter announced the inability of the company to accede to the demands of its engineers. It is set forth that the men have been receiving from $100 to $145 per month and they had asked an increase of 15 per cent. Chief Sergeant of the Locomotive Firemen was summoned to confer with Mr. Arthur. Chief Arthur stated that it is almost certain the men on the Ann Arbor will be ordered out. The company have non-union men here awaiting the result. Trouble is feared on the numerous connections of the Ann Arbor as the employes of the various lines say they will handle no freight from the Ann Arbor if non-union men are taken on.

Indicted for Murder.

Charles D. Law, General Superintendent of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, has been indicted for murder by the grand jury at Chicago in connection with the grade crossing fatality of Dec. 29 last, at the Forty-seventh street crossing on the Fort Wayne road. Peter Schwartz, a flagman; John Albrecht, a gateman, and Henry W. Roscup, engineer of the train that ran down the street-car and killed four and injured fourteen persons, were also jointly indicted with Mr. Law upon the same charge.

Good Reports of Country Postoffices.

In July last Postmaster General Wanamaker sent letters to postmasters at all county seats to make visits of inspection to all postoffices in their respective counties and grade them in management, order, keeping of accounts, cleanliness, etc., as excellent, good, fair, and poor. Reports have been received from 1,279 county seats giving the standing of 29,669 offices. The number of postoffices under each of the heads of grading is as follows: Excellent, 4,290; good, 13,071; fair, 10,019; poor, 2,289. The results of this inspection have been brought to the attention of the President and in the February-March postal guide will be published the list of offices found to be "excellent."

Floods in Russia.

In Western Russia and Eastern Germany enormous loss of property from floods is reported. In Hungary, also, the rivers are overflowing their banks, submerging villages and sweeping away thousands of cattle. The small river Raab has swollen to three times its usual size and has wrecked some 300 houses in the city of Raab and the surrounding district. More than 50,000 acres of agricultural land have been laid to waste. Near Orivina a small mountain stream overflowed during the night and swept away two woodmen's huts. Two men, two women and several children were drowned.

Terrible Casualty.

Lifares (Mexico) special: The annual festival in this city closed with a most unfortunate catastrophe. There was a bull fight in progress and the temporary tiers of seats were filled with spectators. The back were made of loosely arranged "silares" or adobs, and back of this the crowd of men, women, and children were peeping through the holes or crevices in the wall to witness the bull fight, when the weight of the seats forced the wall back, and it fell on the heads of the outside spectators, killing eight and wounding thirty of them.

Suffocated by Smoke.

Four children were suffocated in a rear room on the top floor of a tenement at No. 19 Henry street, New York. The names of the victims are: Alteman Bernstein, 11 years old; Rebecca Bernstein, 10; Hayman Bernstein, 6; and Fanny Rosen, 7 years old. The children were alone at the time, the parents having left a short time previous and locking the children in the house. The cause of the tragedy was the explosion of a kerosene stove, which belonged to Myer Ember, who occupied the apartments adjoining those of the Bernstein family.

Poisoned by Apple Butter.

Loreng Seys, a Monroe County, Ill., farmer, died several weeks ago. A week later his daughter died. A week after her death a son died and last week another child died. Mrs. Seys was taken sick in the same way a few days ago and is very low. The cause of the deaths was supposed to have been pneumonia, but it turns out that the whole family were the victims of accidental poisoning. Last fall Mrs. Seys cooked apple butter in a copper vat. The result was the formation of a poison which when eaten caused death.

Opposed to the Hibernians.

A special dispatch from Montreal says: Considerable excitement has been created among the Irish Catholic population of the provinces by the action of the Rev. Father Oates, pastor of St. Patrick's church of Quebec, in condemning the Ancient Oorder of Hibernians. Father Oates threatens to refuse the sacraments of the church to any person who joins the order. Father Oates also proposes to have a mass celebrated on St. Patrick's Day and prayers offered for the success of the Home Rule Government.

Seven Day Adventists.

The largest and most successful general conference ever held by the Seventh Day Adventists, closed its thirtieth session at Battle Creek, Mich. The final business included the qualification of seventy ministers. Foreign lands will claim most of these laborers. The church at Washington, D. C., will be provided with a minister and a State school will be located at Mount Vernon, Ohio, which will fit students for graduation in the colleges.

Foster on Fur Bearing Animals.

Secretary Foster, of the Treasury Department, has amended the recent circular issued regarding the killing of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, so as to permit vessels other than revenue cutters, as heretofore, to transport natives to localities where sea otter are found. It also permits vessels having on board sea otter skins to file a manifest of such skins at the first port of entry in the United States, instead of an Alaskan port.

The Cherokee Outlet.

The Secretary of War has informed the Secretary of the Interior that instructions have been sent by telegraph from the headquarters of the army to the Commanding General of the Department of Missouri to take such military steps as may be necessary to prevent any invasion of the Cherokee outlet, and to use whatever military force may be necessary to accomplish this object.

SPECIFIC TARIFF DUTY.

ITS DANGEROUS FEATURES THOROUGHLY EXPOSED.

Expose of Specific Duties.

In making the next tariff bill, a bitter fight will be waged over the question of whether the bill shall be made in the interests of the people, and contain only ad valorem duties, or whether it shall be again made in the interests of importers and manufacturers, and contain tricky specific duties, to a large extent. With ad valorem duties, poor people, who use cheap articles, pay no higher rates than the rich, who use dear articles. With specific duties, cloth that costs but 50 cents a yard may be subject to as much duty as cloth that costs $5 a yard.

Specific duties also prevent the people from getting the full benefit of the natural fall in the prices of commodities. Not only this, but they have ever been the resort of tricky manufacturers for obtaining, on the sly, greatly increased protection. It is for this reason, that they are so numerous in the last tariff bill. McKinley, however, in using specific duties, was using a two-edged sword. With the best of intentions toward the manufacturers, he proved himself, at least in the case cited below, to be incompetent to defend their interests; and all because he overreached himself in the use of specific duties.

A prominent New York dealer in chemicals, drugs and medicines, in expressing his views before the Tariff Reform Committee of the Reform Club, now preparing a tariff bill such as it would like to see adopted, says in regard to specific duties:

While, in the abstract, specific duties are the ideal duties; while they are perhaps easier to collect and certainly easier to determine, yet from the vast number of articles coming under the headings of drugs, medicines and chemicals it is virtually impossible to adopt specific duties. To do so would necessitate special mention of many thousands of articles, and would prove cumbersome in the extreme; I am, therefore, of the opinion, based on many years' experience, that in this class of merchandise ad valorem duties are the only practicable ones.

Now, to come down to the present tariff law, it has retained almost all of the abuses contained in the law of 1883, added a few new ones, and brought relief in but few instances on articles of minor importance. The greatest change has been made by the introduction of paragraph 74, which reads, "All medicinal preparations, including medicinal proprietary preparations, of which alcohol is a component part, or in the preparation of which alcohol is used, not specially provided for in this act, fifty cents per pound." The mischief lies in the clause, "or in the preparation of which alcohol is used." Under the ruling of the Board of General Appraisers all alkaloids and salts of alkaloids which otherwise (under paragraph 76) would pay 25 per cent. ad valorem duty are now entered under this clause at the rate of fifty cents per pound, a tremendous reduction in almost all instances and a contingency certainly never contemplated by the framers of this paragraph. As illustrations of the working of this clause, let me name a few articles which now come in at the rate of fifty cents per pound, and which but for this ill-chosen and ill-considered phrase would pay about the following rates of duty:

Cocaine muriate	$16.00	per pound
Eserine sulphate	65.00	" "
Homatropine hydrobromate	155.00	" "
Hyoscine hydrobromate	225.00	" "

These are all salts of alkaloids, and used in medicine only. In addition to such articles, paragraph 74 has also been made to apply to medicinal preparations protected by patents, and in the strictest sense of the word monopolies. All these come in now at the rate of fifty cents per pound, because in some stage of their preparation alcohol is used; whereas they should pay, according to their value abroad and the twenty-five per cent. clause of paragraph 76, about the following rate of duty:

Anti pyrin	$2.50	per pound
Piperazin	12.50	" "
Diuretin	5.00	" "

Both of these lists can be extended almost indefinitely, and according to the statement made to the writer by a former assistant appraiser of the port of New York, which statement I fully indorse, the Government has been deprived of millions of dollars of revenue under the workings of this clause, which was intended by its authors only to bring about the manufacture of chloralhydrate in this country; it has acted like a boomerang and has made American competition in this extensive class of merchandise absolutely impossible.

Plutocracy a Real Menace.

We are willing to admit that the election of Grover Cleveland checked the plutocratic tendencies which were threatening our system of government. But when Judge Gresham made the statement quoted it was painfully true. Who controlled the legislation of Congress during the first two years of Mr. Harrison's administration? The rich wool-growers of the West, the coal and iron barons of Pennsylvania, the pampered manufacturers of New England. Why did they so control legislation? Because they had paid large sums of money for the privilege.

Why did Wanamaker hold a seat in the Cabinet? Because he contributed about $600,000 to Matt Quay's corruption fund. The carpet manufacturers of Philadelphia declared in a published statement that they owned the tariff bill because they "had bought and paid for it." Who put $500,000 into the hands of the Republican committee in Rhode Island? The sugar-trust leaders, whose monopoly was made fast and firm by Senator Aldrich, who advanced the duty on refined sugar one-tenth of a cent per pound.

Plutocracy is "government by the rich." The American Government was in the grip of selfish and protected interests during Mr. Harrison's administration. Hair-splitting definitions by the avowed organ of the monopolies will not alter the fact that plutocracy had gained a foothold by the elevation of Reed and Lodge. It has been routed, however, at all points, and the people restored to power. Judge Gresham and men like him helped to achieve this result. They are entitled to the thanks of the people and are to be congratulated upon incurring the enmity of the New York Sun.—Boston Republic.

Protection Dies Hard.

Only foolish persons, who do not understand the power of organized capital and the blood-thirstiness of tariff-protected monopolies, imagine that "protection" is dead in this country, and that there will not be more hard fighting before the protected manufacturers put up the white flag. The people won a great victory over the allied forces of greed and corruption on November 8, but another desperate struggle will come when the "free-traders" frame their tariff bill and put it into operation. The ridicule, abuse and lies that will be heaped upon the measure by the irate manufacturers and their political allies will put all of their past efforts in the shade. It is probable, however, that, with such good men at the helm and old tars on deck, but little attention will be paid to the false statements of the pirates on board who would sink the ship of state that they and their allies might secure the cargo.

That the protectionists are rallying their whipped and badly disorganized forces for at least one more desperate battle is evident from the following letter sent out, under date of Feb. 23, by the American Protective Tariff League.

> Dear Sir—Many of our friends have expressed the conviction that more work by workingmen in favor of a protective tariff will have to be done in the future. With a view to carrying this idea into effect, and inaugurating systematic effort, we desire to have a local representative of the league or "official correspondent" in every factory.
>
> Upon the inclosed cards will you have the goodness to recommend to us one or more intelligent, reliable, earnest protection workingmen, whose active co-operation we can secure? Please give young men the preference.
>
> We have now over thirty-four hundred official correspondents throughout the country, who are proving a power in spreading information favorable to the protective policy. Yours very truly.

Tariff Policies of Nations.

Now let us look around and view the various countries where either one of the systems, protection or free trade, predominates.

Australia (except New South Wales), the United States, and Canada, among the new countries have protective tariffs. Wages and profits here are so high that workingmen and capitalists from all over the world emigrate to those countries in order to better their conditions.

It is true, though, of Canada, that, since its adoption of a rigid protective tariff in 1876, it has been steadily losing ground in the struggle for commercial equality with other nations. At the same time wages and profits upon investments have gone down, causing a decrease of immigration and the exodus of tens of thousands of its sons annually to its southern neighbor, where a larger population and more diversified means for employment cause the baneful influences of protection to be not so keenly felt as in less thickly populated Canada.

But the new countries to the south of the United States also have tariffs high enough to protect any industry, and to enable their people to start new industries. Yet wages there are rather low, and almost the only means of subsistence are such pursuits as cannot be protected anyway, even if protection could be made to protect.

Germany, Italy, Spain, France, Austria-Hungary, among the old countries enjoy protective tariffs, and their inhabitants (with the exception of those of France) are leaving these countries by tens of thousands in order to try to earn better wages in other lands. Hundreds of thousands at the same time are obliged to stay, but would gladly follow their more fortunate countrymen, if they had the money needed for the journey.

Great Britain, among the leading old countries, has virtual free trade, and the percentage of the emigration from that country is not only comparatively small but thousands are annually immigrating from old and "protected" countries into Great Britain. Wages in the unprotected British industries are so very much higher than in the protected industries of other old countries, that the protected workmen eagerly avail themselves of the opportunities offered in the unprotected country.

Russia, which is practically a new country, is perhaps as rich and twice as large as the United States, while it has not as many inhabitants to the square mile as the great republic of the west. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that its tariff wall is fully as high as that of the United States, its resources are undeveloped, wages are low, and thousands of its people, not merely the persecuted Jews, are annually leaving its domains in order to seek better means of subsistence elsewhere,

All of this seems to show that high tariffs or "protective" systems cannot be responsible for the higher rate of wages paid in one country than in another.—Dingman Versteeg, in Tariff Reform.

Changed Conditions.

The Republican organs that pretend to have discerned a weakening of Mr. Cleveland's purpose to secure a reform of the tariff probably do not deceive themselves. They certainly will not deceive the country. The man who risked defeat for an otherwise sure re-election to the Presidency by forcing the issue of tariff reform because he believed it to be right, and who has adhered steadfastly to that issue ever since, is not at all likely to weaken in its support now that he has been sustained by the people and put in power to carry out his policy.

To the sneering inquiry whether Mr. Cleveland now thinks that "it is a condition that confronts us, not a theory," the reply is: Yes, but, thanks to Republican profligacy and misrule, the condition is different and more perilous.—New York World.

It is the irony of fate that McKinley should be the victim of the delusive American-tin boom which he did so much to foster.

Never before in the history of Macy has there been a revival of so much interest as the one now in progress at the United Brethren Church. The meeting is being conducted by Mrs. Lydia Nice, the woman evangelist of Carroll County.

The Secretary of Agriculture has just issued a report upon the numbers and values of farm animals in the United States, from which the following is taken, relating to the condition in Indiana: "There is no material change in the number of horses, but mules and cattle fall a few points below the average, and as regards price all rule low. Sheep have increased in number over last year, and fewer have been killed by dogs than for several years. The hog crop falls very short of an average, and as a consequence prices for fat hogs range higher than for years. Live stock of all kinds are unusually free from disease."

Wabash County is not a fruitful field for confidence men, but two of them caught Mr. Lichtenwalter very cleverly. Mr. Lichtenwalter is a farmer living in the northeastern part of the county, and the men claimed to be establishing agencies for a piano house. In due time Mr. Lichtenwalter's name was attached to an alleged contract. Then the farmer's "hindsight" manifested itself and he wanted to read the contract again, but the men were in too great a hurry. The farmer followed them to South Whitley, and with the aid of a lawyer and the payment of $25 finally secured a compromise, and the men lost no time in getting out of sight.

Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: George W. Baugher, Milford, thill-coupling; August C. Constant, Fort Wayne, undried brick-protector; John M. Fender, assignor to Columbia Drill, Liberty, spring device for drills; Alexander Jack, Evansville, heater; James J. Keniman, Petersburg, clothesline holding and operating device; Edward Kuhn, New Albany, pattern for molding dovetails; Joseph M. Richardson, Indianapolis, farm gate; Ferdinand J. Wendell, Fort Wayne, stereotype casting apparatus; Washington H. Young, Indianapolis, hay-press; William C. Young, Fort Wayne, measuring and registering apparatus.

Although little has been said for some months regarding the find of marble in Huntington County, the gentlemen interested are by no means idle. For several weeks Dr. Williams has been operating with a half-dozen men in the ledges northwest of Andrews, and has now opened a ledged of mottled marble sixteen feet thick. The bed is fine on every side and the marble is first-class in every respect. A bed of greenish white and highly mottled red is also being opened, and the probabilities are that a heavy company will engage in the business the coming summer. The fact that Huntington has first-class marble is no longer to be debated. That it will be developed and an industry established which will be of great benefit to the country at large seems to be beyond doubt.

Charles Mitchell, a traveling photographer, had an experience at Wallace's circus winter quarters, Peru, that he will never forget. In company with some friends he was viewing the animals in the cat building and, although warned by the attaches not to touch any of them, he playfully attempted to stroke the head of a sleeping tiger. Before he could realize it, the tiger thrust his paw through the bars and caught Mitchell on the breast, entirely tearing off his coat, vest, and undershirt, and with the other paw caught his overcoat hanging on his arm. By a supreme effort Mitchell managed to tear himself away from the infuriated beast, which proceeded to tear the overcoat into shreds in revenge for the prey which had escaped him. The act was done so quickly that the onlookers had no time to assist Mitchell. The keeper says it is a wonder that his whole breast was not torn out.

Three Lake Shore and Michigan Southern freight trains collided at Warren, making a tremendous wreck, which took fire and destroyed about fifty thousand dollars' worth of property. No lives were lost, the trainmen escaping by jumping. Traffic was delayed for many hours.

Henry Carter, a colored laborer, on the new Hulman building at Terre Hrute, fell eighty feet and was fatally injured. He stepped on a steam-hoisting elevator, when it broke from its fastenings and fell from the fifth to the first floor, carrying him and four hods of mortar down with it.

The First National Bank was organized at Noblesville with a paid up capital of $50,000. The directors are Marion Aldred, Julius Joseph, Daniel Gravcraft, George Dunham, Pierre Gray, Jesse Devaney, and George M. Snyder. The officers are: Marion Aldred, President; George M. Snyder, Vice President; George S. Christian, Cashier.

Joseph Larimore died at Columbus in April, 1892. At the time of his death $100 back pension was due him. The check for the amount was forwarded. This check and the regular quarterly payments since that have fallen into the hands of some one who has drawn the money through a system of forgeries. His widow will now get the pension.

INDIANA LEGISLATURE.

The House got down to business Monday and passed a number of measures of importance. The most important was that authorizing the city of Indianapolis to compel the Citizens' Street Railway Company to pave between their tracks where there is a double track and two feet on the outside of the tracks.

The House, also, passed the Evansville charter bill, giving the city of Evansville a government similar to that under which the city of Indianapolis operates. The bill now only requires the Governor's signature to become a law. The Fort Wayne charter bill also passed.

Another bill passed under suspension of the rules, was that granting the city of New Albany the right to purchase the water-works of that city.

Another bill which passed under suspension of the rules was Mr. Fulzer's bill to abate the Roby race track by declaring it a nuisance. The law makes the second offense a felony, punishable by from two to five years in the penitentiary.

The Senate spent most of the day in hearing committee reports, and a great grist of pet measures were killed off, while a few were recommended for passage, one of the most important being that appropriating $100,000 for an addition to the School for the Feeble Minded at Fort Wayne.

"Whereas, Benjamin Harrison, the retiring President of the United States, will be accorded a public reception by the citizens of Indianapolis upon his return to this city, upon March 6, 1893;

"Therefore, Be it resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that a committee of thirteen each, from the Senate and House, be appointed to co-operate with the citizens' committee of Indianapolis in such reception, in order that the people of the State of Indiana may participate with the citizens of Indianapolis in according to President Harrison a cordial and popular reception upon his return to our midst.

Tuesday the House bill providing a revenue for the years 1893-'94, was substituted for the Senate measure and passed by the Senate.

The Senate, also, passed the House bill extending the terms of township officers until 1894 and changing the time of holding election from May until November.

During the consideration as a committee of the whole of the general appropriation bill in the House Representative Johnson of Marion, sprung the claim of Mrs. Edwin May, who is asking $5,000 for services of her late husband as architect in construction of the Prison North. It was defeated. Her friends will carry it to the Senate.

The Senate bill appropriating $75,000 for the World's Fair was cut down to $25,000.

A concurrent resolution passed appropriating $250 for a flag for the battle-ship Indiana, launched the other day. The senate building and loan bill, which is designed to freeze out foreign corporations by compelling them to deposit $50,000 with the Auditor, was advanced to engrossment.

The legislative apportionment bill approved by the Democratic caucus, was introduced. On its face the bill gives fifty-five Democrats and forty-five Republicans in the House and twenty-nine Democrats and twenty-one Republicans in the Senate. There are three doubtful Senatorial districts apportioned to the Republicans and one to the Democrats, while in the House there are fifty-five straight Democ-atic districts and four doubtful Republicans, so that in the future there is a possibility that there will be thirty-two Democratic Senators and fifty-nine Democratic Representatives.

The House, Wednesday, called up the caucus legislative apportionment bill and crowded it through under the previous question. The building and loan association bill, which was backed by a powerful lobby of local associations, passed the House, and was submitted to the Governor. It is one of the most important pieces of legislation marking the present session, and its effects will be far reaching. It is, in fact, a boycott of all foreign building and loan associations operating in the State, as it compels them to deposit $50,000 with the State Auditor as a guarantee of financial solidity, besides which the foreign associations are subjected to examination, and are required to pay 3 per cent. on gross receipts from Indiana members into the State Treasury.

The Senate defeated the bill presented by the Democratic Editorial Association asking for a modification of the present criminal libel law. Giving the editor, charged with criminal libel, the right to show by subsequent publication that there was no malice in the original publicity.

The Senate passed the Fort Wayne charter bill, sending it back to the House for concurrence in slight amendments. The charter exempts the city from metropolitan police control.

Senator Magee's bill to make the minimum price of contract prison labor 95 cents per day was defeated. A great mass of bills was rushed through by both Houses, and the way is now easy for a final adjournment on Monday next.

The bill regulating punishment in penal institutions, which is approved by the Prison Wardens, passed both Houses Thursday. Under its provisions no punishment can be administered until twelve hours elapse after the commission of the offense, and then only in presence of the physician and Chaplain. The convict is given the right to make a defense, which defense is made part of the record. The Senate worked all day on general appropriations. The House appropriation of $50,000 to the World's Fair was increased to $75,000.

The House passed McHugh's metropolitan police bill. This gives non-partisan police to South Bend, New Albany, Richmond, Lafayette, Logansport, Elkhart, Muncie, Michigan City, Anderson, and Jeffersonville. The House bill also passed making any combine to restrict trade, to limit production, to prevent competition and to fix prices on food unlawful. The penalty calls for $5,000 fine and prohibition from continuing in business. Daly's road bill also passed, making an application of the saving-and-loan-association principle to the building of roads.

The Government sent to the Senate the names of Editor J. J. Hiligas of Muncie and General George F. McGinnis, of Indianapolis, as Trustees of the Reform School.

The House passed the following bills: Extending the ten-year installment plan of paying for municipal improvements to property owners whose assessment is less than $50; bill extending the children's guardians' act to Terre Haute, Evansville, Fort Wayne, Richmond, Lafayette, and other cities; to permit building associations to increase their capital stock; to give cities title and custody of school property taken in by extension of their limits; empowering Oxford, Clinton County, to buy a gas plant and water works; providing that the cost of purely local sewers in cities and towns shall be assessed against abutting property owners; permitting city councils in cities of 21,000 and upward to compel property owners to make sewer, water, and gas connections to the curb before streets are improved.

It is said that dynamite is used to kill fish in White and Eel Rivers near Worthington, and that the people are afraid to report to the authorities. Fish is being shipped away in barrels, so heavy are the catches.

All of the $12,000 for the new bank at Lafontaine, Wabash County, has been subscribed by fourteen farmers. The President is John Banister; Vice President, John W. Harper; cashier, J. G. Harper of Washington, O.

The proposed consolidation of gas plants in the Indiana gas belt is a certainty. The syndicate is composed of wealthy New York and Chicago capitalists.

THE SHIPMAN'S TALE.

Listen, my masters. I spake naught but truth.
From dawn to dawn they drifted on and on,
Not knowing whither or to what dark end,
Now the north froze them, now the hot south scorched.
Some called to God, and found great comfort so;
Some gnashed their teeth with curses, and some laughed
An empty laughter seeing that they lived,
So sweet was breath between their foolish lips.
Day after day the same relentless sun,
Night after night the same unpitying stars.
At intervals fierce lightings tore the clouds,
Showing vast hollow spaces, and the sleet
Hissed, and the torrents of the sky were loosed.
From time to time a hand relaxed its grip,
And some pale wretch slid down into the dark
With stifled moan, and transient horror seized
The rest who waited, knowing what must be.
At every turn strange shapes reached up and clutched
The whirling wreck, held on awhile, and then
Slipt back into that blackness whence they came.
Ah, hapless folk, to be so tost and torn,
So racked by hunger, fever, fire, and wave,
And swept at last into the nameless void—
Frail girls, strong men, and mothers with their babes!
And were none saved?
My masters, not a soul!
O, shipman, woful, woful is thy tale!
Our hearts are heavy and our eyes are dimmed.
What ship is this that suffered such ill fate?

THE RUN ON THE BANK.

There was a run on the Sandhill and District Bank. It had lasted the whole of one day and showed no signs of abating in the evening. If it lasted another day—old Mr. Bradshaw wiped his brow. It was no use talking to his son Dick, for he took no interest in business and had spent the day in a boat with the Flirtington girls; still Mr. Bradshaw was bound to talk to some one.

"We shall have to put the shutters up. One day's grace would save us, I believe; we could get the money then. But if they're at us again to-morrow morning, we can't last two hours."

Dick sympathized, but had nothing to suggest, except that it would not make matters worse if he carried out his engagement to go to the circus with the Flirtington girls.

"Oh, go to Hong Kong with the Flirtington girls, if you like," groaned Mr. Bradshaw.

So Dick went—to the circus (the other expedition, as he observed, would keep) and enjoyed the performance very much, especially the lion-taming, which was magnificent, and so impressed Dick that he deserted his companions, went behind the scenes, and insisted on standing Signor Philippini several glasses.

"Is that big chap quite safe?" he asked, admiringly.

"I can do anything with 'im," said the signor (whose English was naturally defective); "but with any one helse'e's a roarer, 'e is, and no mistake."

After the performance, Dick took the Flirtington girls home; then, with a thoughtful look on his face, he went and had some talk with his father, and came away, carefully placing a roll of notes in his breast-pocket. Then he sought Signor Philippini's society once more. And that is all that is really known about it—if, that is, we discard the obviously fanciful statement of Fanny Flirtington that, as she was gazing at the moon about 2 a. m., she saw a heavy wagon, drawn by two horses and driven by Signor Philippini, pass along the street in the direction of the bank. She must have been wrong; for Philippini, by the evidence of his signora—whose name, notwithstanding that Philippini's morals were perfectly correct, was Mrs. Buggins—went to bed at 11:30 o'clock, and snored all night.

However these things may be, this is what happened next morning. When the first of the depositors arrived at 7 a. m., they found one of the windows of the bank smashed to pieces and the shutter hanging loose. A cry went up that there had been a robbery, and one or two men began to climb in. They did not get far before a fearful roar proceeded from the neighborhood of the counter. They looked at one another, and said it would be more regular to wait for the officials. The roars continued. They sent for Mr. Bradshaw. Hardly had he arrived (accompanied by Dick, breathless and in shirt-sleeves) before the backmost rows of the now considerable crowd became agitated with a new sensation. The news spread rapidly. Frantic men ran to and fro; several ladies fainted; the circus proprietor was sent for. A lion had escaped from the menagerie, and was supposed to be at large in the town.

"Send for 'Philippini!" cried the proprietor. They did so. Philippini had started early for a picnic in the country, and would not return till just before the performanc in the evening. The proprietor was in despair.

"Where's the beast gone to?" he cried.

"Well, I'm blowed if he's not in the bank!" exclaimed the proprietor.

It certainly appeared to be the fact that Atlas (that was the lion's name) had taken refuge in the bank and was in full possession of the premises and assets. Under these circumstances there was, Mr. Bradshaw explained, a difficulty in resuming cash payments; but if his checks would be accepted——. The crowd roared almost as loud as Atlas at such an idea. Something must be done. They sent for the mayor; he repudiated liability. They sent for the fire brigade and the life-boat crew; neither would come. They got guns and peppered the furniture. Atlas retired behind the fire-proof safe and roared worse than ever. Meanwhile the precious hours were passing. Mr. Bradshaw's money was also on its way from London. At last Dick took a noble resolution.

"I will go in at any cost," he cried; and, in spite of Fanny Flirtington's tears, he scaled the window and disappeared from view. The crowd waited to hear Atlas scrunching; but he only roared. When Dick was inside, he paused and asked in a low voice, "Is he chained?"

"You," answered Signor Philippini from behind the safe. "Is the Aunt Sally business over?" and he came out with a long pole in his hand. He used the pole to stir poor Atlas up when the roars became deficient in quantity or quality.

"The money ought to be here in three hours," said Dick. "Have you got the back-door key?"

Philippini reassured him. Then Dick took a wild running leap at the window; Philippini stirred up Atlas, who roared lustily. Dick escaped with his life and landed a breathless heap at the mayor's feet. The mayor raised him and said he should write to her majesty and suggested that Dick would be a proper recipient of the Albert Medal, and the vicar (who had no money in the bank) indignantly asked the crowd if they could not trust a family which produced scions like that. Several people cried, "Hear, hear!" and told Mr. Bradshaw that they never really meant to withdraw their deposits. Mr. Bradshaw thanked them and looked at his watch.

At half-past three, Philippini ran up; he was breathless, and his shoes were dusty from walking in the country. At once he affected an entry, amid a scene of great excitement. A moment later, he appeared at the window and cried, in a terror-stricken voice:

"I can't 'old 'im! I can't 'old 'im! He's mad! Look out for yourselves!" and he leaped from the window.

The crowd fled in all directions, and two boys were all but run over by a cart which was being driven rapidly from the railway station to the bank.

"All right," said Dick to the signor; "bring up the wagon." And then, with great difficulty and consummate courage, the signor and Dick brought an iron cage up to the window and drove Atlas in. The operation took more than an hour, because they had to feed Atlas and drink a bottle of champagne themselves before they set about it. So that it was 6 o'clock before Atlas was out and the money was in and the Sandhill and District Bank opened its doors for business.

"We gained just the time we needed," said Mr. Bradshaw. "It was dirt-cheap at fifty pounds!"

And Dick, although he did not get the Albert Medal, was taken into partnership and married Fanny Flirtington. It was the only way of preventing her seeing things she was not meant to see out of the window at 2 a. m., and chattering about them in public.—St. James' Gazette.

Sat On by a Smuggler.

A few miles from Lochnow is the little harbor of Daily Bay. Here smugglers had landed a cargo of their usual wares and these were carried up the hill of South Cairn, waiting till a band of volunteers arrived with a string of packhorses to transport them inland for distribution, says the Boston Herald.

The Custom-house officer in charge of the district received information of their doings, and, hurrying to the spot with the only coast guardsman disengaged, he promptly effected a seizure of the goods. The smugglers skulked off and the one guardsman was sent back to press men and horses in the King's name to carry the precious treasure to Stranraer.

Presently Maggie McConnell approached the great man, wishing him a good morning, to which he affably replied and accepted Maggie's proffered hand. His arm was thrust upward and at the same time he was encircled by the siren's arms, and, with a heavy fall, was thrown helplessly on his back.

Maggie then sat coolly down upon her victim and, having placed her apron over his eyes, she held him firmly down, as if held in a vice.

At last, but only when it suited her pleasure, Maggie released him from her grasp. But when he looked up not one of the articles lay in its place, as he had himself seen them before on the ground.

By and by his companion reappeared, but only to find the head officer tete-a-tete with this Galloway matron, who, bidding them adieu, disappeared without further loss of time, wishing them both a pleasant ride into Stranraer.

Sure Riddance for Rats.

The best way to get rid of rats and mice is not to poison them, but to make them thoroughly tired of the locality and so induce them to leave. They are generally too smart to eat poison, even when it is prepared for their benefit in the most seductive fashion, but they are not so particular about tartar emetic. When a little of this is mixed with any favorite food they eat as greedily as though the physic were not there, but in two or three hours there will be the most discouraged lot of rats about the place that anybody ever saw. The tartar will not kill them; it only makes them deadly sick. Sometimes they will crawl out and walk about like a seasick man, so ill that they do not seem to care what becomes of them. But it disgusts them with the whole vicinity, and as soon as they are able to travel they march off and you see them no more.—Globe-Democrat.

Fast Railroad Time.

Exceedingly fast time has been made on some American railroads within the past few years, in several instances a speed of more than a mile a minute having been attained. But in nearly all these cases the runs have been short, often covering only a few miles. For a trip of nearly two hundred miles, the record made a short time since on the Chicago and Alton road between Chicago and Springfield has rarely been equalled—never, it is said, on a western road, whether for a long or short run. The distance traveled in this case was 186 miles, which was accomplished in 196 minutes, making fourteen stops and eight slow-ups. The train consisted of seven cars, and was drawn by an eight-wheel engine, the weight of which is stated at 93,000 pounds.

London Real Estate.

Several lots in Cornhill, London, in the immediate neighborhood of the Bank of England, were sold several days ago at a price that averaged £50 per foot, or something over £2,000,000 an acre. Several neighboring lots of equal size were offered for sale some weeks ago, and were bought in by the owner at a price considerably higher.

THE Lord loves every one, but it is His nature, not because the people deserve it.

TRULY A DEPRAVED CAT.

He Killed Ducklings and Used Dead Rats to Divert Suspicion.

James Grogan, a Wortendyck, N. J., peddler, who is familiarly known as "Ginger" Grogan on account of the color of his hair and the heat of his temper, owns a large yellow cat that, according to its owner's story, should either be deprived of all its nine lives as a fitting retribution for its stupendous treacher or elevated to the loftiest pinnacle of honor and emolument as the reward of hitherto unheard of feline sagacity.

"Ginger" says that some time ago his house was infested with rats that not only attacked everything gnawable but established such familiar relations with the yellow cat that they often ran over her back with impunity. The peddler tried "rough on rats," which killed half a hundred of the pests, and drove the rest from the house to the barn. This was a doubtful victory, for the banished rats began to prey upon a brood of half-grown ducks that Grogan is raising. They would not touch any more of the "rough on rats," probably because they liked the flavor of the ducks better. Recently the cat took up her quarters in the barn, and remained there day and night. One morning last week Grogan, going to the barn, found the dead body of an immense rat, torn and bloody, with the cat growling over it. She had killed it but had not breakfasted from it. Close to where the rodent had been slaughtered lay the bones and feathers of a duckling. Everything eatable about it had been consumed, and the cat apparently had pounced upon the rat just as he had finished his meal. This was a very praiseworthy thing for the yellow cat to do, but when she did it on eight successive mornings her owner's gratification was qualified by the loss of just that number of young ducks. He thought she ought to kill the rats more expeditiously, and he hid himself in the barn to ascertain why she was so slow in killing them. He says that he saw his cat kill a duckling, devour it, and then drag the bones to a position near a rat hole and wait patiently until the smell tempted a rat to come within reach of her claws. Then she slaughtered it, and sat by its body growling until her master saw her, hoping thus to direct suspicion, that might otherwise be leveled against herself, in the direction of the dead rat.

Learning Their Lesson.

Engine horses which are expected to rush from their stalls at an alarm of fire differ as much in their capability for learning that duty as schoolboys at their tasks. Half a minute is the maximum time for companies in a first-class department to make ready and leave the house. And the ordinary time is fifteen or twenty seconds. At a night alarm the men slide down on poles from the loft, the horses scramble to their feet, the doors in front of them fly open, and out they rush. Each horse goes to his proper place, and the driver, from his seat, let down the harness. Two or three men, standing at the pole, snap the collars together, fasten the reins to the bits, and off they go.

The author of "Road, Track, and Stable" says that teaching a new horse to come out of his stall at the signal, and range himself alongside the pole, is not so difficult as might be supposed.

Imagine a pair of new horses assigned to an engine. The surroundings are more or less terrible to them, but they are very gently and carefully handled, and gradually lose their fear. Their tuition begins at once, and the driver is their teacher, assisted by the other men.

The ordinary signal is given as if for a fire. The stall doors open, and the horses are led out, put in position, and in a few minutes led back. This process is perhaps a dozen times repeated. Great pains are taken that the animals shall not strike against anything, or be by any means frightened.

The unusual spectacle of a harness suspended in air is apt to disturb them at first, but they are led slowly up to it, and induced to smell of it and inspect it on all sides.

After they have been led to their positions a few times, they are allowed to come of their own accord when the signal strikes, though a man stands behind them to touch them up a little, if they do not start promptly at the opening of the doors. Two weeks constitute the average period of instruction, but horses have been known to learn in one lesson. Others, however, are months in arriving at equal proficiency.

A pair of new horses in a Boston engine-house were led out three times in this manner. They were then left to themselves. The gong sounded, the stall doors opened and the pair trotted out, each going to his place beside the pole. They had caught the idea at once.

Selecting a Title.

From first to last Dickens did his work conscientiously, and the selection of titles was a matter of grave anxiety to him, many being rejected before one was chosen. The familiar name of Chuzzlewit, Howard Paul tells us, went through a curious process of evolution. First it was Sweezleden, then Sweezlebuck, then Sweezleway. None of these would do. The Sweezle then became Chuzzle, and there was a new series of Chuzzletoe, Chuzzleboy, Chuzzlewig, and, finally Chuzzlewit. For "Hard Times" nineteen or twenty titles were rejected. Here are some of them: "Heads and Tails," "Two and Two are Four," "Our Hard-Hearted Friend," "Rust and Dust," "A Mere Question of Figures," "Mr. Gradgrind's Facts," "Black and White." "David Copperfield" was especially troublesome. Even after he had fixed upon the hero's name it took him some time to arrange the exact form of the title. During a sojourn in Genoa Dickens was puzzling his brain to find a title for one of his Christmas tales, when the city bells rang out a peal of chimes. He was in a nervous, excited state, and the noise of the bells agitated him. But they gave him the title he was seeking, and he called the book "The Chimes." Another novel for which he found it difficult to decide upon a name was "Bleak House." We might have known it under any of the following titles: "The Solitary House that was Always Shut Up," "The East Wind," "The Ruined Mill that Got Into Chancery and Never Got Out," "The Solitary House Where the Grasses Grew." No doubt Dickens invented some of the names of his characters, but many of the most remarkable were borrowed from signs that met his view in his journeys. I imagined that Chadband was a made name—it fits the character to whom the author applied it so exactly; but it was the name of either a baker or a grocer on the outskirts of the town of Warwick. Jull was the name of a confectioner; Pickwick that of a job-master at Bath. In later life the novelist collected and stored up names for future use, making use of such sources as directories and the small towns in railway guides.

To Clean and Preserve Harness.

But few people think of the economy of a little vigorous rubbing and oiling the harness. With moderate care a set can be made to last just twice as long as it ordinarily does. Yet there is a greater object in view than saving the wear and tear of the leather. It is a humane one. You can't make me believe that a man loves his horse, no matter if he expresses his devotion in the strongest terms, if he is too mean or too lazy to oil up the harness and soften it.

How hard the shoes on your feet get and painful and pinching when they become water-soaked and neglected for the want of some oil to soften them. It is exactly the same with the harness on a horse's back. Did you ever notice that he never wants it on when it is in a stiff and unwieldy condition? A harness should be thoroughly washed at least once a week with pure castile soap and a sponge, and then oiled with neatsfoot oil in profuse quantities. Dubbin is also a good grease for the purpose, but neatsfoot oil is the best.

After the application is made rub the leather dry, so as not to leave any grease spots on the surface, for if any are left the dirt collects and sticks fast. To complete the job the mountings should be rubbed up with some kind of polish. Putz pomade is the best for the purpose. It comes in small boxes, costing about 5 or 10 cents each, and may be obtained from any dealer in turf goods. Harness should always be hung up by the hook in the saddle, the bridle suspended from a hook of its own and the lines tied nicely in the bit. Hang the hames and collar or breast-collar from a higher hook. When hung in this manner harness will never lop out of shape or get to looking awkward.

Always be particular with your reins and scrutinize them when cleaning for the purpose of detecting a flaw in the leather. The most distressing accidents have happened by the lines breaking when driving a frightened or uncontrollable horse, and a little previous attention will avoid the possibility of any such accident.

Riding saddles should be put on a rack not less than three feet above the floor, to prevent the rats from gnawing the padding and the destructive vermin from settling there. Considerable care should also be exercised in keeping the back of the saddle perfectly free from dirt or any lumpy settlement. Nothing is more painful to a horse's back, and skin disease often results. Buggy whips should be kept perpendicularly suspended from the cracker. This is the only way to keep them straight. Make a little slot in one of the beams above your head just large enough to slip the end of the whip in, and you have your whip slot. Keeping the whip hung this way also saves its lasting qualities. It is hardly necessary to say anything about how to keep robes, blankets, and rubbers clean and dry. Everybody knows that a horse's life is in jeopardy with wet covers as a man's is with wet clothes. They should always be thoroughly aired and dried when used and kept in a dry place.—Farm and Home.

Where Tact Was Needed.

A distinguished foreigner visiting our shores, on meeting an American author of some distinction, blandly asked him if he had ever written anything. Here was a stab to administer to a man's vanity! A woman would never have made a blunder of that sort; she would have found out all about the writer's books before she met him, and made some clever reference to them before she had been five minutes in his company. It is hard to imagine a situation from which a woman's tact will not extricate her. An amusing story is told in this connection by a well-known authoress: While in Trouville, I met a young American and his wife. I knew the latter quite well. In fact, she had been a seamstress for me, and the man she married was one of Philadelphia's Hundred and Fifty. She was clever, pretty, well educated, and an improvement in her fortunes enabled her to meet her husband in the regular way. He married her, but was not aware of the social position she had formerly occupied. I met them on the promenade and could hardly disguise my surprise; but her tact came to the rescue and saved us all from an awkward position. Here is what she said to me, even before I had a chance to catch my breath: "I am so glad to see you! We need no introduction. What a delightful time I had at you house in New York the last time you were so good as to entertain me! We would like to stay and talk with you, but have a pressing engagement," and with this my friend's pretty wife grasped her husband's arm and pulled him away. While the whole proceeding may be looked upon as one in which assurance played its part, the wife displayed a tact that to me was charming. She was quite good enough for her husband, and knew it, but was afraid that in an unguarded moment I might say something that would give him an idea of the state affairs before she had the opportunity to enlighten him. That man will have a happy domestic life, for nowhere is tact more indispensable than in the home.

North Side Public Square, AUBURN, INDIANA.

Surprise.

On last Thursday evening, March 3, when about to retire for the night, the sound of footsteps was heard on the front porch of the Lutheran parsonage. The friends did not wait to rap, but opened the door and came in voluntarily each laden with a gift applicable to a minister's family needs. The friends kept coming in until nearly sixty were in the house. Before we could gather our scattered thoughts and recover from the shock, the table was loaded with valuable things, and what could not be laid on the table found place on the floor; There was a good quantity of flour, sugar, apples, potatoes, lard, coffee and many other useful articles essential to proper housekeeping; besides the many gifts which were presented, there was $9 in money equally divided between pastor and wife. Not only did the friends of town give freely and cheerfully, but the people from the country opened their big hearts and gave not sparingly but plentifully. The amount left with the pastor's family was nearly $38, each article being valuable and needful for household use, and hearty thanks are given for the remembrance of them, not only by friends in town but from the country as well. But in another and cheering sense the donation was a pleasant one, not only to the donors but to the receipients also. After the presents were given and we recovered from the scare, the evening was spent in singing and visiting. It was a gathering which shall ever be held in remembrance by all on account of its pleasantness. A spirit of harmony and true friendship ran from heart to heart. One by one the friends began to take leave from the parsonage for their homes leaving behind them a token of love and esteem for pastor and family, until we were left alone again. As we were looking over the numerous articles many pleasant thoughts passed through our minds. The gathering was a modest and kindly acknowledgment of that regard of the church for its minister which does so much to reward past efforts, and to incite fresh labors; as a token of appreciation and commendation. The gifts have been received and will be a remembrance to be cherished now and in other days, of the kindly sympathy and unselfish spirit of our many friends.

Lively Skirmish.

The Butler Record of March 3, contains the following account of a lively skirmish with a would be burglar in that town:

"About two o'clock this morning John Till, who sleeps nights in Diehl's jewelry story, was awakened by a noise at the back window. He got up and saw a man trying to raise the window and fired two shots at the burglar. Chas. Fanning was acting as night watch in place of Enoch Grindle, he being crippled with rheumatism heard the noise and hastily went across and down the alley south of the store. He saw one man disappearing east in the alley and just as Charlie got past the corner of the jewelry store the other burglar poked his head from behind the wood shed and ordered Fanning to throw up his hands. Charlie replied by firing two shots at the burglar. The burglar then fired two shots at Charlie and then Charlie took after him. On the north side of the store several shots were exchanged, one of which broke the large plate glass in Capp's meat market. The burglar then started down Broadway and turned the corner at Campbell, Fetter & Co's. with Charlie after him, and turned in at John Blaker's. By this time both parties had emptied their revolvers. When Charlie was within ten feet of the burglar the latter snapped his pistol twice, and Charlie presented his empty pistol square in the burglar's face and the burglar begged him not to shoot that he would give up. Charlie then marched his prisoner to the calaboose. Eleven shots were fired and no one hurt. The prisoner gives his name as Charles Scott, of Chicago. The other burglar escaped. We have Charlie Fanning highly commended for this fine piece of police work."

REMARKABLE CURES OF AUBURN AND VICINITY.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnose and wonderful cures border on that of the miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him and to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It cost nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided.

One of Auburn's most respected citizens Mr. M. N. Ward of Auburn, on the corner of Second and Jackson street, says: "I came to see Doctor Townsand four weeks ago I could hardly walk to the doctor's room without help. I have had heart disease and weak lungs and catrrah in my head for 20 years and was given up by the best physicans. I had rheumatism so my joints was so stiff I could not walk and my head hurt me so I could not rest or sleep. I was nearly deaf in right ear, but now can hear as well as I ever could. My neighbors all know how I have suffered. I can hear the clock tick in both ears. I thank God I feel well. Doctor Townsend has cured me. I have not been able to work for over one year, doctoring and taking patent medicines. I feel I am able to do two men's work now, have gained in flesh. I advise all to call on Doctor Townsend and be cured. I am willing to see any one and tell how bad I was, and let them see how well I am now.

Another respected lady of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson who has had a complication of diseases stomach, kidney, heart and lung disease and neuralgia pains all over, her limbs swollen so she could not step on them. She now feels nearly well, her pains have left her and her heart is well and she feels better every way.

Mr. Ward says his eye sight was so bad he could hardly see. He now feels that he could dispense with his glasses. The Docter performed over twenty cures on his last visit. He will forfeit $5 00 for any case of cataarh he cannot cure. An eye witness to a lady who was helped to the doctor's room four weeks ago, is now doing her own work.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..........MARCH 9, 1893.

INDIANA ranks fifth in value of horses, fifteenth in mules, fifth in cows, sixth in other cattle, fourteenth in sheep and sixth in hogs.

THE legislature passed the co-employe's liability bill at the last moment, in a mild and modified form. But this is better than nothing.

THE legislature adjourned Monday, and will not likely hold a special session. It has done some good work, some poor work, and left a good deal of both kinds undone. We can judge better of its work, when we see a list of the laws that were fully completed. Till then it would be safe to reserve an opinion.

READ Cleveland's inaugural address, it is not long and is full of plain, manly statements, just such as we might expect from a man of his resolute character. It is not the talk of a political dodger, but of a man with honest convictions, who means exactly what he says, and says exactly what he means. Even those who cannot agree with his opinions must admire the manliness of his utterances in this his first authorative paper in his second term.

The Inauguration.

We can give but a brief sketch of what was the greatest inauguration in the history of our country, and for fuller reports must refer our readers to our inside pages. The day was cold and stormy —not so severely cold as here, but the storm was much worse, for there was a good deal of snow, a thing we did not have here. The House of Representatives dissolved at noon, as usual; the Senate a little later, as it is customary to have the old doorkeeper, Capt. Bassett, turn the hands of the clock back a few minutes. But finally as the delayed hands got to the noon mark again, the new vice president and then Cleveland and Harrison and other dignitaries came in. Then vice president Morton made his parting speech, and Stevenson was sworn in and spoke briefly, and then declared the senate of the 53d congress to be in special session, and its new members were sworn in, and then a recess was taken to witness the inauguration that was to take place on a platform outside and near by. Cleveland spoke off hand in a furious storm of wind and snow, and was then sworn by kissing the bible—one his mother gave him when a lad, and which he used eight years ago also. Then came the long drive to the White House in an open carriage, then to stand on the reviewing platform five hours in the cold storm while the long procession went by, and finally, that evening, he and Mrs. Cleveland went to the inaugural ball for a few minutes, though he felt hardly able after the exposure of the long day. No wonder he was nearly sick next day and felt, as he said, as if every joint of his body creaked when he moved. The senate will go on in extra session for a few weeks to confirm such appointments as are made. And so the new administration that began Saturday noon is fully under way.

Music and Elocution.

The famous Reed sisters in elocution and music, G. A. R. hall next Tuesday. They are well recommended. They give their fine entertainment at Angola, and come from that place to Auburn. They are graduates of Ada, Ohio, one in the school of elocution and one in the conservatory of music. They are said to be people of the highest culture and remarkable powers in their specialties. The press notices of them are flattering. Give the W. R. C., a good house and help a worthy cause. Tickets [illegible] cents, 15 cents for children.

For the World's Fair.

There are many departments to the world's fair and this takes in nearly every profession and department of science or industry known. Mr. Moody, as county clerk, receives all the blanks to be used in filling out for members from this locality. The other day he received a request to appoint a leading farmer for member of the advisory committee for the world's fair agricultural congress. For this he selected Mr. Calvin Grube, who resides southwest of town. There have been many other members of various committees in various departments to appoint, and among these we find Charles Eckhart appointed to the temperance congress; Mrs. Ehlers on Moral and Social Reform. To the Financial Congress are W. H. McIntyre and H. N. Coffinberry; for the department of insurance, J. A. Campbell; Building & Loan, L. J. Gengler; Merchants, Sol. Barney; Literary, W. L. Penfield; Educational, C. M. Merica; Lawyers, E. D. Hartman; Representative Youth, Walter Penfield; Physical Culture, Mabel Hartman; Painting and Sculpture, Mrs. Geo. Grund; Photographer, J. G. Clapp; Postal Service, Archie McIntyre; City Government, Geo. L. Lanning; Sciences, etc., B. B. Harrison; Geology, H. H. Keep; Electricity, F. A. Moody; Physical Science, W. B. Campbell; Philosophy, H. E. Coe; Sunday Rest, H. Darling; member for agricultural organizations, R. M. Lockhart; good roads, John Boots; horticultnre, C. P. Houser; household economics, Mrs. J. B. Casebeer, and many others which our crowded space prevents our giving.

Court.

Court began Monday with a vim. The Judge called off a long list, must have been a hundred or two, of estate cases of various kinds, and found out what had been done with them or what was going to be done. A vast amount of business of importance is thus rapidly and quietly disposed of, of which but little can be said. But it all has to be looked over. The grand jury, without a man missing, but just as the COURIER published them last week, was all on deck ready for work, which they began Monday afternoon. Tuesday they visited the poor farm. They are in charge of E. T. Cochran, while D. D. Metcalf swings the ruler over the court room. Work has started out briskly. Some cases that went to Steuben county have been closed up, among which we notice the case of Al. Randle, son of Milton Randle, of Waterloo, against the Lake Shore road. Young Randle was a brakeman, and was crushed between the bumpers while braking, and is in a dangerous condition now from his injuries. His case was managed by J. F. Shuman and W. L. Penfield, and last week the railroad settled it, giving Randle $1,000 cash. This was considered a victory for him, for though he might have got a bigger verdict, he would likely have been obliged to wait for a decision of the supreme court and perhaps would be dead when it was reached.

The New Firm.

Madden Brothers, is the adopted name of the new firm that takes the place of the late firm of Smith & Madden, marble dealers, in Auburn. The death of Mr. Smith, of course, resulted in a change in the firm, and now the two brothers of Will Madden, Charles and J. W., have bought out the Smith interest, and hence the new firm. H. S. Madden, of Butler, was over here this week helping to invoice and make the transfer of the property, which is now all done, and the new firm fully under way. The old firm has been prosperous from the start, and we hope to see the new one succeed as well, and no doubt it will, for they are all hustlers.

Well Driving.

Now that the spring has come to stay W. S. Purdy, the well driver, is ready for business, and will answer any calls to put down wells wherever needed. He has had large experience, and been successful in all parts of the county. Call on him when you want a good driven well.

Goes to VanWert.

W. H. McDowell went this week to VanWert, Ohio, where he expects to locate in the manufacture of buggies and windmills, a business in which he has had many years of successful experience. He will have for a partner, in the new enterprise, T. A. Carter, a well known and enterprising young business man of this place. Mr. McDowell has been long a member of the Auburn Windmill Co., of this place, a company that has been very successful in pushing the windmill business, having sold their machines in every direction. He has also had a considerable experience in the line of buggies, which will hereafter be pushed along with the windmill business. The people of VanWert may depend on these two young business men, to build up an industry that will not only be a profitable one, but of great value to the town. We have known them many years, and have always found them dealing on the square, and have no doubt these same qualities will carry them forward to success in their business in the new location. VanWert should give them a hearty welcome as our people will give them our best wishes.

Concord School District No. 7.

St. Joe News, Feb. 24, 1893.

The following is a brief history of school district No. 7 from its first organization in 1844 up to the present time, as near as I am able to get it from memory and information from others. I don't presume it is perfectly correct, but think it nearly so. There was a school taught in the bounds of the district, however, before its organization. It was taught in a little log shanty, 12x14, on the farm now owned by R. G. Coburn, and by his present wife, but then Mary Milliman. This was in the winter of 1843 4. In the summer of 1844 a log school house was built on the ground where the present house now stands, which was used for school purposes a few years when a dispute arose in regard to the title of the land on which the house stood; one John Thompson, claiming that he held the title to the land. In consequence of said difficulty the schools were suspended for a few years, and the old house was converted into a shingle factory. Somewhere in the fifties, and I am not able to give the exact date, the difficulty being settled as to title, the district was organized on its present basis and a frame house erected on the site of the old one, which was occupied for school purposes until the year 1873, when the old frame was sold to B. F. Hoyt and moved off and the present brick house built.

The families who resided in the district and who were interested in the school at the time of its organization in 1844 were the following:

Below will be found the names of the different teachers who have taught in the district since its organization. I don't suppose I shall be able to get them in the order in which they severally taught, but will strive to get them as near in order as I can from memory. Several of them taught two terms and a few of them three. The first school taught in the old log house was commenced by George Flint and finished by Mary Milliman; then followed Mrs. Shaw, James Headley, Ellen Hard, Ann Roberts, Ellen Lawrence, B. A. Hadsell, J. M. Milliman, Jenny Nelson, Ann Wanamaker, Cyrus Carr, Elizabeth Milliman, Alice Chilson, Jonathan Shull, Minerva Pond, Samuel Flint, Hattie Landis, Kate Cole, Eva Hadsell, Marilla Snively, Marshal Hadsell, Josie Thomas, Emma Young, Minerva Ackley, William Robinson, Mary Young, Jenny Batt, Laura Shutt, Eva Shutt, C. P. Houser, Edith Husselman, G. W. Woodcox, Flora Hoffman, Walter Chiesman, Mino Andrews, Irvin Hadsell, Flora Houlton, Frank Smith, Josie Smith, Frank Scholes, Flora Scholes, Maurice Headley, Gustin Flint, J. E. Dermott, Audra Woodcox, Joseph Scholes, Nina Gee and Willie J[illegible] All of which are respectfully submitted.

Last Saturday morning two tramps put in appearance at the rear of Ralph Thomas' bakery on South Main street, and demanded something to eat. Ralph told them breakfast was over and he could not give them anything. But they proceeded to argue the case with him, telling him they didn't believe breakfast was over, and finally getting impudent, Ralph drew a stick of wood on them and told them to clear out, which they did, and as they left he heard them threaten to come back at night and get in. But up to date they haven't come back.

J. G. Clapp and wife had a narrow escape Monday night, or rather Tuesday morning, from suffocation by coal gas. Then getting no better, she started for a neighbor, Mr. Harding, and had Mrs. Harding go for her husband, who works at the Kiblinger factory, and he went for Dr. Hines, who came and gave them such treatment as the case required. They were pretty sick that morning, but are all right now. It is supposed the gas escaped from their coal stove.

We have received a recent copy of a college paper published by Shaw University of Raleigh, North Carolina. It is called "The Shawensis," rather an awkward name, but a very appropriate one for the college of which it is the organ and advocate. It is at Shaw University, that our townswoman, Mrs. Mary Ehlers is located, and where she is in charge of the "Missionary Training Department," a place she is so eminently fitted to fill. She has many camplimentary notices in this number, the magazine speaking of her as "Our loving and sympathetic teacher." A new building is to be erected for Mrs Ehlers' department and there was a general meeting of the friends of the school to give her a hearty welcome when she reached there Nov. 18 We are glad to hear of her popularity there, and her prospects for doing much good in a line of work so near her heart.

Ligonier Banner: On review of the different sources of Mr. Cleveland's success in his third contest for the presidency, it is remarkable how evenly his support was divided between the north and the south. Of the 277 electoral votes cast for him, 138 were cast by northern states and 139 by southern states. So, in the next house of representatives there will be 217 democratic members, of whom 108 are from the north and 109 from the south. There is nothing sectional about that. The democratic party represents the whole Union.

Another Mad Dog.

John Flemming, who lives on the Ed Weeks' place east of town killed a mad dog one day last week. It came into the yard, and seemed to be acting very strange, shaking its head and snapping. He made up his mind it was mad, and got his gun and followed it over to Ed. Wise's place, and there shot it. Its mouth was found to be greatly inflamed and the tongue swollen, and it was no doubt a genuine case. Would it not be a good idea to take some security in this matter? How would it do to have the dogs muzzled?

School District Histories.

We publish this week Mr. Coburn's article on Dist. No. 7. in Concord township, in which he gives a list of the teachers who have labored there since the district was organized. We think however, he has omitted one or two. Why could we not have a similar history of other districts over the county. This could be gotten up by old residents like Mr. Coburn or by school officers, trustees, etc., who have records. The county superintendent could help greatly, as he has records of the more recent years. The history of some districts could be put into one county paper and others into another paper and so on dividing them up according to locality or the choice of the writer, but in this way, nearly all would be in print and could be preserved. What do the friends of our public schools say?

Surprised Him.

The friends and neighbors of Wayne Zonker had planned a surprise party for him on his birthday, March 2nd, he being 43 years old. In the morning he was sent to Corunna to bring cough medicine for his wife as she was troubled with a severe cough. When he came home at noon he was astonished to find sixty-five of his neighbors and friends assembled at his residence. After a social time dinner was served, as everyone came with well filled baskets. The dinner was a grand affair, everything so neatly arranged by his estimable wife. He received a valuable upholstered rocking chair. The time was taken up by conversation and excellent music. The surprise is one that will long be remembered by all.

GROVER TAKES HIS SEAT.

Imposing Ceremonies in the Capital City.

'MID SLEET AND SNOW

THE NEW ADMINISTRATION IS USHERED IN.

Democracy's Great Day.

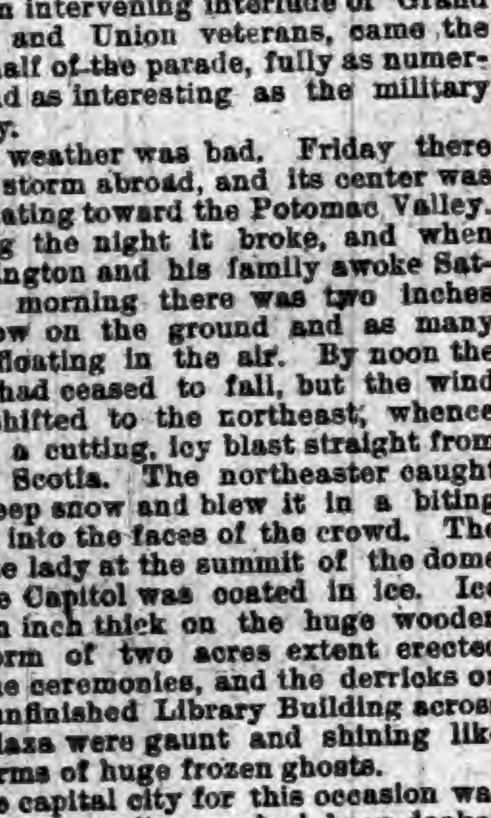
GROVER CLEVELAND has for the second time been inaugurated President of the United States, and the ceremonies attending his re-accession to the office were noted for more than usual pomp and splendor. These inauguration affairs are pretty big things, and this second inauguration of Mr. Cleveland was a little the biggest thing of the sort ever seen in this country, and that means, of course, the biggest affair of the kind ever seen anywhere, for no other country than ours, and no other city than Washington, can boast among its attractions a quadrennial coronation by an outpouring of the masses and an outcropping of intense partisan joy.

Most countries have to be satisfied with coronations at rare intervals or presidencies assumed by proclamation, sans ceremonie, and the United States is the only country in the world that can be depended on for regular inaugurations every four years, conducted with a pomp and eclat befitting party triumphs. While every inauguration has been conducted with appropriate display, naturally great enthusiasm is called out when the victorious party has been out of power during the closing administration. It required months for the people of Washington to prepare for the event, even accustomed as they are to arrange such ceremonies.

For more than half a day the city looked like a vast military camp, the almost interminable marching of regulars and the well-equipped military forces of the States being broken in upon only by the visiting Governors in their civilian costumes, riding past in the order that their States were admitted into the Union, and accompanied by their brilliantly uniformed staffs. Then, with an intervening interlude of Grand Army and Union veterans, came the civic half of the parade, fully as numerous and as interesting as the military display.

The weather was bad. Friday there was a storm abroad, and its center was gravitating toward the Potomac Valley. During the night it broke, and when Washington and his family awoke Saturday morning there was two inches of snow on the ground and as many more floating in the air. By noon the snow had ceased to fall, but the wind had shifted to the northeast, whence came a cutting, icy blast straight from Nova Scotia. The northeaster caught the deep snow and blew it in a biting cloud into the faces of the crowd. The bronze lady at the summit of the dome of the Capitol was coated in ice. Ice lay an inch thick on the huge wooden platform of two acres extent erected for the ceremonies, and the derricks on the unfinished Library Building across the plaza were gaunt and shining like the arms of huge frozen ghosts.

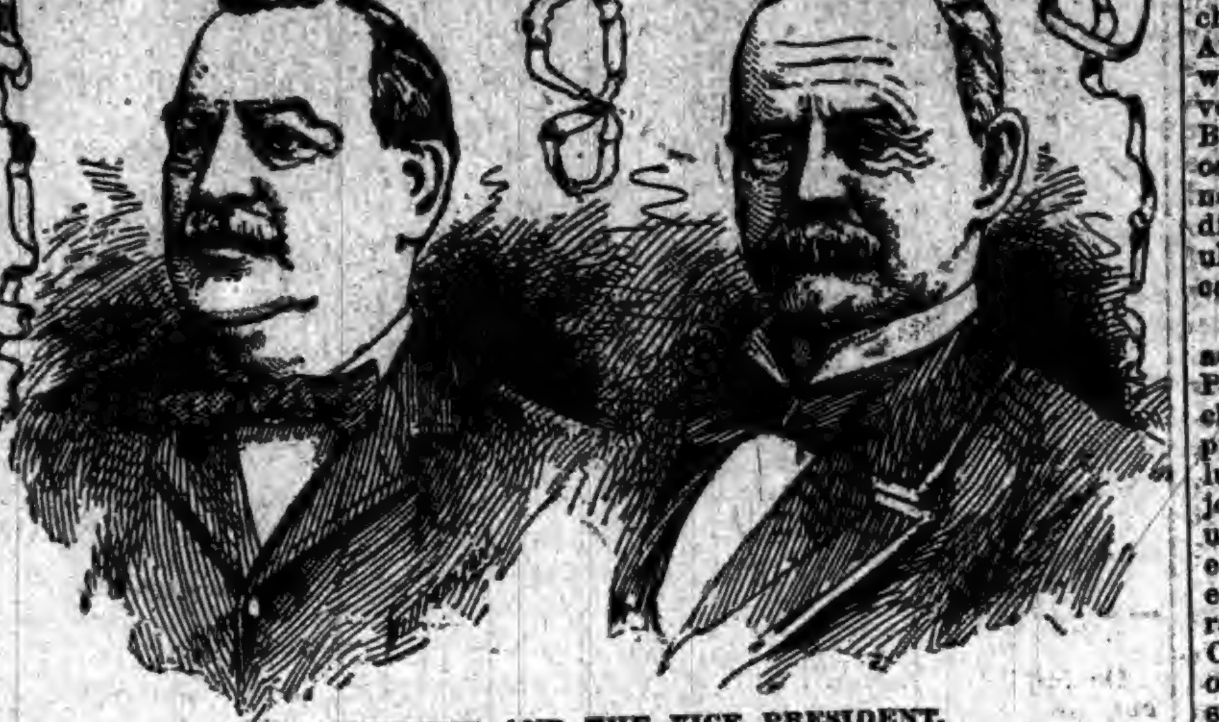
The capital city for this occasion was decked out as it never had been decked before, but the acres of flags and miles of bunting which adorned the public buildings and private shops and residences became a ghastly drooping and unpleasant force when seen through the almost opaque medium of the snow-charged air of inauguration morning.



ON THE WAY TO THE CAPITOL.

These great inaugurals have three principal, popular features. One is the grand parade from the Capitol down the avenue past the Treasury and the White House. This occurs in the afternoon. A second popular feature is the fireworks and illumination in the evening, and the third is the inaugural ball. These are the features in which the great crowds of visitors are interested. The inauguration itself is not much to them, because so few are able to see the new President and Vice President take the oath of office. Only 1,700 people can be crowded into the Senate Chamber, where Vice President Stevenson was sworn in, and after the Diplomatic Corps, the House of Representatives, the Supreme Court, the Army and Navy, the press and families of high officials, and a few favored or influential persons have been accommodated there isn't any room left. As a matter of fact this year not one in a hundred of the people who thought their importance entitled them to admission were able to get in. There was more pulling and hauling and scheming and cajoling than there will be for the offices which Grover will have to give out. But the public could see the new President read his inaugural address. Two or three thousand were able to hear him, and 40,000 or 50,000 were able to look on, and those with sharp vision could see his lips move.

A large proportion of the organizations that were to take part in the parade arrived the day and night beforehand and, in spite of the turbulence of the elements, made a gay night of it. All the morning new marching clubs were arriving, and all the side streets were filled with Democratic societies prepared to shout their throats raw for Cleveland and Stevenson. Meantime the committee and their aids were flying around, while marching bands sounded the first notes of the coming carnival. At the Arlington Hotel President-elect Cleveland was an early riser, and as soon as breakfast was out of the way he and party found Senator Ransom and one of the Republican members of the Senate committee on arrangements waiting with carriages to conduct them to the White House. There the President was waiting for them. About the same time Vice President-elect Stevenson arrived from the Ebbitt House, where he was quartered with his party. He was escorted by the third member of the Senate committee on arrangements.

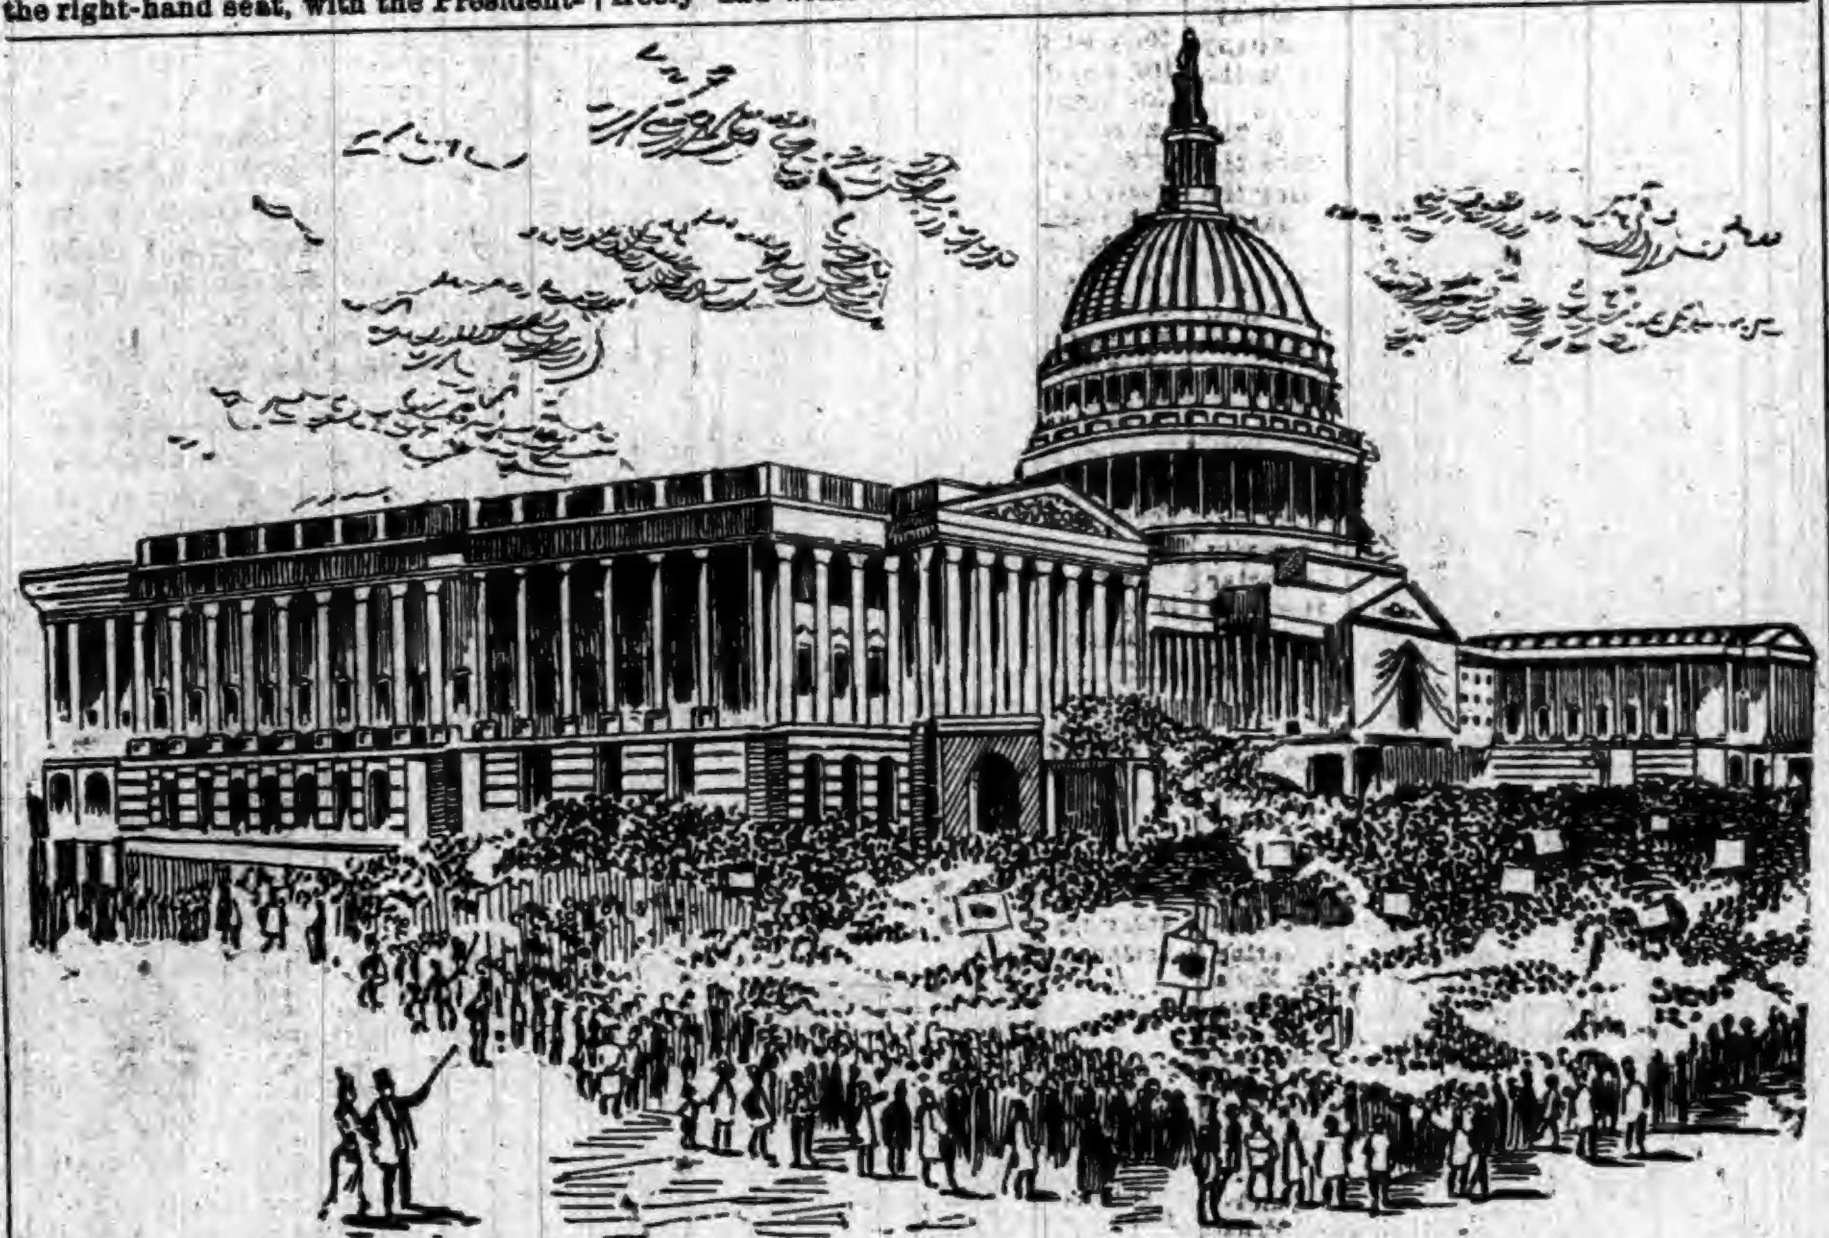


THE PRESIDENT AND THE VICE PRESIDENT.

During the morning the members of the cabinet visited the White House, and for the last time had short conferences with the President in their capacity as cabinet officers before he descended to the blue room to greet the incoming President and party. The house was filled with tributes in the shape of floral pieces, sent from all parts of the country.

Drive to the Capitol.

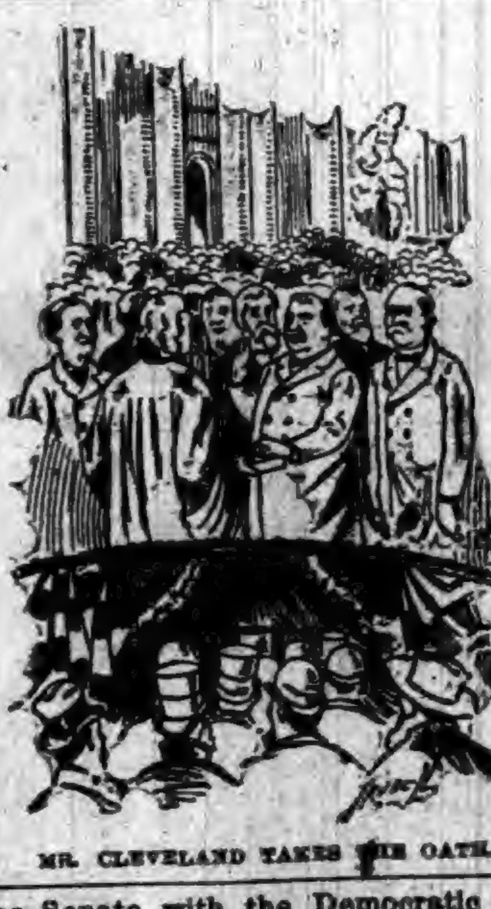
Shortly before 11 o'clock the president and President-elect entered the carriage to drive to the capitol. They were seated in a carriage, drawn by four bay horses. The President occupied the right-hand seat, with the President-elect on his left, while facing them, with their backs to the horses, rode the dignified Senator Ransom, of North Carolina, who was a member of the committee before at Mr. Cleveland's inauguration, with Senator Teller on his left. Behind them was another carriage, in which rode Vice President-elect Stevenson with a third member of the inauguration committee. This coach was drawn by four white horses. The members of the retiring and incoming Cabinets paired off and entered carriages. Headed by the open carriage in which the two Presidents sat with the snow falling about them, giving their great coats a white covering, the party moved out of the White House grounds. After the departure of the Presidential party the ladies of the White House, and also those of Mr. Cleveland's party, entered closed carriages and were driven to the Capitol.



EAST FRONT OF THE CAPITOL ON INAUGURATION DAY.

The march up Pennsylvania avenue took about half an hour, during which the crowds from one end of the line to the other rent the air with cheers upon cheers. When the procession reached the Peace Monument at the rear of the Capitol, the Chief of the Capitol police force, with his men, cleared the way to the Senate approach at the east, while the procession wound its way through the south portion of the snow-covered grounds, and along the east front of the Capitol to the Senate, where the President and President-elect left their carriages, and, each leaning on the arm of a member of the Senate escort committee, disappeared within the Capitol.

Meanwhile in the Senate chamber the scene had been converted into an exampled setting for the historic scene which was to take place. The most distinguished men and women in this country had gathered in the Senate for the first acts in the inauguration. The Senators themselves were seated on the right of the Senate, with the Democratic side left clear for the distinguished people who were to adorn the occasion. Then came the arrival of the diplomatic corps, which was one of the very interesting features, as every diplomat who had a uniform or national costume wore it. Many ladies of the legations occupied the diplomatic galleries also. The next to arrive were the Justices of the Supreme Court and then came the families of the incoming President and Vice President. Then after a moment of waiting "the President of the United States" was announced and entered, leaning on the arm of the Senator who had been attending him all the morning. He sat just in front of the Vice President's desk, and at once the President-elect appeared through the large swinging doors and took his seat beside Mr. Harrison.



MR. CLEVELAND TAKES HIS OATH.

Inaugural Ceremonies.

Mr. Stevenson's great moment had now come, and all eyes were turned to him as he walked up the aisle to the right and took up a position on the step at the right of the desk, of which, in another five minutes, he was to become the lawful incumbent for the ensuing four years. Then Mr. Morton said: "The Chair has the pleasure of announcing that the Vice President of the United States is in the Senate, and, if agreeable to him, I will now administer to him the oath of office." It was, of course, agreeable to Mr. Stevenson. Gentlemen in the position which he then occupied were never known to object, and the presiding officer, with due solemnity, continued: "You do solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic; that you will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that you take this obligation freely and without mental reservation or evasion, and that you will faithfully discharge the duties of the office in which you are about to enter, so help you God."

All the new Senators were sworn in after the Vice President had been sworn in. Senator Martin (Populist), of Kansas, was sworn in without opposition and took his seat. The Senate was then organized and adjourned to witness the inaugural ceremonies.

The inaugural party left the Senate chamber to go to the great inaugural platform in the order of precedence adopted by the Senate many years ago. Not until the people on the floor of the chamber had been ushered out was anyone permitted to leave the galleries. The press representatives were the next to go, and then followed the crowd of spectators. The order in which the party left the Senate Chamber and appeared upon the inaugural platform was as follows:

The Chief Justices and Associate Justices.
The Sergeant-at-arms of the Senate.
The Senate Committee on Arrangements.
The President and the President-elect.
The Vice President and the Secretary of the Senate.
The members of the Senate, two by two.
The members of the Diplomatic Corps.
The heads of departments.
The General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy.
The members of the late House of Representatives, led by the Speaker and the Clerk.
Distinguished guests of the Senate.

Now comes another of the momentous instants. The President-elect is about to be inaugurated.

It was just 1:30 o'clock when the first of the Presidential party emerged from the great door of the Capitol at the rotunda. The appearance of President Harrison and Mr. Cleveland served as a signal for the hundreds of thousands of people packed in the great park before the Capitol to break forth in one prolonged shout. Spread out before the occupants of the stand were acres and acres of heads. The vast assemblage might be likened to a great prairie grain field, but it was a surging wave of human grain. As far as one could see the people were packed like raisins in a box. Away down the streets in every direction the crowd surged, bayonets gleamed and brass buttons danced in the reflected light from the snow. Thousands of soldiers and civic organizations were stamping their benumbed feet, waiting the order to march, and in front of the grand old Capitol they made a spectacle that was worth going hundreds of miles to see, and one that was well calculated to stir the heart of him who was about to assume the duties of the highest office in the gift of the American people. With the reverberating cheers from all of these, added to those coming from the immediate vicinity of the great platform, the demonstration was so prolonged that it was some time before Mr. Cleveland could begin his inaugural address which he then delivered.

When it was finished amid renewed cheers, which seemed to grow more excited each time, Mr. Cleveland turned to the Chief Justice of his own creation, and said: "I am now prepared to take the oath prescribed by law."

The scene that followed awed the multitude into stillness. It was the scene for the right of which many a man in the crowd had fought. It is the crowning scene in the life of any American citizen, and no doubt the signification flashed over many a man and woman there. There was the true illustration of the great American rallying cry: "Of the people, for the people, and by the people."

As the President stood there and looked out on the people he was to govern, he saw representatives of every branch that makes this great nation. People of every degree and condition, and for the peace and prosperity of all these, and many more, he is responsible. There were brilliant uniforms, and up the street was a detachment of artillery, whose cannons thundered forth as he bent to kiss the Bible and for the second time bound himself to be the father of the nation. Then the crowd on the platform and the crowd below broke loose. There was no restraint to Democratic ardor. The cheers almost awoke the dead on Arlington, where many a man sleeps who, only four years ago, stood on that very same platform and listened to Benjamin Harrison take the same oath. The people crowded about the newly made President, and it was with difficulty that he escaped their congratulations and reached the shleter of the capitol.

After the delivery of the inaugural address President Cleveland and ex-President Harrison returned to the chamber, going at once to Mr. Morton's private room. Here an elaborate buffet lunch was ready and was speedily enjoyed. After the lunch and a few minutes spent in chatting with those present Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Harrison emerged from the room and were driven rapidly to the White House. Mr. Cleveland walked from the public door of the White House to the reviewing stand in front of the piazza.

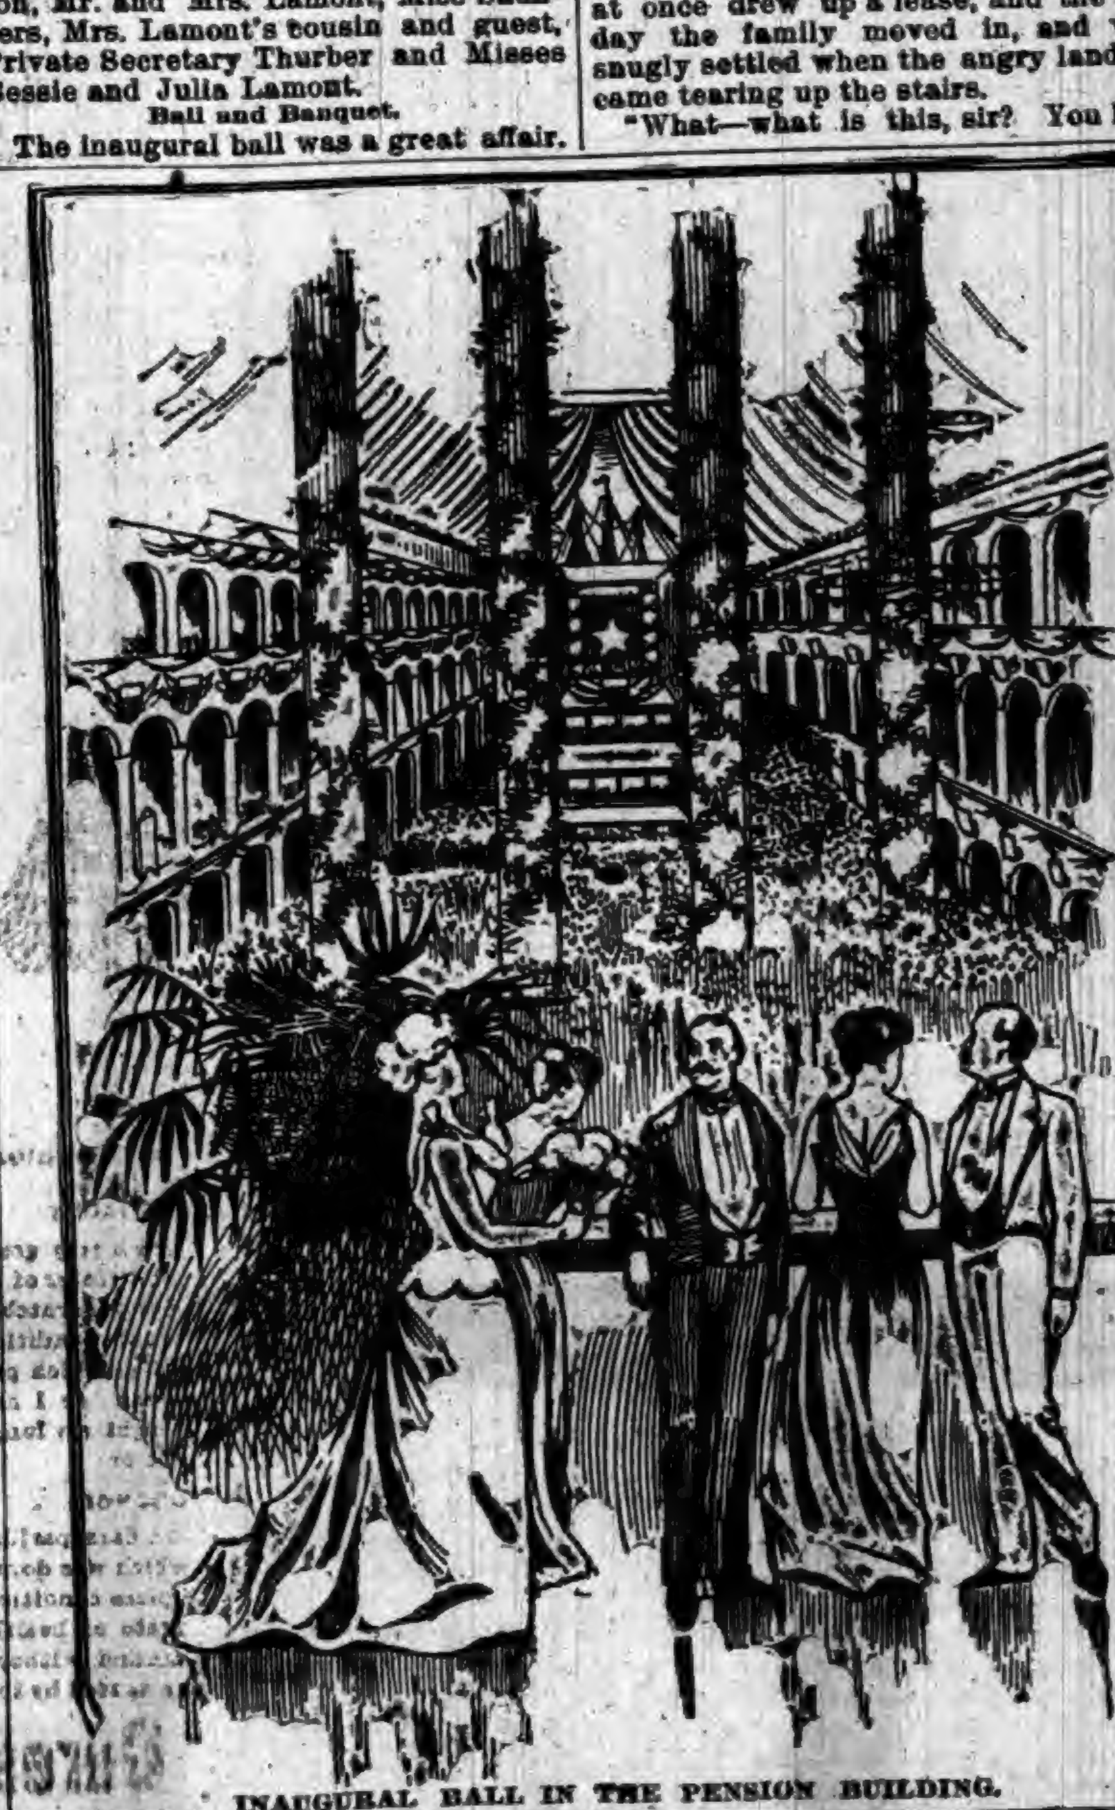
The Great Parade.

Now came the great military demonstration of the day. During the forenoon the military companies at their convenience marched to the plaza beyond the eastern front of the Capitol, and were there assigned to their various positions in line. They were drawn up in front of the vast throng and the civic societies were also assigned places there. Soon after the oath was administered the procession started, returning to the White House by way of Pennsylvania avenue. Mr. Cleveland and those whom he had invited then from a reviewing stand which had been erected in front of the White House honored the military and civic organizations by saluting and being saluted. Fourteen Governors, accompanied by their staffs, participated in the parade and marched at the head of the troops and political clubs from their respective States. The Governors wore the black clothes of the civilian, but the members of their staffs were in full uniform. Including them there were nearly 50,000 men in line.

The parade was five hours passing the stand, and when the sun went down and darkness closed on the city the air was still full of the blare of brass bands. When darkness fell upon the scene President Cleveland, who was almost the last to leave the stand, returned to the White House and sat down to a family dinner. There were present the President and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Perrine, Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson, Mr. and Mrs. Lamont, Miss Saunders, Mrs. Lamont's cousin and guest, Private Secretary Thurber and Misses Bessie and Julia Lamont.

Ball and Banquet.

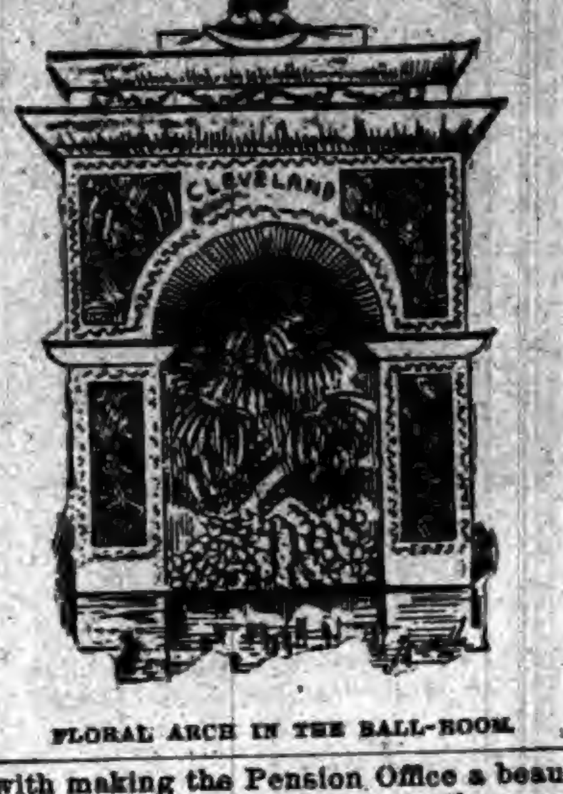
The inaugural ball was a great affair.



INAUGURAL BALL IN THE PENSION BUILDING.

The enormous hall in the Pension Building will accommodate about 15,000 persons, but the number of tickets sold to the ball this year was limited to 12,000 at $5 per ticket. There were one hundred musicians in the main orchestra and sixty in the promenade orchestra. The floor manager had 600 assistants, to each of whom was assigned a section of the hall. They were all in communication with their chief by electric wire. Every one pressed his button when the sets in his part of the hall were filled, and when all had signaled, the floor manager started the music. The President and Vice President, accompanied by the Presidential party, arrived shortly after nine o'clock, and were received in a manner in keeping with the occasion. There was such an enormous crush that dancing was almost as vigorous an exercise as playing foot-ball, but all had a good time.

It was determined that this Cleveland inauguration ball should be remembered for years as the great floral ball. The upholstery has always had most to do with making the Pension Office a beautiful ball-room, but this year the great dependence was placed on the florist, in recognition of Mrs. Cleveland's fondness for flowers. It was a perfect dream of floral art. The orchestras were stationed under two great arches built at the north and south entrance to the building. They were sixty feet high and thirty feet wide at the base. On one in incandescent lights was inscribed "Cleveland" and on the other "Stevenson." Placques of ivy sprayed with roses and other flowers were displayed on a field of pure white cloth. With the placques were displayed artistic arrangements of flowers of every conceivable variety and hue. Emblazoned on escutcheons was the coat of arms of the United States, and of every State in the Union. Surmounting the arches were immense tropical plants, while on the corners of the facade were flags of all nations. The green and white style of decoration prevailed on the balconies, but there are eight immense columns in the center of the hall, each twenty-six feet in circumference and ninety feet in height, upon which the skill of the florist was exerted with a view to making these most imposing displays of the florist's art. The great feature of the ball was the reception held for a short time by the President and Vice President. The Presidential party left early, and after that the stream of departing people continued to increase, while the dancing proceeded with some degree of pleasure. The banquet was one of the greatest held on any occasion in the country. There was no dancing after midnight because of Sunday.



FLORAL ARCH IN THE BALL-ROOM.

The big ball, however, was not the end of the inauguration festivities. On Monday, in the East room, President Cleveland gave a general handshaking, which was attended by several thousand people. There was also the official announcement of the new Cabinet, which occurred in the Senate. These events kept in Washington many who would have otherwise hurried away.

Gen. Harrison Leaves Washington.

Gen. Harrison, escorted by a committee of distinguished admirers, left Washington by special train for his home, in Indianapolis, where a monstrous reception befitting the return of Indiana's honored son had been arranged. A band was present at the disembarking, and escorted the party to the Harrison home, on North Delaware street. At night a popular meeting of a strictly non-partisan character was held at the State House, members of all parties joining in extending a hearty welcome home. Mayor Sullivan presided and Gov. Matthews delivered the welcome address.

How He Managed.

A young man started out to rent a flat, but at every place advertised he was told that he could not have the flat, as children were considered a nuisance.

Tired out he approached the very last on the list.

"How many in the family?" inquired the landlord.

"Two—just two," was the ready answer.

The landlord was much pleased and at once drew up a lease, and the next day the family moved in, and were snugly settled when the angry landlord came tearing up the stairs.

"What—what is this, sir? You have cheated and deceived me. You told me there were only two in the family."

"Yes, and I told you the truth—a family of two children."

"But you didn't say children."

"And you didn't ask me. What constitutes a family, I should like to know, if it isn't the children? You should be more explicit in your questions, my friend."

The landlord raved and fumed, but it was too late, and it made him more angry to know that he had with his own hands set the trap he fell into.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

DELIVERED AT WASHINGTON BY PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

Full Text of the Customary Speech of the Incoming Executive—Says Tariff and Finances Should Receive Attention to Avert Dangers That Menace the Country.

Talked to Thousands.

My fellow-citizens, in obedience to the mandate of my countrymen I am about to dedicate myself to their service under the sanction of a solemn oath. Deeply moved by the expression of confidence and personal attachment which has called me to this service I am sure my gratitude can make no better return than the pledge I now give before God and these witnesses of unreserved and complete devotion to the interests and welfare of those who have honored me. I deem it fitting on this occasion, while indicating the opinions I hold concerning public questions of present importance, to also briefly refer to the existence of certain conditions and tendencies among our people which seem to menace the integrity and usefulness of their government. While every American citizen must contemplate with the utmost pride and enthusiasm the growth and expansion of our country, the sufficiency of our institutions to stand against the rudest shocks of violence, the wonderful thrift and enterprise of our people, and the demonstrated superiority of our free government, it behooves us to constantly watch for every symptom of insidious infirmity that threatens our national vigor. The strong man who, in the confidence of sturdy health, courts the sternest activities of life and rejoices in the hardihood of constant labor, may still have lurking near his vitals the unheeded disease that dooms him to sudden collapse. It cannot be doubted that our stupendous achievements as a people and our country's robust strength have given rise to a heedlessness of those laws governing our national health which we can no more evade than human life can escape the laws of God and nature.

Tackles the Money Question.

Manifestly nothing is more vital to our supremacy as a nation and to the beneficent purposes of our government than a sound and stable currency. Its exposure to degradation should at once arouse to activity the most enlightened statesmanship; and the danger of depreciation in the purchasing power of the wages paid to toil should furnish the strongest incentive to prompt and conservative action. In dealing with our present embarrassing situation, as related to this subject, we will be wise if we temper our confidence and faith in our national strength and resources with the frank concession that even these will not permit us to defy with impunity the inexorable laws of finance and trade. At the same time, in our efforts to adjust differences of opinion, we should be free from intolerance or passion and our judgments should be unmoved by alluring phrases and unvexed by selfish interests. I am confident that such an approach to the subject will result in prudent and effective remedial legislation. In the meantime, so far as the executive branch of the government can intervene, none of the powers with which it is invested will be withheld when their exercise is deemed necessary to maintain our national credit or avert financial disaster.

Concerning the Tariff.

Closely related to the exaggerated confidence in our country's greatness, which tends to a disregard of the rules of national safety, another danger confronts us not less serious. I refer to the prevalence of a popular disposition to expect from operation of the government especial and direct individual advantages. The verdict of our voters, which condemned the injustice of maintaining protection for protection's sake, enjoins upon the people's servants the duty of exposing and destroying the brood of kindred evils which are the unwholesome progeny of paternalism. This is the bane of republican institutions and the constant peril of our government by the people. It degrades to the purposes of wily craft the plan of rule our fathers established and bequeathed to us as an object of our love and veneration. It perverts the patriotic sentiment of our countrymen and tempts them to a pitiful calculation of the sordid gain to be derived from their government's maintenance. It undermines the self-reliance of our people and substitutes in its place dependence upon government favoritism. It stifles the spirit of true Americanism and stupefies every ennobling trait of American citizenship.

The lessons of paternalism ought to be unlearned and the better lesson taught that, while the people should patrioticaly and cheerfully support their government, its functions do not include the support of the people.

The acceptance of this principle leads to a refusal of bounties and subsidies which burden the labor and thrift of a portion of our citizens to aid ill-advised or languishing enterprises in which they have no concern. It leads also to a challenge of wild and reckless pension expenditure, which overleaps the bounds of grateful recognition of patriotic service and prostitutes to vicious uses the people's prompt and generous impulse to aid those disabled in their country's defense.

Stands by Civil Service Reform.

One mode of the misappropriation of public funds is avoided when appointments to office, instead of being the rewards of partisan activity, are awarded to those whose efficiency promises a fair return of work for the compensation paid to them. To secure the fitness and competency of appointees to office, and to remove from political action the demoralizing madness for spoils, civil service reform has found a place in our public policy and laws. The benefits already gained through this instrumentality and the further usefulness it promises entitle it to the hearty support and encouragement of all who desire to see our public service well performed or who hope for the elevation of political sentiment and the purification of political methods.

The existence of immense aggregations of kindred enterprises and combinations of business interests formed for the purpose of limiting production and fixing prices, is inconsistent with the fair field which ought to be open to every independent activity. Legitimate strife in business should not be superseded by an enforced concession to the demands of combinations that have the power to destroy; nor should the people to be served lose the benefit of cheapness, which usually results from wholesome competition. These aggregations and combinations frequently constitute conspiracies against the interests of the people, and in all their phases they are unnatural and opposed to our American sense of fairness. To the extent that they can be reached and restrained by federal power, the general government should relieve our citizens from their interference and exactions.

Forbearance with Indians.

Our relations with the Indians located within our borders impose upon us responsibilities we cannot escape. Humanity and consistency require us to treat them with all forbearance, and in our dealings with them to honestly and considerately regard their rights and interests. Every effort should be made to lead them, through the paths of civilization and education, to self-supporting and independent citizenship. In the meantime, as the nation's wards, they should be promptly defended against the cupidity of designing men, and shielded from every influence or temptation that retards their advancement.

The people of the United States have decreed that on this day the control of their government in its legislative and executive branches shall be given to a political party pledged in the most positive terms to the accomplishment of tariff reform. They have thus determined in favor of a more just and equitable system of Federal taxation. The agents they have chosen to carry out their purposes are bound by their promises not less than by the command of their masters to devote themselves unremittingly to this service.

While there should be no surrender of principle our task must be undertaken wisely and without vindictiveness. Our mission is not punishment, but the rectification of wrongs. If in lifting burdens from the daily life of our people we reduce inordinate and unequal advantages too long enjoyed this is but a necessary incident of our return to right and justice.

Must Redeem Pledges.

Anxiety for the redemption of the pledges which my party has made and solicitude for the complete justification of the trust the people have reposed in us constrain me to remind those with whom I am to co-operate that we can succeed in doing the work which has been especially set before us only by the most sincere, harmonious and disinterested effort. Even if insuperable obstacles and opposition prevent the consummation of our task we shall hardly be excused, and if failure can be traced to our fault or neglect we may be sure the people will hold us to a swift and exacting accountability.

The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States not only impressively defines the great responsibility I assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional commands as the rule by which my official conduct must be guided. I shall to the best of my ability and within my sphere of duty preserve the constitution by loyally protecting every grant of federal power it contains by defending all its restraints when attacked by impatience and restlessness, and by enforcing its limitations and reservations in favor of the States and the people. Fully impressed with the gravity of the duties that confront me, mindful of my weakness, I should be appalled if it were my lot to bear unaided the responsibilities which await me. I am, however, saved from discouragement when I remember that I shall have the support and the counsel and co-operation of wise and patriotic men who will stand at my side in cabinet places or will represent the people in their legislative halls. I find also much comfort in remembering that my countrymen are just and generous, and in the assurance that they will not condemn those who by sincere devotion to their service deserve their forbearance and approval. Above all, I know there is a Supreme Being who rules the affairs of men, and whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people, and I know He will not turn from us now if we humbly seek His powerful aid.

CLOSE OF CONGRESS.

LONGEST DAY'S SESSION OF THE HOUSE.

Fight for World's Fair Grant the Chief Point of Interest—The Appropriations Passed After Being Greatly Reduced—Sunday Opening Dropped.

Has Lapsed Into History.

The lapse of the Fifty-second Congress into history was of itself an interesting affair. Coming as it did with the death of one administration and the birth of another it was especially interesting. The last day's session was the longest of the two years. It began at 11 o'clock on Friday morning and ended twenty-five hours later at noon on Saturday. It was a long pull, but the members stood it well, and when at last the end came those of the House gave vent to a few cheers and then with the spirit of schoolboys rushed out of the chamber to secure advantageous places in the Senate chamber to view the swearing in of the new Vice President. From the time the session began on Friday until it ended the galleries were packed and jammed with as big and appreciative a crowd as ever looked down upon the face of Congress. Everything seemed to interest, and the good-natured Speaker exhausted his stock of threats in an endeavor to stop the applause which rewarded every oratorical effort and the laughter which greeted every bit of repartee. It may be said, parenthetically, that the laughter was not frequent. The members were tired of Congress, as was the country. Even Tom Reed permitted his political enemies to pepper him with verbal bullets without even stirring or glancing in the direction whence they came, and toward the end, when after asking for consent to take up a bill which he had been championing and which was of some public importance some insignificant member interposed an objection, Reed turned on his heel and went back to his seat without so much as seconding his friends, who were trying to induce the objector to withdraw his objection, then failed, and Reed turned and swapped a story with Bourke Cockran, who sat across the aisle, as usual twirling his keys around his thumb.

The discussion over the World's Fair was the chief point of interest during the session. As finally agreed to, the appropriations are as follows:

For Government exhibit, $150,750.

For commission, including $93,000 for Board of Lady Managers, $211,000.

For jurors, awards, etc., $570,880.

The last named appropriation is made, but it is also made a charge against the exposition, and the Government must be reimbursed by the 1st day of November next. Nothing was done or said about the Sunday opening amendment which O'Neil had intended to offer.

The vote of thanks was given to the Speaker just before the hands of the clock touched 12. The Speaker feelingly expressed his gratitude, and as the minute hands in the House and Senate lapped the hour hands the Vice President and Speaker raised their gavels, declared their respective chambers adjourned sine die, brought their gavels down upon their desks and the life of the Fifty-second Congress slipped into the past.

In the Senate Thursday the last amendment to the Indian bill, in relation to the Cherokee lands, was amended and agreed to. As amended it appropriates $8,595,000 to pay the Cherokees for the lands in question, of which $595,000 shall be payable immediately, and the remaining $8,000,000 shall be payable in five equal annual installments, commencing on March 4, 1894, and ending on March 4, 1898—the deferred payments to bear 4 per cent interest. The bill was then passed. The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the deficiency bill, and at 6 p. m. took a recess till 8 p. m. The Senate resumed its session at 8 p. m., and the reading of the deficiency bill was proceeded with, occupying about an hour. All the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to without question except the one to pay to the assignees of John Roach $28,160 for the labor and material furnished in completing the dispatch boat Dolphin. After discussion, the amendment was excluded on a point of order, and the bill was passed. The Senate, at 1:30 a. m., adjourned until Friday at 11 a. m. A fight was precipitated in the House when it reached those items of the sundry civil bill which appropriate about $1,000,000 for various branches of the Columbian Exposition. Originally the House had declined to include these items in the bill, but the Senate added them, and now they were before the House on the question of concurring in the Senate amendment. The conference committee had struggled over the disagreement, but were unable to secure a compromise, and they simply reported back to the House that there was no basis of agreement.

The conferees upon the sundry civil bill reached an agreement as to the World's Fair items, the only remaining points of dispute, at 3:40 a. m., Saturday. The appropriations for that object are fixed as follows: For Government exhibits, $150,750; for the National Commission, including $93,000 for the Board of Lady Managers, $211,000. For jurors, awards, etc., the appropriation of $570,880 is made, but it is also made a charge against the Exposition, and the Government must be reimbursed by Nov. 1, next. The Senate adopted the conference report on the sundry civil bill. The McGarrahan bill was passed—yeas, 37; nays 12. In the House the chief matter of dispute was the Cherokee bill. The conference report was disagreed to by 57 to 98, and a further conference was ordered.

Romance of the Mulcahey Family.

"Dennis Mulcahey, if I smell wan dhrap of whisky on your breath whin you come home to-night, it's sorra a bit of slape you'll git. You'll rist your red head in the gutter, where it belongs. You know me, Dinnis."

This cheerful injunction was delivered on the morning of April 1, 1878, on the front porch of the Mulcahey mansion, in Shantytown, to a very small man by a very large woman, and the brawny arms of the speaker and the ominous glare in her eye left no doubt in Mulcahey's mind of the fulfillment of the threat. "Indade, I do know her," remarked Dennis to himself, as he walked down the avenue, "and it will be a long day before she sees me again." And it was. That afternoon he engaged as laborer on a Western railroad, and before night he was speeding toward the setting sun in company with a half-hundred of his fellow-countrymen. Before leaving he carefully and prudently refrained from sending home any intimation of his intended departure. That night there was no news from Mr. Mulcahey, nor the next day, nor the next, and by the end of a week Mrs. Mulcahey had accepted her widowhood as an assured fact.

Shortly before midnight, five years afterward, a short, auburn-haired individual could have been seen pursuing an unsteady course up the uneven avenue of Shantytown. His general appearance was more indicative of inebriation than of affluence, and time and Western whisky had left their indelible traces on his features. It was the prodigal returned. Quietly he wended his way up the familiar path which leads to the Mulcahey front door, and, leaning against the Grecian pillar which supports the roof of the porch, he soliloquized: "Five years is a long time to be separated from wan's wife and family. I'll not deprive them of me society any longer. I'll go in and inform me lovin' wife that her Dinnis is home wanst more." Rousing himself from his pleasing monologue, he gave the door a light knock.

"Who's there?" came from within.

"It's me—it's your own Dinnis come back to your lovin' arms."

"Whist, me children, your faything's come back. Dinnis Mulcahey, if it's raley you, hiven have mercy on you; that's all!"

As she crossed the floor there was a rustling outside the house, a hasty scrambling down the walk, and the patter of feet rapidly moving in the direction of the gate. She threw open the door and peered out into the darkness.

He was gone.—New York Times.

Scotch Screens.

A novelty is called a "Scotch screen." It is a triptych about the size of an ordinary small screen in fine French walnut. The center panel is covered with genuine Scotch plaid and is furnished forth with the entire paraphernalia of the highlander, arranged in picturesque group. There is the silver thistle for his cap, the wide betasseled pouch, the clasp for the sash, revolvers with queer little springs to keep them from slipping from the belt, and the knife, without which, of course, no offensive and defensive outfit of the typical Scot could be considered complete. On the back of this unusual piece of furniture are interlaced leather straps for pictures of the clan.

Little Known of the Hanging Gardens.

If possible, tradition and history have told us less about the "Hanging Gardens of Babylon" than they have about the other six or seven wonders of the ancient world. Herodotus does not mention them; Pliny only casually alludes to their former existence, and the scriptural account of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar ignores the subject altogether. Popular accounts, however, would have us believe that they were made of huge baskets of earth (the baskets themselves of iron and brass 400 feet square) hung on gigantic arches which were erected for that purpose near the royal palace at Babylon.—Philadelphia Press.

No Great Advantage.

School-children who air their newly acquired knowledge before their younger brothers and sisters at home sometimes meet more than their match.

Such a pupil, a little girl, was talking learnedly to her brother.

"My teacher says that rubber-trees grow wild in Florida," she announced.

"S'pose they do," answered the unimpressible youngster. "Nobody ever thinks about rubbers till it rains, and then it's too wet to go into the woods."—Good News.

The Fountain Head of Strength.

When we recollect that the stomach is the grand laboratory in which food is transformed into the secretions which furnish vigor to the system after entering and enriching the blood; that it is, in short, the fountain head of strength, it is essential to keep this important supplying machine in order, and to restore it to activity when it becomes inactive. This Hostetter's Stomach Bitters does most effectually, seasonably, regulating and re-enforcing digestion, promoting due action of the liver and bowels. Strength and quietude of the nerves depend in great measure upon thorough digestion. There is no nervine tonic more highly esteemed by the medical fraternity than the Bitters. Physicians also strongly commend it for chills and fever, rheumatism, kidney and bladder trouble, sick headache, and want of appetite and sleep. Take a wineglassful three times a day.

Unadulterated.

The Buffalo News has an old joke with a slight variation:

Nimrod—Any good hunting round here?

Farmer—Yes; oceans of it.

Nimrod—What kind of game mostly?

Farmer—Never seed any game. Just plain hunting.

In Agriculture.

Electricity has been successfully applied in agricultural operations at the Polytechnic Institute of Alabama, where a motor has been at work for nearly a year past threshing oats, wheat, rye, and barley, cutting ensilage, grinding corn and ginning the pressing cotton.

Changed Conditions.

In all directions human power has widened vastly within the last half-century; and whether in peace or in war, combinations of states and peoples now possess a potentiality of magnitude previously undreamed of. Moreover, strange and startling, possibly even unnatural, as it may seem, the very civilization of Europe has engendered wants which, however unconsciously, are prone to create within the bosom of peace the circumstances of war. Every country in Europe—even Russia—has become too small for its people; not a few of them are actually inadequate for the sustenance of their inhabitants—the domestic food supply is insufficient, and all of them too small of themselves to supply their people with the scale of comfortable existence, which in many respects, happily, has become a common or well nigh universal expectation. The nations of Europe have entirely ceased to be self-sufficing. They desire and demand foreign trade; new markets for their ever-increasing industry—for the produce of that ever-growing work of manufacture which is the only expansible employment for a population which has become too numerous for its soil. Nay more, beyond foreign trade, not a few of our nations imperiously desire foreign settlements. Beside, the knowledge that "commerce follows the flag," and that the surest basis of a foreign trade is colonies and dependencies—a dependent empire—in some cases there is a desire, born of actual want, for "fresh fields and pastures new," to provide homes for their ever-growing numbers. In truth, even Russia, with her vast forests and thinly peopled steppes, desires a new country for agricultural settlement, for a population which has little taste and equally small opportunity for manufacturing industry.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Little Child and Dr. Brooks.

A touching little incident is related in connection with the recent death of Bishop Brooks. The bishop had for a long time paid some little attention to the 5-year-old daughter of one of his parishioners, and the little one always expressed her delight when, in company with her mother, she met him on the street.

The day of the bishop's death the mother came into the room where the little one was playing, and, holding the bright little face between her hands, said tearfully:

"Bishop Brooks has gone to Heaven."

"Oh, mamma," was the answer, "how happy the angels will be!" —Boston Journal.

Against Burglars.

A patent right man has recently been canvassing interior towns in Pennsylvania to sell territory for "a burglar exterminator." The exterminator is really a window guillotine. When the burglar projects himself across the sill the machinery, set in motion by the act of raising the sash, drops a heavy knife, which cuts him square in two.

Why continue the use of remedies that only relieve, when Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant of application and a sure cure for Catarrh and cold in head, can be had?

I had a severe attack of catarrh and became so deaf I could not hear common conversation. I suffered terribly from roaring in my head. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and in three weeks could hear as well as ever, and now I can say to all who are afflicted with the worst of diseases, catarrh, take Ely's Cream Balm and be cured. It costs more to make Royal Baking Powder than any other, because its ingredients are more highly refined and expensive. But the Royal is correspondingly purer and higher in leavening strength, and of greater money value to the consumer. The difference in cost of Royal over the best of the others does not equal the difference in leavening strength, nor make good the inferior work of the cheaper powders, nor remove the impurities which such powders leave in the food.

Where the best food is required, the Royal Baking Powder only can be used.

A Sermon to Measure.

Doctor X—— is an eloquent preacher, but he belongs to the old-fashioned school, and finds it difficult to adapt himself to the modern fashion of short discourses. It is a standing joke in his family that after writing a sermon he has to cut it up into a series of discourses.

On one occasion he received a note from a well-known clerical brother asking if he would deliver a sermon upon some especial church festival. The doctor replied that he had just completed a sermon upon the Golden Calf which seemed to him appropriate.

The answer of the committee, as sent by telegram by the brother clergyman, who knew Doctor X—— intimately, and was acquainted at once with his peculiarities and with his ability to take a joke, read as follows:

"Golden Calf just what is wanted. A fore-quarter is all that will be needed."

They Found Something to Do.

Two sisters living on a farm felt for a long time their hands tied against making any money. There seemed nothing for them to do. Upon the farm is a large orchard and a fine garden spot. A brief visit to a neighboring city suggested that an immense amount of fruit and vegetables, fresh and canned, were being purchased in the city. They hurried home, and with a little assistance have gone regularly into the fruit and vegetable business. The immense old kitchen, which once furnished family meals, is now a full-fledged canning establishment. They have already enough for Chicago, and a trip to Europe is by no means an improbable thing to them in the future.

Complaining of the folly of fashion is as useless as complaining when the weather is bad.

A Novel Method of Voting.

From Harper's Weekly.

In a number of the towns of the state of New York, when the spring elections are held this year, there will be a very novel scene. Each voter will walk into a little room with walls of sheet-iron, will see before him a neat array of bright knobs, to each of which is attached the name of a candidate for office, the whole number including all the names placed in nomination—will push in the knob for every name he wishes to vote, and will pass out, having taken, according to the experiment in Lockport last year, less than forty seconds. By the machinery thus employed every vote is securely and secretly recorded, and every voter can cast one vote and no more, for one candidate for each office. There is no printing of ballots required, there is no chance of misprinted names, or of miscounting, accidental or intended, or of changing the returns. The election held in Lockport in the spring of 1892 was very favorably reported by those who watched it, and the like elections this year will be closely studied. If the machinery does in all places what it did in Lockport, it would seem that the ingenuity of the Yankee inventor had settled the vexed question of ballot reform, and by a voting-machine had destroyed much of the viciousness of machine-voting. The Australian system, for which so much energy and ink have been expended, can at best only secure secrecy where the voter is bent on having it, but this machine seems to compel secrecy, and to make the various phases of electoral crime and abuse physical impossibilities. The saving of money is said to be very great, but the saving in political demoralization and corruption must be, if the machine works uniformly and continuously well, simply incalculable.

Drs. Townsend Coming.

Among many testimonials we find these: I had spinal curvature that doctors told me was incurable and I am now well. Another said: I was given up by fourteen doctors, who told me I had Bright's disease of the kidneys, but thanks to Drs. Townsend I am a well man. Another: I was bedriden for over ten years with a complication of female diseases. Some of the most eminent specialists, including three professors in medical colleges, and they all told me I could not get well. Four years ago I placed my case in the hands of the Drs. Townsend, and in 5 months and 4 days from the time I commenced treatment I dressed myself and walked across the room, and in another month I felt as well as I ever did in my life and have remained in excellent health ever since. Another says: I had epilepsy for fifteen years and was cured. Another: My whole nervous system was broken down and I was practically an old man at 31. I could not sleep, my hands trembled, I would get dizzy and forgetful and became so bad that I had to give up business. I consulted many doctors, the best I thought, in the country, and finally went to Europe, and spent over $9,000 and three years' time and was no better, but gradually got worse. I returned home to die and closed up all my business affairs. At last a friend, who had been cured, advised me to go to the Drs. Townsend. Without any faith, but to please him, I went, and to my great surprise they told me they could cure me, and they made good their their word, for from the first dose of medicine I commence to improve, and in twelve months I was completely cured. A lady says: My case was pronounced to be tubercular consumption by seven of our best physicians, and under whose treatment I got worse all the time. The Drs. Townsend cured me in just four months. One says: I had catarrh that affected my head so I was almost crazy. It went into my ears, and oh! such a roaring, I was almost wild; it had gone down also upon my lungs and the doctor said it was the bronchitis. Thanks to the Drs Townsend I am entirely well. Another says: I was cured of a bad cancer. A lady of great refinement, who had receiveed serious injuries during a confinement, was cured after other specialists utterly failed. Thousands a cases similar to the above might be cited.

Examination by letter or in person free and sacredly confidential. If unable to see the doctors write full particulars Thousands treated by correspondence. Address, with stamp:

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

The rivalry between Auburn and Waterloo City had become more pronounced and not without very strong reasons. To a certain extent the one had grown and prospered at the expense of the other. The population of Auburn by census of 1870 was 677 while that of its competitor numbered 1194

Auburn struggled not only to exist but to retain even the influence derived from being the county seat while her rival inexorably determined to maintain ascendency, sought to deprive her of this advantage by intriguing to secure the removal to her limits of the public buildings; and now as each for its own sake labored and lavishly donated to build the new railroad, the spirit of Abraham and Lot was shown when on August 11, a petition was filed with the county auditor asking for a division of Union township, thus giving each town its territory and civil independence of the other. The question was much discussed but failed of acomplishment at the time.

Despite recurring and disastrous fires, an apathetic spirit prevailed in Auburn in reference to protective measures, and years had to go by and the scourge had to strike yet more severely before this grave matter received its proper attention. Meanwhile Waterloo City efficiently and with economy provided for the security of its citizens and business interests. A fire company numbering 45 members was formed and officers chosen S. J. Locke was chief engineer, E. R. Blattner foreman and S. E. Long was foreman of the hose company. Ground was leased from the railroad company on a corner of Wayne and Railroad sts., for an engine house and temporary quarters were found in Lent's old warehouse. Early in February the engine arrived and the company was on hand to receive their machine so that thus early this town took precedence of all others in the county in having a regularly organized fire department.

The improvement in bicycles, their utility for recreation and speedy travel and their safety combined with facility in learning to ride them, has caused a marvelous demand by all classes of people and the employment of millions of capital in their manufacture.

The first velocipede brought to DeKalb county was ordered by Samuel E Long, G. Hodge and M. Bugbee of Waterloo City and attracted general attention from its novelty. The first machine in Auburn was owned and used by George Picker and inferior as it was to the present costly, elegant bicycles it possessed the quality of speed and when George who was a fearless and furious rider spun along the street, there were few who did not pause from occupation to watch his progress.

About ten years later Philo Lockwood brought a fine bicycle to Auburn and soon like machines were purchased by F. E. Davenport, Thomas Sprott, G. H Yesbera and Charles Wood. A club was formed and often of an evening these cyclers were seen riding silently and swiftly following a leader and passing in quick succession along Main street. In 1885, George McKay, Frederick Davis, Henry Lesh, Howard McCord, and Marion Willis were of the bicyclers whose wheels were an accustomed sight upon the streets.

The bicycle in Auburn is in general use and has come to stay. W. L. Penfield is credited with the introduction of the first safety bicycle and a high wheel is seldom seen. The smooth cement walks are a delight to the cycler and when improvement on our highways begins in earnest, it will be found that the stimulus to this end, will have owed its origin largely to the demands of the wheelmen.

It was in 1869 that a contest for the spoils created a diversion in the ranks of the republicans of Auburn.

James W. Case the post office incumbent, desired to retain the position to which as at this late day, others hopefully aspired. To settle the contest, a ten days' notice was given of an election to determine the question by a vote of patrons of the Auburn office The ballot resulted in favor of S. L. Yandes who consequently received the appointment and held the office till the summer of 1876. Mr. Yandes proved a popular official and his daughters Ollie and Estella were long remembered as fine singers and speakers at the various town entertainments. On leaving his position, Yandes went to New York as agent for a publishing company for a few months and on his return removed to Steuben county. He had a dread of being upon the water and the aversion seemed to have been instinctive, for being one day upon Pleasant Lake, when a squall came up, the boat capsized and unable to swim, he was drowned.

Joseph Rainier succeeded Yandes as postmaster and had the office for about a year in the little frame building north of the public square, since occupied by William Sheffer for a harness shop, and which was lately moved off to give place to the present brick block. Then he moved into the building on Main street, he has since used as a meat market Miss Frank Ford, now Mrs. F. E Davenport was his assistant. The office is larger, more convenient and does a much greater business as conducted by subsequent incumbents, but it never has had, nor will it have a more faithful, prompt and efficient postmaster than was Mr. Rainier during his years in charge of the mails, nor however capable have been assistants, none have been more deserving of honorable mention for strict attention to office work and courteous treatment of patrons, than his lady-like assistant.

Matters of religious import were largely of a routine character and Rev. William Comstock was serving the congregation of the M. E church. During the year, Rev. Wm Long, brother of Michael Long, coming to sojourn in Auburn, gave a series of discourses which were well received by church going people. Rev. Wm Long bought the property now owned and occupied by Mrs. Emeline George on South Cedar St., and engaged in the furniture trade in which he was a loser.

HONDURAS LETTER.

PORT BUCHARD, HONDURAS, C. A.
Feb. 3, 1893.

EDITOR COURIER:

Your paper of January 19, at hand, and contents noted As I read your weather record icy chills creep up my back and sympathetic tears are shed for the residents of the snow swept deserts of Indiana. In this favored tropic land the little natives entirely nude seem comfortable, as crowds of them play upon the green lawn or sport in the surf. We have frequent showers but mostly bright sunny weather. The climate here is truly perfection. Everybody is well and all hands are busily engaged clearing land and planting the fruit of fruits, the banana. All the plantations we made last year are looking splendid and we look forward to an abundant harvest. For the month of January the mercury ranged from 68 to 86 above. Frost is unknown even on the tops of the highest mountains. Everything produced in the tropics will flourish here. And many things raised in the temperate zone do well in this much favored clime. Honduras has just emerged from another political revolution, followed with the customary rebellion. The war lasted some four months and the rebels were for a time in the ascendancy, but at last the tide turned in favor of the administration, and woe to all who fell into the power of the avenging chief magistrate. Many of them are now suffering in the most horrible dungeon that man has ever invented. The poor wretches there confined, cherish but little hope of ever seeing the light of day again. Omea is the city of prisons, black dungeons more foul than ever was the black hole of Calcutta. One American, Mr. Blubaker, from North Dakota, a man of wealth and reputation, took part with the revolutionists, was captured and is now incarcerated in the foulest, dampest, darkest dungeon in the land with no hope of ever seeing the light of day again. Mr. Blubaker has a wife and several children in his home in Dakota. They have been informed of his terrible fate but refuse to believe it, as they have not yet received the sad intelligence from his pen. He is confined in a vault some 50 feet under the sea. Water continually drops from the ceiling which is of stone. The moral of this sad story should be when in a foreign land to let politics alone. The new governor who has been recently appointed for this state took dinner with us yesterday. He is kindly disposed towards Americans. Oranges are in great plenty now. We buy them for 75 cents per hundred. I am planting my lot in the new American town in oranges, chocolate and bread fruit trees, which when grown will look very beautiful. This will make a delightful place for a winter residence. I will close by sending my love to all my kind friends in the icy north.

Yours Truly,
JOSEPH A. SHADE.

Deserving Praise.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. Robbins & McCords druggists. 1

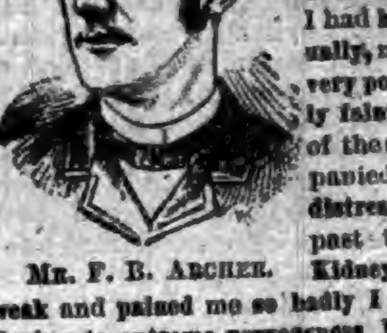
WHAT OTHERS SAY.

"THAT TERRIBLE DISTRESS."

LIVER TROUBLE, BILIOUSNESS, NERVOUS PROSTRATION, AND KIDNEY DISEASE.

Treated by Eight Physicians Without Benefit.

CURED BY LIVURA.



MR. F. B. ARCHER.

LIVURA M'F'G. Co.,
DEAR SIRS:—"For about 8 years I have been afflicted with Liver trouble, causing me to become very Bilious. I had headache continually, my appetite was very poor, and a deathly faintness at the pit of the stomach accompanied by a terrible distress. During the past two years my Kidneys became very weak and pained me so badly I could not rest. Owing to extreme nervousness I was unable to attend to my business, and in January I came down with Nervous Prostration. Eight different Physicians have had me under their care, but I grew worse instead of better.

Learning of PITCHER'S LIVURA I began taking it and my improvement was noticeable from the first. I have taken 3 bottles and am ENTIRELY CURED, able to attend to my work, and have not felt so well for 6 years. I give all the credit to PITCHER'S LIVURA.

Respectfully, F. B. ARCHER,

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

You will remember the condition I was in five years ago, when I was afflicted with a combination of diseases, and thought there was NO HELP FOR ME. I tried all kinds of medicines, and scores of eminent physicians. My nerves were prostrated, producing dizziness, heart trouble and all the ills that make life miserable. I commenced to take DR. MILES' NERVINE and in three months I WAS PERFECTLY CURED. In my travels each year, when I see the thousands of physical wrecks, suffering from nervous prostration, taking prescriptions from local physicians who have no knowledge of their case, and whose death is certain, I feel like going to them and saying, "GET DR. MILES' NERVINE AND BE CURED." In my profession, where there are so many sufferers from overwork, mental prostration and nervous exhaustion, brought on by the character of the business engaged in, I would recommend "MILES' NERVINE" as a sure cure for all suffering from these causes.

Cholerine in Pennsylvania.

Swickley, Penn.: We had an epidemic of cholerine, as our physicians called it, in this place lately and I made a great hit with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I sold four dozen bottles of it in one week and have since sold nearly a gross. This Remedy did the work and was a big advertiser for me. Several persons who had been troubled with diarrhoea for two or three weeks were cured by a few doses of this medicine.

Rheumatism Quickly Cured.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days. I am all right to-day: and would insist on every one who is afflicted with that terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. A Cold Weather Change.

In summer time he shut the door
And brought the anger to your brow.
He changes, and you chide the more;
He always leaves it open now.

Mothers' Recommendation.

We are acquainted with many mothers in Centerville who would not be without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house for a good many times its cost, and are recommending it every day. From personal experience we can say that it has broken up bad colds for our children.—Centerville, South Dakota, Citizen. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

You See.

An Exchange attributes this statement to a professor of chemistry who was explaining why an experiment had failed: "As you see, gentlemen, at present you see nothing. Why you see nothing you will see directly.

The Hoosiers Want the Best.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Evidence of It

"Do you know Mr. Drydust?" said Maud.

"Yes," replied Mamie. "He's very learned, isn't he?

"What makes you think so?

"He can talk so long on such uninteresting things."

Don't Grunt.

About losing sleep last night on account of that hacking cough, when Cubeb Cough Cure will relieve it in one minute. It is not a cure for consumption but affords relief, and will prevent it. Thousands of testimonials could be furnished, but you are only asked to give it a trial to be convinced, nothing will take the place of it; druggists unite in saying it gives better satisfaction than all others. F. E. Davenport.

An Unanswerable Argument.

Father—But you have no means and no prospects. If I give my daughter to you what is to become of her?

Suitor—Well, sir, you are a wealthy man, and you are surely not going to see your daughter starve.

Rheumatism Quickly Cured.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days. I am all right to-day: and would insist on every one who is afflicted with that terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Educational interest experienced a remarkable revival throughout all the schools, town and county and teachers and those wishing to teach, were animated by a professional spirit, that carried the great work forward on a tidal wave of progress.

Butler people had come to the front in the erection of a fine, three story brick building upon a commanding location with ample grounds situated in the northeast part of the town. This building contained excellent blackboards of unusual size and the Grammar and High school assembly rooms were capacious and seated with modern school desks. To the advantages of the school the enterprising trustees. Messrs. Fay, Olmstead and Campbell had procured the valuable services of Rev. James G. Bowersox as principal. Mr. Bowersox was a man of singularly attractive qualities and now under his management the Butler school began to attract popular attention. Mr. Dills had organized a good school at Waterloo City although hampered by lack of proper accommodations, and Examiner McIntosh was in charge of the Auburn schools at the old academy and closed the long term with credit to all concerned.

In proof of the enthusiasm extant at that time, reference needs only to be made to a voluntary county teachers' institute held at Corunna for the week commencing March 15th.

There was a question at the outset whether the village could lodge so many teachers but it was speedily answered as with one accord when the hospitable people threw open their doors to welcome visitors and found good accommodation for more than one hundred teachers.

The church was tendered to their use, the ministers, doctors, and other leading men attended and took part in the debates and exercises and a spirit was aroused whose effect cannot be estimated and from these our Institute gatherings of this county had been notably large. Among the leading teachers at this institute were Cyrus and Michael Seiler, Calvin P. Houser, John A. Campbell, Charles Bowersox, Adam Conrad, A. L. Reincehl, George Pugsley, Charles Hanes and D. W. Weitz.

The normal fall term at Auburn conducted by the examiner was attended by eighty intended teachers and the school in all that pertains to the name was a model of its kind. Classes were large and numbers gave inspiration. The examiner was assisted by Chauncey Clark, himself a student in higher branches.

Never had the old academy been better patronized, never had its shaky, bulky wooden desks and seats been more fully occupied. The class in reading was in two sections, Clark taught the one in Putnam's elocution and the examiner the other in Kidd's excellent work, using the third story room which was provided with a raised platform at each end, upon which as called upon members of the class, stood and read to their fellows.

Wilson's work on history had been discarded for Scott's Harper's history and the class needed no urging to prepare lessons.

The term closed and the annual institute convened on Nov. 8th in the same building. One hundred teachers were in attendance, the guests of townpeople. The instructors were men of distinguished ability and high standing including the State Superintendant Barnabas Hobbs, a stately, kindly old gentleman loved by all who were favored by acquaintance with him. Professor Burnard an eminent educator, Thomas Charles a well informed instructor, James I. Hopkins, son of State Superintendent Hopkins, lively, able, versatile and speedily popular and James A. Barns of Ligonier, who had been engaged to take charge of the Waterloo schools in place of Mr Dills who had retired from ill health.

Methods of education were illustrated by theory and practice and Messrs. Hobbs and Barnard delivered deeply interesting lectures during evenings in the old M. E. church.

Messrs. W. H. Dills, Guy Plumb and S W. Sprott having succeeded to the office of school trustees, an insurance was effected with the Home Insurance company of New York, of which Mr. Plumb was agent, on the school property to the amount of $3,500 and the policy kept in force proved a judicious and loss saving investment.

This board contracted with a stranger named Charles M. Hertig to teach as principal in the Auburn schools for a term of sixteen or more weeks at a salary of $65 per month. They likewise engaged Miss Mary A. Young, Miss Phebe A. Babcock and Miss Hattie Steele as teachers in the other departments. The number enrolled in the four schools was as follows: High school, 53; Grammar, 50; Intermediate, 88, and Primary, 65, giving a total of 256.

The school terminated at the end of ten weeks during which the irregularity of attendance combined with the lack of government, cast a shadow upon the hitherto favorable record of the Auburn schools.

It is but just to say that the demoralization did not extend to other than the High school department and the lady teachers proved capable and successful.

WEEKLY NEWS BUDGET.

MINE EXPLOSION IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Nine Men Are Dead and Many Injured—No Money to Pay for Civil Service Examinations—Train Wreckers Run Down by Bloodhounds—Blew Open a Safe.

MANY VICTIMS

Of a Mine Explosion in the Indian Territory.

An explosion occurred at coal mine No. 1, of the Choctaw Coal Company, at Ardmore, I. T. Nine men were killed and many wounded. Ardmore is in the Chickasaw Nation, a few miles north of the Texas line, and is on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe Road. A similar accident occurred there about a year ago, in which a number of miners lost their lives.

The killed are: John E. Scanlon, Warren Love, John McFadden, Earnest Matthews, Jule Trivare, James P. Burns, Peter Strill, Paul Lulitch, John White. The injured were John Raltich, Ed. Price, Herman Rhody, Nathan Covalt, Jasper Patten, Andrew Colman, Peter Cody.

All the injured are more or less burned. The company's surgeons, who have been kept busy caring for them, state that they do not anticipate any more deaths, though the condition of several of the victims is by no means free from danger.

Scanlon and Love had evidently made every effort to escape, having crawled some distance. The former having buried his face in a pool of water. The scene of the explosion is three miles from shaft No. 11 where occurred the Krebs disaster. This explosion, like the other, was the result of a windy shot, after-damp causing the loss of life. There were some twenty-five or thirty men at work in the mine at the time, all of whom escaped injury. Had the accident occurred at any other hour of the twenty-four, the loss of life would have been terrible, as 400 men are employed there during the day. The damage to the mining property was very slight.

No Money to Pay for Civil Service Examinations.

The Civil Service Commission has taken the necessary action to cancel all examinations schedules to be held between March 21, 1893, and June 30, 1893, in the States of Missouri, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, New York, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, New Jersey, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, and Wyoming, also the examinations scheduled for Pittsburgh, Pa.; Garden City, Kas.; Grand Junction, Colo.; and Salt Lake City, Utah. In explanation of this action Commissioner Roosevelt said that the cancelation of these dates was made necessary by the failure of Congress at its last session to appropriate sufficient money to pay the traveling expenses of the examiners.

They Surrendered.

San Antonio (Texas) special: Gen. Frank Wheaton, commander of this military department, has received a dispatch from Fort Ringgold stating that six more members of the revolution army of Catarino Garza have come into the garrison voluntarily and surrendered. The names of the prisoners are: Jesus Sandoval Chico, Lecundino, Ramirez, Juan Maldonado, Procuplo Sandoval, Blas Ybanez, and Juan Guerra. All of the prisoners were formerly prominent ranchmen in Starr and Duval counties, and were induced to enter the revolutionary movement in expectation that it would result in the overthrow of the Diaz administration.

Was It an Earthquake?

The residents of Jamaica, L. I., were startled by a rumbling sound. This was followed by a shaking of houses, crockery, and windows. Many believe the phenomena to have been caused by an earthquake. The Jamaica town hall, a large brick and stone building, was shaken and the windows rattled about seven seconds. People at Sculley's hotel received a severe shock. At the Long Island railroad depot windows and doors rattled for some seconds. The people at Hollis, a village near Jamaica, experienced the sensation.

Train Wreckers Run Down by Bloodhounds.

Mail train No. 2, on the New Orleans and Northwestern Railroad, had a narrow escape from train wreckers near Tusconola, Miss., the other night. A pile of cross-ties on the track was discovered by the engineer barely in time to avoid a disaster. Officer Horne took up the trail of the wreckers with his bloodhounds, and, after an exciting chase, succeeded in arresting Cora Bell and Reuben Cooley. Evidence against them is very strong.

Blew Open a Safe.

The jewelry store of S. E. Hearst, less than half a block from the public square in Springfield, Ill., was entered by burglars the other night. The bottom of the safe was blown out and $1,200 worth of jewelry taken. Entrance was effected in the evening during the absence of the employes. No clue.

Fire at Ogden, Utah.

The six-story Utah Loan and Trust Company's building at Ogden, Utah, the finest in the city, was gutted by fire. The total loss will be $150,000; partially insured.

National Republican League Meeting.

The National Committee of the Republican National League issued a call for the regular annual meeting to be held at Louisville, May 10th next.

SERVED TIME

And It Is Now Learned That He Was Innocent.

Jackson (Miss.) special: It is now two and a half years since William F. Hemingway was sentenced to the State Penitentiary for a term of five years for failure to pay over to his successor as State Treasurer the sum of $315,612.19, which the books of his office showed was due the State. Hemingway could give no explanation why the money was missing. An attempt to explain the mystery attending the disappearance of this large sum of money has been made by C. F. Hemingway, brother of the late treasurer, and for several years a bookkeeper in the Treasurer's office. Mr. Hemingway declares that the money was stolen by a man who cleaned the safe-timer on March 1, 1886, and a confederate, who attached the timer to the safe on March 13, 1886, and who then acquired and made a record of the treasurer's safe combination then in use, and never afterward changed during Colonel Hemingway's incumbency of the office.

FIRE AT BOSTON.

Its Finest Buildings Destroyed—Many Lives Lost.

One of the most destructive fires in the history of Boston, next in magnitude to the famous one on Thanksgiving Day 1889, and in the same district, broke out shortly after 4 o'clock the other day, and before it was placed under control, three hours later, had burned over more than a square, had reduced to ashes several of the magnificent new buildings recently completed on the territory burned over three and a half years ago, and had consumed property valued by a conservative estimate at $4,500,000, had been attended by scenes of panic and distress never before equalled in the memory of citizens now living, and had destroyed several, perhaps many human lives, and mangled or maimed at least thirty persons, some of whom will die of their injuries.

The principal buildings burned were as follows:

Ames building, seven stories, corner Essex and Lincoln streets, where the fire started; Lincoln building, five stories, on opposite corner, on site of Old Crystal Palace, occupied by the Singer Manufacturing Company, and a large number of other concerns; Ludlow building, six stories, 135 Essex street; Brown Durrell building, seven stories, corner of Essex and Kingston streets, burned from roof to fourth floor, the fire proof walls of this building stemmed the tide of flames to the north; five-story brick building, corner of Columbia and Essex streets, occupied by Wall & Barnes, paper-box manufacturers and others; United States Hotel, slightly damaged; three-story building between the Ames building and United States Hotel, occupied as a dwelling in the upper story and by small traders below.

The conflagration as viewed from a distance was grand. A dense pall of black smoke covered that section of the city and as darkness came on this was lighted up by the flames, while occasionally tongues of fire and burning embers shot up volcano-like into the ebony mass.

Near the scene was awful. While the Ames building was burning there were echoed explosions like fireworks mingled with the hoarse shouts of firemen, the clanging and puffing of engines, the crashing of walls, the rumbling from hurrying teams and the surging of the vast crowd which soon gathered and rushed to and fro in everybody's way. The police service was admirable. The streets were promptly roped off in the right sections. The wires were as usual in the way and in many places lay in tangled masses.

A conservative estimate of the total loss is $4,500,000. The insurance will amount to about $4,000,000.

The saddest feature of the fire is the loss of life, which cannot be definitely known at the time, but the number of dead is thought to be at least twenty-five, and may be much greater.

Good News for the Editors.

The report that Mr. Cleveland had told Congressmen that he did not intend to appoint newspaper men to office, for the reason, among others, that he might be accused of subsidizing the press, does not hold good. Congressmen Dockery, De Armond, Cobb, Burns, and Morgan of Missouri, called on the President recently for the express purpose of ascertaining the truth about the "no journalists need apply" rule. Mr. Dockery asked Mr. Cleveland point blank whether it was true or not that he had discriminated against newspapermen, and the answer came just as straight as the question, that there was no such intention.

Affairs of the Indians in Montana.

Billings (Mont.) special: The civil authorities of Yellow Stone County have taken a hand in the Crow trouble. Coroner Chapple held an inquest over the body of Little Face, the Indian who was killed last week. All the Indians who made warlike demonstrations in the vicinity of the tragedy have withdrawn to a point about ten miles from Wilsey's station and appear to be uncertain what to do. They have looted the deserted ranches and carried off everything of use to them. Abscher, the ranchman who killed Little Face, is in jail here.

A Sunken Bark.

New York special: Quite a fleet of vessels have arrived at quarantine from all points of the compass. None of the vessels brought news from the over due Naronic. The steamship Lampasas from Galveston, went off Hatteras, March 7, passed a sunken bark, heading south, with her main mast gone, foretop sail set and hanging torn. She had evidently gone ashore in a heavy gale and struck on the shoals and then backed off in deep water and sunk. Her topsail yards were out of the water and she is very dangerous to navigation in her present condition.

Damage Done by Floods.

Grand Rapids (Mich.) special: The river is the highest seen here in thirty years. It now stands fourteen feet nine inches above the low water mark. Many big factories have been obliged to shut down owing to the high water. The city and railway bridges stand the pressure well. Reports are coming in of enormous damage to the agricultural districts above and below here. Many township bridges are gone, log booms broken, etc. The sewers in this city are badly clogged, but no great destruction to property has yet been reported.

Attitude of the United States.

Madrid special: The Queen regent presided at a cabinet council in which the attitude of the United States towards San Domingo was considered. Senor Vega Amijo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, said that the United States had behaved with the utmost courtesy and friendliness and that United States Minister Snowden had assured him that the Washington Government had no intention of interfering on the island. Orders were sent out, therefore, that the Spanish war ship, recently sent to San Domingo, withdraw at once.

Thousands Idle.

Brazil (Ind.) special: Nearly every coal mine in the county has been closed down, the result of the switchmen's strike at Chicago, and the situation is growing critical. Thousands of miners are thrown out of employment with no visible prospects of work in the near future. All the switch engines, which have been busily engaged for the last few months about the mines, have been called in, throwing numerous trainmen out of employment. The situation at Chicago is being closely watched by miners and railroad employes in this city.

Won't Accept Aid.

Governor McKinley will not accept any financial assistance from his sympathizing friends. He is determined to bear his own misfortune and battle single-handed against adversity the same as though he were a private citizen. A Cincinnati paper announced that a movement had been started in the Seventeen Regiment, O. N. G., Col. A. F. Hamilton, commanding, to raise a fund of $1 from each man. The Governor read of the plan and immediately ordered Col. Hamilton to stop it.

The Judgment Affirmed.

Washington special: The judgment of the Court of Claims in dismissing the petition of the State of Indiana to recover from the United States $412,184 alleged to be due the State out of moneys received by the United States from the sale of public lands within the State, has been affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in an opinion by Justice Gray. The claim arose under the act granting the States 5 per cent. of the proceeds of sales of public lands within their borders.

Prairie Fire.

A Grenada, Col., telegram says: A sweeping and disastrous prairie fire starting near Lamar has done a great amount of damage in Prowers County. The flames swept the country south of here, destroying thousands of dollars worth of stored hay and grain. A number of farmers have suffered extensive losses. There are reports of live stock having been burned. From Holyoke also comes news of a destructive fire. A great many farmers lost all their feed and buildings.

Financial Crash.

Koshland Bros. of Portland, Ore., the largest wool-dealers in the North-west, made an assignment to the Bank of British Columbia, their only creditor. The firm has been considered one of the most substantial in the city, and the failure created great surprise. It is believed the assets will cover the bank's claims. The sale of the stock at a loss and losses in the fire at Boston a year ago are assigned as the cause of the failure.

Southern Governors.

Little Rock special: No movement in the line of progress and development in the South has received such hearty co-operation and indorsement as Governor Fishback's call for a convention of Southern Governors to meet in Richmond, Va., April 12 next. Every Executive of the South has responded. Mayor J. Taylor Ellison, of Richmond, wrote to Governor Fishback offering the hospitalities of that city to its prospective guests.

Will Give Him No Rest.

In order to avoid working, William Bell, a colored convict in the Ohio Penitentiary serving three years for larceny, stepped in a kettle of boiling acid used for annealing bolts. His right foot was burned so badly that pieces of the flesh dropped off.

Shot a Negro.

At St. Louis, Mo., while Officer William Cronin was endeavoring to disperse a disorderly crowd of roustabouts on the levee he was set upon and badly beaten. He drew his revolver and shot and fatally wounded James Gorman, colored.

Ready for Somewhere.

San Francisco special: The revenue cutter Rush is lying in the stream with banked fires ready to sail. It is reported she has been ordered to abandon the proposed trip to San Diego and prepare for a two months voyage immediately.

A Mine Explosion.

A Connellsville, Pa., special says that a mine explosion occurred at the Whissett Coal Works, near that place. Ten men were badly injured and burned. Five have been taken out and brought to Connellsville.

A Rotten Building in Berlin.

A building on the Bergen strasse, Berlin, collapsed while twenty men were on the inside. Fourteen were killed. Seven bodies have been recovered.

A Woman for Mayor.

Mrs. Anna Potter, the wife of a prominent insurance man, has announced herself as a candidate for Mayor of Kansas City, Kan.

Satolli to Reside at Washington.

It is reported at Rome that the Pope has decided finally that Archbishop Satolli shall reside at Washington.

Instantly Killed.

A MAZE OF SWITCHES.

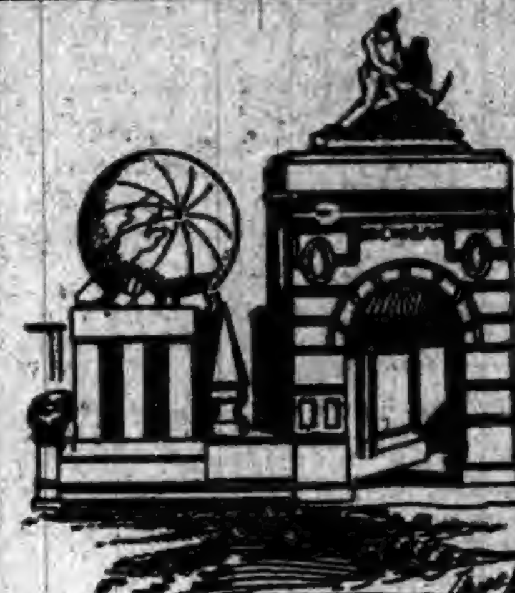
HANDLING THE CROWDS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Complex System of Interlocking Switches for Thirty-five Tracks Makes It Possible to Load 43,000 Passengers at Once in the Grounds.

Controlled by One Man.

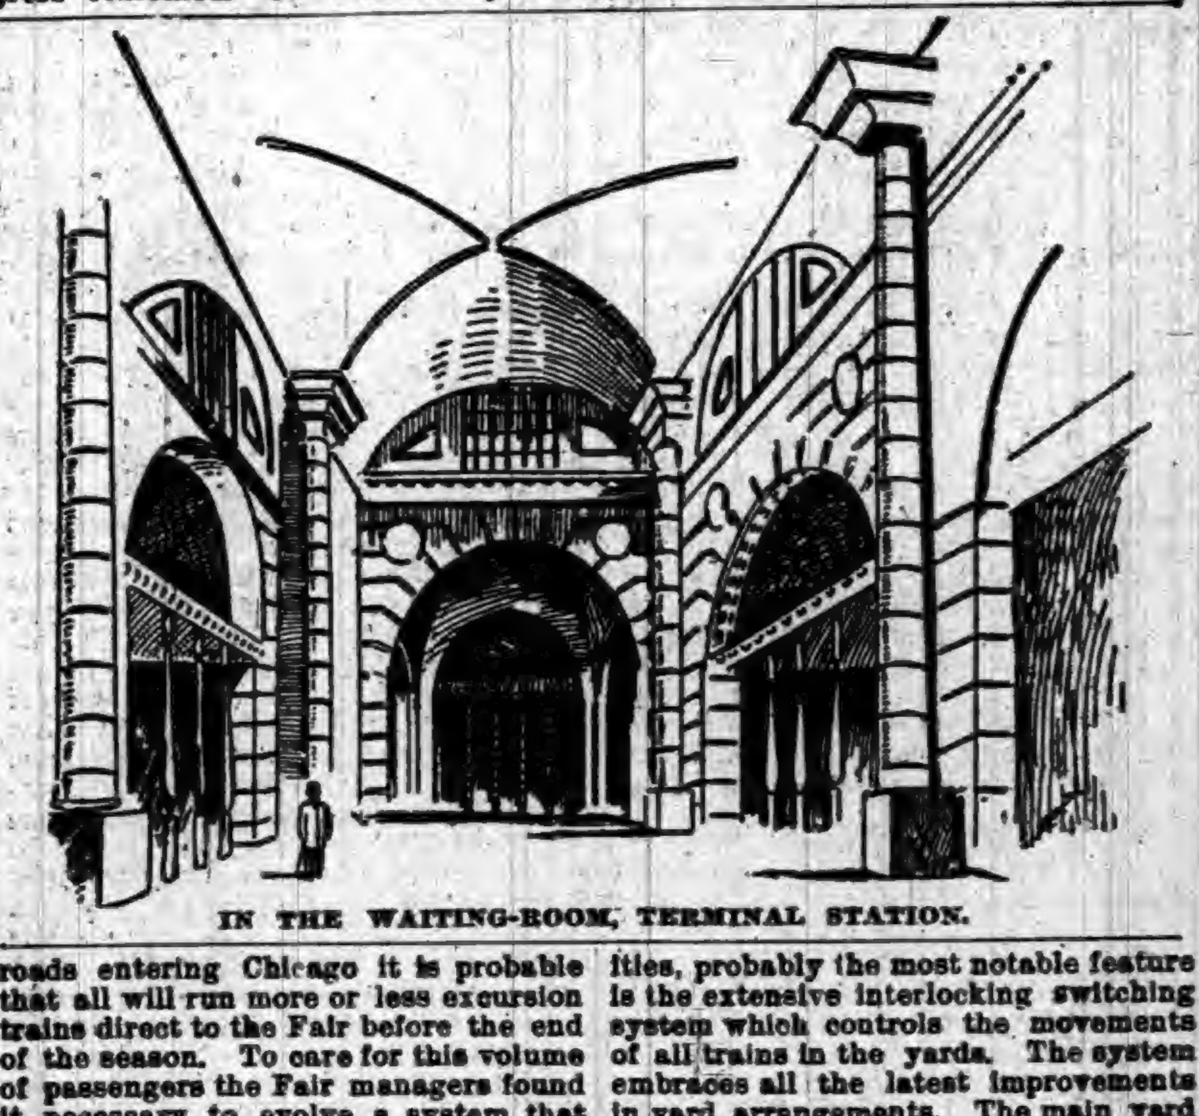
Chicago correspondence:

Arrangements for handling the daily crowds of visitors to the World's Fair after May 1 are completed. There is considerable work yet to be done on the new railroad depot, and many other details require finishing touches. Everything will be in readiness, however, before the Exposition opens. Six months later it will doubtless be the proud boast of the Fair managers that the largest continuous crowds that have ever been massed together in this country were taken in and out of Jackson Park at the minimum of inconvenience and the maximum of safety and comfort.



PART OF MICHIGAN'S MINERAL EXHIBIT.

Visitors will enter the grounds through either of the four arteries of communication—the gates, the water piers, the alley elevated and the grand central railroad terminal. The latter has cost the Exposition officials more thought than all the other modes of ingress combined. Of the twenty-two roads entering Chicago it is probable that all will run more or less excursion trains direct to the Fair before the end of the season. To care for this volume of passengers the Fair managers found it necessary to evolve a system that would bring the trains directly to the center of the grounds without transshipment. Early in the preliminary plans the loop system was abandoned and a stub terminal, with interlocking switching facilities, was agreed upon. This terminal is near the main foot entrances to the grounds, and the handsome terminal depot is being built in the central court, facing Administration Building.

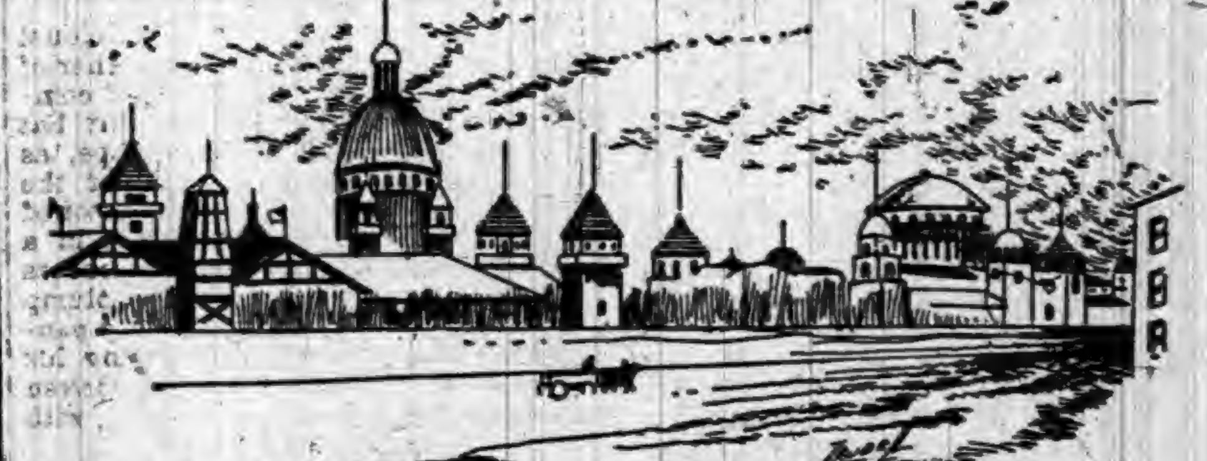


IN THE WAITING-ROOM, TERMINAL STATION.

The staff work is already being placed in position, such of it as is ready, while large molds in a low, squatty, dusty building just back of the great framework are filled with sections of classic columns, grinning gargoyles, pediments with allegorical groups in bas-relief and other ornamental work in process of conversion into pseudo-marble. When this big square building is completed and throbbing with the breathing of scores of steam locomotives next summer this same staff will give it a reassuring air of solidity and tend to inspire the suspicious visitor with a sense of security. The inquisitive country cousin, however, may dispel the allusion by tapping the sham masonry with his umbrella. The resulting hollow sound will set him to wondering why such apparently light construction holds up against the wind.

ESQUIMAU SNOW HOUSE.

There are nine systems of two standing tracks and one switch track each. There are also four systems of two tracks each without the switch track. This makes thirty-five tracks in all. The switch tracks are placed in the center of each system, and enable a locomotive to "run around" its train and hitch onto the rear. Each different road entering the grounds will have one of the systems set aside for its special use. The capacity of loading passengers, during rush hours, at the terminal is not less than 43,000 inside of a very few minutes. Thirty-five distinct trains of thirteen cars each, holding sixty passengers each, with locomotive attached and ready to start, will stand side by side. This is a capacity of 27,300. No sooner are these trains out of the way than others will be backed in. The storage-yard has a capacity of twenty trains of equal length to those mentioned. Adding the loads of the twenty trains to the other thirty-five gives a total of almost 43,000 passengers that can be loaded aboard the cars and sent home within a very short period. The tracks in the storage-yard are of the same length as those at the terminal—about 850 feet—so that any train arriving at the terminal can also find space in the storage-yard if necessary.



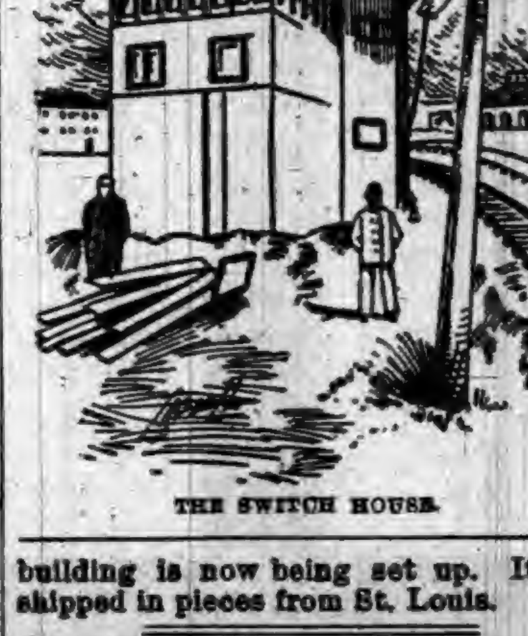
GLIMPSE OF TOWERS IN THE NORTH END OF THE GROUNDS.

Between each system of tracks there will be continuous fences, so that passengers must pass along into the train shed before going through the turnstiles. All the tracks will be floored on a level with the rails. The platforms will be protected by long umbrella awnings. The system of unloading passengers and taking them into the grounds is based on the supposition that all the tracks and platforms are really outside the grounds. The visitor is not supposed to be inside the park until he passes through the turnstile and emerges from the trainshed into one or another side of the grand central court, or passes into the depot building and enters the grounds in that way.

In connection with the terminal facilities, probably the most notable feature is the extensive interlocking switching system which controls the movements of all trains in the yards. The system embraces all the latest improvements in yard arrangements. The main yard is controlled by 160 levers from a central switch tower. One man controls the yard, gives all the signals, throws the switches, and directs train movements. In the main house 120 of the levers control the switches, the remaining forty operating the semaphore signals used. The whole apparatus of the latest improved interlocking variety, which prevents absolutely any accidents from open switches or collision. In the tower the power used is steam, but in the yard system the switches are opened and closed and the signals operated by hydraulic pressure. The steam furnishes the power which is transmitted by the water column. From each switch and signal there runs to the tower an electric wire which automatically registers every movement made and informs the switchman whether or not the apparatus is working properly.

Given Positions of Honor.

Michigan and Missouri have been given positions of honor on the American side of mines building. They will stand for the mineral interests of America, while just across the way Germany and England will represent the old world. Both Michigan and Missouri will build handsome pavilions to offset the elaborate decorations of the German and English sections. The Michigan plans show a pavilion 49 by 62 feet of sandstone and marble. The pavilion is of the Florentine style of architecture. The entire mineral display of Michigan will be put in this pavilion. One of the features of the building will be a huge globe of copper. This globe, twelve feet in diameter, will have an outline map of the world etched on it. The Michigan mineral pavilion will cost about $15,000. Missouri's house in mines building is now being set up. It was shipped in pieces from St. Louis.



THE SWITCH HOUSE.

A New Plush.

Commencement has been made in England within a comparatively recent period upon the manufacture of of what is regarded as an important new fabric, that is, an inexpensive weft pile plush, with either single pile or pile on both sides. A reversible pile plush has in times past been made in the factories of Germany, with hand-looms, at the rate of six yards to the loom per week, but by means of the newly contrived apparatus, which has been devised by a Bradford manufacturer, and can be fixed to ordinary dress and coat looms, it is said to operate at seven times the speed of the German hand-loom, and to make goods of equal quality at a less price. The new goods have a weft pile, and consequently a very much cheaper yarn can be used.—New York Sun.

THE first pair of silk stockings made in England were finished in 1564.

RECORD OF CONGRESS.

WORK OF THE FIFTY-SECOND NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

Silver, Tariff, Anti-Options, World's Fair and Economical Schemes Figure as the Leading Questions—No Great Retrenchment Noticeable in the Appropriations.

Didn't Reduce Expenses.

The silver and tariff questions, the anti-option bill and the reduction of appropriations were the leading topics of consideration by the LIId Congress, and secondary only in importance to these matters were measures relating to the World's Fair, equipment of railroads with automatic car-couplers, national quarantine and immigration, Behring Sea and Hawaiian annexation. Nothing of an affirmative nature, except to prevent two items in the McKinley act taking effect, was actually accomplished so far as respects silver, the tariff or anti-options, the action taken on each of these questions in one branch of Congress being negatived by the action or non-action of the other branch.

The result of the agitation of the necessity for a retrenchment of expenditures is not apparent in any considerable change in the aggregate appropriations carried by the national supply bills, for they amount to about as much as in the LIst Congress, laws on the statute books preventing some large reductions which otherwise possibly would have been made, while the decreases which it was possible to effect were offset by increased appropriations for pensions and rivers and harbors. The condition of the public Treasury, however, though it did not result in the LIId Congress getting below the billion-dollar limit, undoubtedly influenced legislation to a considerable extent, and prevented the authorization of many proposed new expenditures for improvement of the public service, for public buildings, payment of claims, and for other purposes. A notable instance of the operation of this influence is seen in the fact that not a single public building bill passed the House, and it was only by putting a number of them on the sundry civil appropriation bill that any appropriations whatever for public buildings were secured.

Struggle Over Silver.

The silver question was kept steadily before the attention of Congress by the alternate advocates of free coinage and of the repeal of the Sherman law. The coinage committee of the House in the first session reported a free-silver bill, which after an exciting debate was saved from defeat by the casting vote of the Speaker, but was afterward filibustered to death, the friends of the bill failing to secure the signatures of a majority of the Democrats to petition for a cloture rule in its behalf. The Senate then passed a free-coinage bill, but when the free-silver men renewed their fight in the House they were outnumbered by fourteen votes, and, of course, failed. The anti-silver men met a similar fate in their efforts to secure a repeal of the present law, the Senate refusing by a decisive vote to consider it, and the House killing the Andrew-Cate bill by declining to vote so as to give its friends the parliamentary right to move cloture on it, without which it concededly could never be forced to a vote in the closing hours of the Congress.

Tactics Regarding Tariff.

On the tariff, according to a Washington correspondent, the dominant party in the House adopted a policy of attacking the McKinley act in detail largely for political reasons and partly for the reason that in view of the political complexion of the Senate it was practically out of the question to pass a general tariff-revision bill through the Senate, while special measures might stand some show of passage. The result was the enactment into law of two bills continuing block tin on the free list and fine linen at 35 per cent ad valorem. Under the McKinley act large duties were to take effect on those items in the near future.

Other separate bills were passed through the House, only to be pigeonholed in the Senate, as follows: Free wool and reduction of duties on woolen manufactures, free cotton-bagging machinery; free binding twine; free silver-lead ores, where the value, not the weight of the silver exceeds that of the lead in any importation; free tin-plate, terne-plate, taggers' tin, and the limitation to $100 of the amount of personal baggage returning tourists may bring into the United States.

The anti-option bill passed both houses, but was killed by the refusal of the House to suspend the rules and agree by a two-thirds vote to the amendment put on the bill by the Senate, the opponents of the measure maneuvering so as to prevent Mr. Hatch making effective his majority in favor of the measure and forcing him at the last moment to try suspension of the rules. The pure-food bill, the running mate of the anti-option bill, passed the Senate, but was never able to get consideration in the House.

World's Fair Legislation.

World's Fair legislation comprised the grant of $2,500,000 in souvenir half-dollars in aid of the Fair, the closing of its gates on Sunday, the appropriation of various amounts for different Fair purposes and the passage of sundry acts of a special nature and minor importance.

An automatic car-coupler bill shorn of its drastic features was enacted into law, as was also a national quarantine bill increasing the powers of the marine-hospital service to meet the threatened dangers from cholera, and an immigration law imposing additional restrictions on immigration, but not suspending it entirely.

The Senate averted the bill over the Behring sea seal fisheries by ratifying a treaty of arbitration. It also ratified extradition treaties with Russia and other countries, but still has before it a treaty of annexation of the Hawaiian islands. The opening of the Cherokee outlet was provided for in the Indian bill under a clause appropriating $8,295,000 for its purchase from Indians, $295,000 to be paid in cash and $8,000,000 in five equal annual installments.

Put on the Statute Books.

Approximately 425 House and 235 Senate bills and joint resolutions became laws, making 660 acts put on the statute books as the result of the work of Congress. A majority of these measures were of interest only to individuals or localities, being for the relief of citizens, for the bridging of streams, for the District of Columbia, for rights of way, etc. An unusual proportion of the claims bills were for the relief of Southern men.

The House passed in round numbers 625 bills, of which 200 failed of passage in the Senate, and in the neighborhood of 625 bills passed by the Senate failed in the House, including a long list of public-building bills, many private pension bills and other measures involving increased expenditures.

Vetoed by the President.

Three bills were vetoed by the President, viz., to refer the McGarrahan claim to the Court of Claims (a second McGarrahan bill failing of action in the House), to amend the Court of Appeals act and in relation to Marshals in the United States Courts in Alabama. This last bill became a law by passage over the veto, Senator Hoar stating that it had been vetoed through a misunderstanding of its provisions. The President subjected three bills to a "pocket" veto and two other bills failed of engrossment in time for presentation to him. All were of comparatively small importance.

The Pension and Census offices, the whisky trust, Panama Canal and Pacific Mail company, the Watson-Cobb charges, the Pinkerton system and Homestead troubles, the Maverick and Spring Garden bank failures, the Ellis Island immigration station were investigated by Congressional committees, but nothing came of the reports submitted.

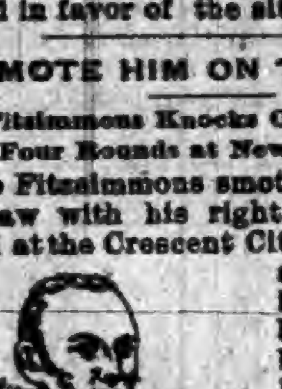
Election Contests Settled.

The Senate passed on two election contests in favor of the sitting members, Dubois (Idaho) and Call (Florida), the contestants being Claggett and Davidson, respectively.

The House unseated Stewart, the Republican sitting member from a Pennsylvania district, and gave the place to Craig. In the Noyes-Rockwell contest from New York it refused to follow the recommendation of the elections committee that Rockwell, the Democratic sitting member, be unseated, and by a majority vote confirmed Rockwell's title. In the cases of McDuffie vs. Turpin from Alabama, Reynolds vs. Schonk and Green vs. Beull from Pennsylvania, and Miller vs. Elliott from South Carolina the elections committee reported in favor of the sitting members.

SMOTE HIM ON THE JAW.

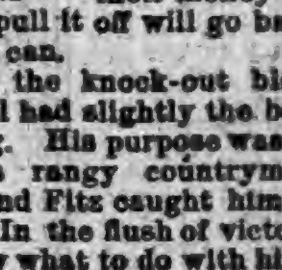
Bob Fitzsimmons Knocks Out Jim Hall in Four Rounds at New Orleans.



BOB FITZSIMMONS.

Bob Fitzsimmons smote Jim Hall on the jaw with his right in the fourth round at the Crescent City club's arena, and that settled it. It may have been a chance blow, but chance blows are in the game. The Australian is for the time being the greatest man south of the Ohio and, according to a New Orleans dispatch, the crowd that journeyed from the North to bet their money on Hall and see him pull it off will go back the best way they can.

Up to the time the knock-out blow was delivered Hall had slightly the better of the sparring. His purpose was to cross-counter his rangy countryman and put him out and Fitz caught him at his own game. In the flush of victory Bob does not know what to do with himself. He is $37,500 richer for his fifteen minutes' exercise to-night, and Hall gets the loser's end, $2,500, and acknowledges that Fitzsimmons can hit a harder punch than any other fighter alive.



JIM HALL.

The referee awarded the contest to Fitzsimmons, who, waving the United States flag over his head, walked over to his opponent's corner and shook his hand, and as he was leaving the ring received a tremendous ovation. The fight was the easiest Fitzsimmons has had in America, and the blow which knocked Hall out was universally said to be the hardest that any one of the old ring habitues ever had witnessed. When the knock-out blow was delivered the crowd rose to its feet and a tremendous shout went up. Hall, however, lay unconscious on the carpet, a look of agony on his face, and the crowd feared he had suffered serious injury. Hall's second, with a club official and Dr. Betts, ran quickly to the prostrate pugilist, and applying restoratives gradually brought him back to consciousness. Fitzsimmons also ran to the center of the ring, and, pulling off his gloves, helped to resuscitate his conquered foe. When Hall had been brought to he was carried limp to his chair, where he remained until able to go to his dressing-room. Fitzsimmons was frenzied with delight over his comparatively easy victory.

After Hall had been brought back to consciousness, Fitzsimmons skipped nimbly to his room, and, without putting on his clothes, drew on a heavy overcoat and jumped into a carriage with his wife and drove to his quarters. Mrs. Fitzsimmons, unobserved by the throng, had witnessed the fight through the crevices of a room up-stairs. A great crowd congregated in front of the winner on Canal street, giving him a rousing welcome as he drove up. After he had gone up-stairs the cheering continued, and Fitzsimmons came out on the balcony and made a modest speech on the victory.

How to Clean Brass.

Brass, to be kept in proper order, should be cleaned at least once a week, while it is the custom in households with well-trained domestics to have brass and irons, fenders and other fireplace furniture given a light rubbing every day. In cleaning brass it must first be relieved of all canker and other spots to which the metal is subject from contact with acids, exposure to water or other causes. An application of alcohol, spirits of terpentine, benzine or kerosene will generally remove all ordinary spots on brass, unless very old spots, the metal in some cases seeming so perfectly to absorb foreign substances that the removing of them amounts almost to an impossibility. Spots removed, there is no more certain cleansing and polishing application for brass than rotten stone and oil. Rotten stone usually comes in lumps. Before using for polishing brass it must be reduced to powder, and in this state is quickly disolved to a smooth consistency when mixed with olive oil. A thin paste of the preparation should be rubbed lightly on the metal, and when perfectly dry it should be rubbed off vigorously with a flannel cloth, the finishing polish being given with the powder dry, and subsequent rubbing with a clean flannel cloth or chamois skin.

Boon to Jack.

The British steamer Bawnmore, which recently visited an American port, has a novelty aboard in the shape of a stockless anchor. In fact, she has two of them, and they are hauled up "chock-a-block" to the hawseholes in a way to make a sailor feel like kicking himself for all the risks he has run in the way of catting and fishing anchors in years gone by. The new anchor has no stock and no flukes. It consists of a heavy semi-circular mass of metal fastened directly to the chain and furnished with two attachments very similar to the old-time flukes, but twisted like the flanges of a screw propeller. The anchor can be let go and grounded inside of ten seconds and hoisted in less than half a minute. It will take hold of the hardest bottom, and the anchors, starboard and port, will keep a ship in position in the worst weather.

CHAPTER I.

THE OFFICE OF THE CLARION OF LIBERTY.

If the Canada line had been a streak of bright color on the ground, as it is on the maps, the new March snow would have covered it wide and deep. A man and a woman in a sleigh, drawn by a horse whose bells jingled furiously with his rapid gait, were looking for some sign that they had crossed the border. They came to a post upholding a board which was blank on the side of their approach, as though there was nothing in that direction worth an inscription; but, when they had passed it and looked back, they saw on its other surface the big word, "Vermont," underneath which was the smaller line, "Liberty Three Miles South." At sight of that the travelers lifted their faces a little above their ample furs, showing that the eager eyes belonged to young persons.

"Now we're in Yankeeland," the man exclaimed, in a congratulatory voice.

"But not yet to Yankee Liberty," the woman responded, with a look forward and then back, as though safety lay in front and danger behind.

"G'long!" and a touch of the whip made the horse shake the bells more violently with a plunge into a still faster pace.

The young woman imbedded her nose again in the fur, and only her bright eyes were visible between the mink of collar and cap as she kept a lookout for the village of Liberty. As their sleigh slid into the first street of it, they met a man who was putting his feet down and taking them up so very deliberately that his purpose did not seem to be to go anywhere, but rather to make tracks in the snow with a huge pair of new boots.

"Can you tell me, sir," said the driver, as he pulled up the horse, "where we can find a clergyman?"

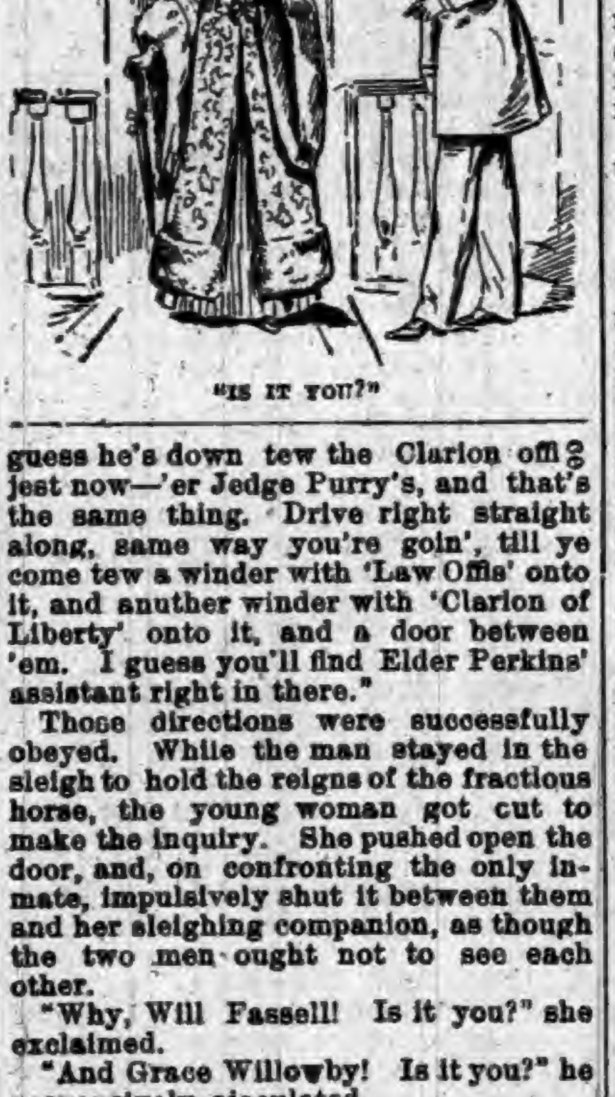
"A minister?" and the pedestrian stopped, surveyed the horse and sleigh critically, and then yellowed a spot in the snow with a mouthful of tobacco juice. "I guess I kin."

"Well, will you?"

"I guess I will, ef you want me to. Elder Perkins he's gone down to Pownal; but there's Willis Fassell, don't you reckon he'd answer?"

"Whom did you mention?" asked the young woman, exposing one red little ear above the fur, which had prevented her hearing the name.

"Elder Perkins' assistant, ma'am; I guess he's down tew the Clarion offis jest now—'er Jedge Purry's, and that's the same thing. Drive right straight along, same way you're goin', till ye come tew a winder with 'Law Offis' onto it, and anuther winder with 'Clarion of Liberty' onto it, and a door between 'em. I guess you'll find Elder Perkins' assistant right in there."



"IS IT YOU?"

Those directions were successfully obeyed. While the man stayed in the sleigh to hold the reigns of the fractious horse, the young woman got cut to make the inquiry. She pushed open the door, and, on confronting the only inmate, impulsively shut it between them and her sleighing companion, as though the two men ought not to see each other.

"Why, Will Fassell! Is it you?" she exclaimed.

"And Grace Willowby! Is it you?" he responsively ejaculated.

She expressed apology and regret along with her astonishment at encountering a former acquaintance, while he was manifestly glad and yet grim on seeing her. He bowed politely, and she quickly regained perfect composure. Then they shook hands and momentarily scrutinized each other. She saw a tall, good-looking fellow of twenty-five, with a neatly trimmed beard, a frock coat buttoned up, and little of the aspect of a rural Vermonter. The woman whom his startled eyes encompassed had not long ceased to be a girl, for her maturity was still fresh and smooth, and the chill of a wintry March day had seemingly frosted the delicate blonde of her hair and skin, making her look like an exquisite image in bisque.

"We were looking for the clergyman's associate," Miss Willowby said, with a markedly English accent.

"You have found him," was Fassell's steady reply. "I am a licensed preacher, and, on occasion, I act as substitute or assistant for Elder Perkins. What can I do for you?"

"Marry me, please, to the gentleman out there in the sleigh."

Fassell involuntarily grabbed at his heart, as though that organ had omitted a beat, then he drew a hard breath, his windpipe having developed a sudden obstruction. But Miss Willowby was determined not to see any symptoms of his agitation, and, opening the door, she called out:

"Shamus! Shamus! The gentleman is here."

Turning to Fassell, she continued: "Mr. Shamus O'Flarretty is an ex-Captain of the British army. I met him in Quebec. We have eloped from over the border, and——"

The entrance of Mr. O'Flarretty introduced a man of military straightness, alert gray eyes and bristling red hair, very thick in a mustache as well as on his head. She explained to him: "Mr. Fassell and I are old friends, Shamus. We knew each other very well, indeed, when he was a student at Yale and I lived at home in New Haven—before I went abroad, you know."

"The lady and I are in a bit av haste to be married," said ex-Captain O'Flarretty, with a touch of Irish brogue in some of his words; "that is to say, me dear sor, circumstances and meself combine to overcome her natural desire for convintional decorum. We must be married at wonce, sor. Can you do it legally?"

"I have no doubt of it," Mr. Fassell dazedly answered. "I am a little of a lawyer—a sort of assistant to ex-Judge Purry—this is his place," and he indicated the half of the room whose window was lettered "Law Office."

That moiety of the premises was railed by itself, and it held a desk, a safe, chairs, bookshelves and other denotements of a lawyer's work.

"As a clerico-legal composite, sor, if you'll permit me to say so," exclaimed Mr. O'Flarretty, explosively, "you're mighty handy in this case. You're doubtless competent as a lawyer to decide whether, as a clergyman, you can legally marry us two."

"Oh, the ceremony would be valid, no doubt," but the emphasis and inflection of the word "valid" indicated, to Miss Willowby's alert apprehension, that the speaker condemned the proceedings upon other than professional grounds.

But O'Flarretty was not keenly perceptive as to any side matter. "We want, sor," he went on, "what I'm minded to call an instantaneous marriage. And, when it's done, we'd like to have it published. The newspaper office——"

"Is this other half the room," Fassell interposed, as prompt and perfunctory as a tourists' guide.

That area was railed off, like its opposite, and its furniture, too, indicated that mind was there turned into matter. A heap of various newspapers here, a bunch of proof slips on a hook there, a batch of manuscript on another hook yonder, and characteristic literature everywhere—these things could belong to nothing else than a country editor's sanctum. Miss Willowby's glance went swiftly from one object to another, and was not puzzled until it rested on a big cake of maple sugar, a squirrelskin cap, and a bunch of home-knitted stockings, which lay in a row on the bit of counter which topped a section of the railing. Then her gaze became fixed on a huge yellow pumpkin, which was held tightly in the arms of a capacious armchair, and an explanation seemed to be demanded.

"No," said Fassell, "Colonel Burble, editor of the Clarion of Liberty, doesn't deal in country produce—further than to take it for subscriptions when he can't get cash. These things have come in to-day. I received them in the Colonel's absence. I am his associate in the Clarion, you know."

"Really, I didn't know," Miss Willowby responded. "So you are the aid of Elder Perkins in the ministry, of Judge Purry in the law, and of Colonel Burble in journalism? You used to tell me that one professorship at Yale would satisfy your ambition."

"Have you forgotten one other aspiration that——"

"And your versatility is such a convainyance, sor," O'Flarretty vivaciously broke in. "You can marry us on the spot—legally and ecclesiastically—and then—when does the Clarion go to press?"

"This evening."

"And then you can publish the marriage notice for us to mail back to Canada to-morrow. You are, sor, the man for ivery duty connicted with this affair."

"Except that of bridegroom," sighed the triple friend in need.

"You promise to do this and print it?"

"I do."

O'Flarretty took the hand of Miss Willowby, and they stood beside Fassell, ready to be united in wedlock. The apportionment of confidence and temerity in this bridal party was unusual. The bride was placidly acquiescent, it is true, but the bridegroom had a dominant and leading aspect fit for the officiating clergyman, while the man who stood in that capacity was confused and hesitant.

"Do you, Grace, take this man?" he began, like an expostulation.

"Howld on, sor," O'Flarretty interrupted. "I don't intend to be capracious and I don't wish to cause a delay that might be dangerous; but wouldn't it be in accordance with custom to first ask me, 'Do you, Shamus, take this woman?' Not that it makes, sor, any difference in the wurruld."

By this time it was clear to Miss Willowby that no formula of marriage at all between her and O'Flarretty would be liked by Fassell, who looked as though he would collapse before reaching the end of the briefest possible ceremony having for its climax, "I pronounce you man and wife." It happened also that the delay caused by O'Flarretty's criticism, although momentary, endangered his project, for the door opened before the confused celebrator could start anew, and Silas Purry, ex-County Judge and present counselor-at-law, entered briskly. The group amazed him.

"You marry the lady!" Mr. Purry exclaimed.

"I was about to marry this lady," and a gurgle of regret broke the sentence again, "to this gentleman. But maybe, Judge, the legal points ought to be first submitted to you. Really, Mr. O'Flarretty, I would advise that course."

"And I agree," said Miss Willowby, thereby making the complexion of the impatient Irishman imitate the hot hue of his hair.

"I don't see, Gr-r-race——" he began.

But Judge Purry, who was a heavily suave and overpoweringly placid man of middle age, conducted the bride presumptive to a chair within his own railing, and seated himself opposite her in his accustomed pose of a judicial listener.

"Pray state your case," he said.

"I will put it into few words," she replied. "I am heiress to property which an eccentric uncle willed to me with the odd proviso that I should marry on my twenty-first birthday—neither sooner nor later. I shall be twenty-one years old at eleven o'clock to-night. The fortune was in twenty big and fine but uncut diamonds, well worth a thousand dollars apiece on the average. Uncle mined them himself in South Africa, and on returning rich to Quebec placed them in a bag for stowage in a safe-deposit vault. Well, the chief executor of the will was my guardian, and he had a son whom he planned to become my husband to-day. My protest was all in vain, but my ingenuity, aided and abetted by Captain O'Flarretty's interest——"

"Say Captain O'Flarretty's love, me darling," suggested that gentleman, who was leaning over the rail.

"Aided and abetted by Captain O'Flarrety's love," she obediently began again, "my ingenuity was not in vain. The diamonds were brought to the house early this morning, to be given to me after the wedding, for which all essential preparations had been made except to gain the consent of the bride. Well, as I said, aided by Captain O'Flarretty's——"

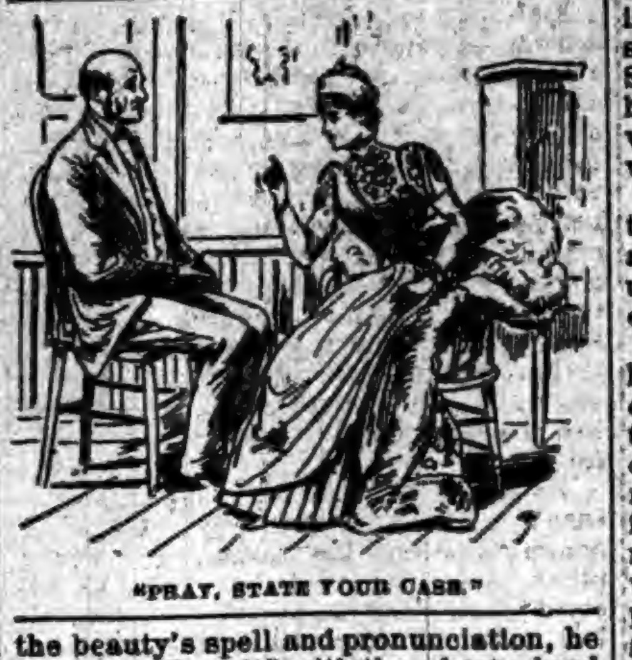
"Interest," prompted Willis Fassell, who had listened to the narrative absorbedly.

"Love," suggested the Captain, like the flare and boom of a bomb.

Without accepting either of the suggested words she went on: "I seized the bag of diamonds, slipped from the house, joined Captain O'Flarretty, and eloped with him across the border. Now, what I can't make out is the legality of the act."

The fact has already been given that Miss Willowby spoke with a markedly English accent, contracted during a residence of several years in England, and her narrative to Judge Purry had been delivered like a Briton born, clear through to the last "cahn't."

"I 'cahn't' advise in a breath," said the lawyer. "I beg your pardon, I mean I 'can't,'" and, resolutely escaping from the beauty's spell and pronunciation, he repeated "I can't" with the short, hard "a" of a true and loyal Yankee. Unquestionably the diamonds were not yours when you took them. Just how culpable in law you are for the seizure is a nice point. Besides, there is a minor question as to customs duty, and whether they are not liable to confiscation for being smuggled into the United States. Again, would your marriage here, under all the circumstances, place you in a safe attitude. I am excessively busy to-day, as a nominee for the judical bench, with the election only three days off, but I comprehend the urgency of your case, and will prepare myself to guide you with sound advice in time for you to wed before midnight."



"PRAY, STATE YOUR CASE."

"Meanwhile," said she, "here is the bag of diamonds," and she produced from a pocket deep in the mysterious labyrinth of her skirts a small buckskin bag. "I see you have a safe. Will you lock up the stones while the Captain and I are getting supper?"

Judge Purry took the bag and held it out with one hand, while with the other hand he pushed the coatsleeve up from his wrist, as the sleight-of-hand performer does when seeking to convince his spectators that no trick is to be played at that moment. He unlocked the outer door of the safe, and then an inner box, using one hand only, while the other was outstretched with the treasure. In that circumspect manner he at length deposited the bag in the box, and locked the two doors.

"I don't mean that your bag of diamonds shall become a poke o' moonshine," he said.

"And what is that?" she asked.

"Oh, 'poke' means bag, and there's a fairy legend in this neighborhood of a night chase for a bag of treasure. But when it was found, and looked into, the captor saw only moonshine. That's the tale of the poke 'o moonshine."

CHAPTER II.

THE CLARION OF LIBERTY GOES TO PRESS.

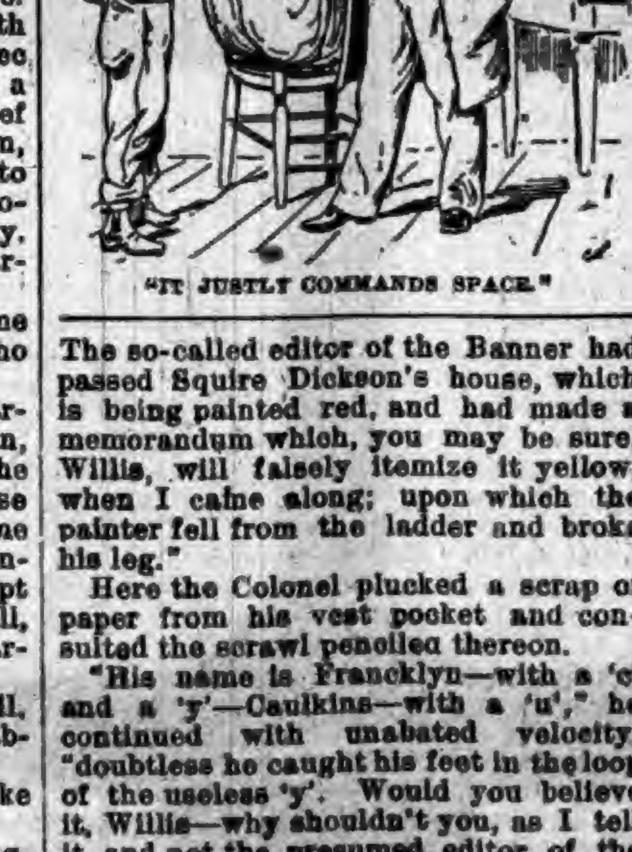
An hour passed, and the office of the Clarion of Liberty was silent and empty, while the allied one of Judge Purry contained only Willis Fassell. The departure of his one-third employer and the clients from Canada had left the young man quite inert and collapsed. He sat slumped in a tipped chair, the balancing of which on its rear legs seemed to engage all of his mind and body that was alive. One hand was touching its fingers in rotation to the railing, as though the smallest lapse from the exact digital sequence would not only disturb the easy see-saw of the chair, but also be a cruel slight to the omitted finger. But suddenly the quietude of the place was broken. The outer door opened and shut with a bang, inclosing more air in the little entry than it could hold, and so puffing the inner door open, with a clatter of latch and a squeak of hinge. A cyclonic movement of the air was developed, whirling a wreath of snow through the doorway and fluttering every loose bit of paper in the room.

The center of the storm was Colonel Hiram Burble, editor and publisher of the Clarion and an embodiment of commotion. The brim of his soft felt hat was taking to itself a new shape, as though agitated by the action of the brain which it held. The unbuttoned overcoat was flapping its skirts in a seeming endeavor to empty the pockets of their protruding papers. The plump figure of Mr. Burble became very pantomimic while he was discovering his idle associate, and his smoothly shaven face was busy, in all its features, with various expressions of surprise.

"Willis! Willis! Willis!" he exclaimed, speaking the name thrice in the time that almost anybody else could have uttered it only once. "Can it be, Willis—and no, it can't—that you have forgotten this is Thursday? And don't you know, Willis—of course you do—that the two hands of the clock are shaking each other as they pass in their race for 6 p. m.?"

The Colonel had by this time entered his sanctum and paced rapidly twice around a circle therein, and at each passing had deposited on his desk a handful of memoranda and papers grabbed out of one or another of his pockets.

"Is the last form closed, Willis? No—you're going to say 'No,' when you have leisure to answer. Of course, you know I always come in with the last gust and on the final wave, like an argosy freighted down with a wealth of news. Why, sir, man and beast and the very elements themselves load me with news to burgeon the columns of the Clarion, while those of the impoverished Banner perish in their paucity.



"IT JUSTLY COMMANDS SPACE."

The so-called editor of the Banner had passed Squire Dickson's house, which is being painted red, and had made a memorandum which, you may be sure, Willis, will falsely itemize it yellow, when I came along; upon which the painter fell from the ladder and broke his leg."

Here the Colonel plucked a scrap of paper from his vest pocket and consulted the scrawl pencilled thereon.

"His name is Francklyn—with a 'c' and a 'y'—Caulkins—with a 'u'," he continued with unabated velocity; "doubtless he caught his feet in the loop of the useless 'y'. Would you believe it, Willis—why shouldn't you, as I tell it, and not the presumed editor of the oblique and sidelong Banner—Long Ben Dilworthy's horse ran away as instant in front of me, and five minutes behind that vituperative, prevaricating interloper in journalism. His name is—is—is——" and he fumbled in one pocket after another.

"Samuel Ransom," said Fassell, who had been aroused from his lethargy.

"Willis — Willis — Willis," and the editor advanced upon his associate with an impetuosity which, had it been unusual, would have made that young man prepare to run or fight, "you are well aware that the name of that creature is unprintable in my paper and unspeakable in my office. I was alluding to the horse, sir, whose decent, if somewhat libelous, title is Chilled Syrup. The Clarion's account shall be headed 'Chilled Syrup Runs in March,' while the nonentity across the way won't have a line."

The Colonel strode across the room to a doorway at the foot of a staircase and called, with a lift in key and volume for each word: "Eb! Eben! Ebenezer! Ebenezer"!

At the first shout a pair of heavy feet had struck the top step, and at the last one a boy reached the bottom with a thud. He was the printer's devil of this establishment, and the ink on his face might have been mistaken for smut from work at purgatorial fires. He wore neither coat nor vest, and whether he would much longer wear trousers depended on the frail resolution of a single suspender.

"Eb," the editor commanded, "tell Johnson we can close up in half an hour. I'll give him just about three stickfuls of copy. Ask him if the Frolic Burlesque Company's ad is in——"

"Yessir; it's in. A hull column with picters," the boy interposed.

"Pictures anything like those on the fence by the Postoffice?" and by a spreading of his arms and a lifting of one leg Burble clearly indicated a ballet dancer.

"Some on 'em like that, and some on 'em like this," and the boy kicked higher than his pursy employer could hope to.

"Good gracious! H'm—ha! Well, tell Johnson to make up the church notices in the adjoining column. We must preserve a moral balance in this community, even if we can't stand on the toes of one foot and comb our hair with the other set. Willis, did you make a safe, conservative notice?"

"Oh, yes; one calculated to warn the righteous and advise the wicked."

"And did you write the topical verses, with what the manager called 'local gags,' to be sung in this blithesome and prismatic show?"

Fassell implored silence with a gesture so violent that Colonel Burble obeyed it.

"The doggerel has been written," the editorial associate said, "by a reluctant person, who would not like to be known as its author, I assure you."

"Well, you can ease your conscience—his conscience—by writing, or letting him write, a hymn for Elder Perkins. Genius must be versatile."

"And compose stanzas to the refrain 'That is what a naughty echo said to me.'"

"Say, Kernel Burble," said Eb the devil, "lemme say suthin'. Put them verses inter the Clarion. There ain't no zim in this week's paper."

"Zim? Do you mean vim or zip?"

"I mean anything with er zis-z-z-zis to it. There ain't a crime head, there ain't no mysterious affair, and there ain't more'n my arm's length about next season's baseball. But there's too much guff, and a whole handful of it is about old Aunt Hetable Green's big punk."

"Aunt Hetable's pumpkin," and the editor placed one hand on the abnormal growth, which filled a chair, "is a great agricultural achievement, and it justly commands space."

The editor sat down to write his news items, which he did with celerity, while the sub-editor labored much harder at a shorter piece of manuscript. The boy fetched proofs and carried copy until the chief's two paragraphs were in the hands of the typesetters.

"You're writing an obituary, Willis," said Burble, crossing the room and glancing over his aid's shoulder. "I see it in your solemn face. The Clarion has lost a subscriber? Ah! 'A young lady?' The good readers die young—and of complicated diseases, judging by your obliterations and interlineations."

Fassell covered the page with his hands, as though it was a secret love letter instead of matter for publication.

"Oh, it is a legal document!" Burble continued. "Now, Willis, I don't wish to be exacting, but I do demand my third of you. Thursday is my day clear through, and you shouldn't take a minute of it from journalism to give to the law."

For answer the young man handed the sheet of copy to the editor, who read from it a brief account of the case of Capt. O'Flarretty and Grace Willowby.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

A Medicine Man.

Although in perfect health, James Mund, of Eastern New York, is always taking medicine. Recently he brought home two small bottles.

"What ails you now?" laughed his wife, who had for years told him he needed no medicine, the physician agreeing with her.

"That," he said, pointing to one bottle, "is appetite medicine." And she knew he ate more than any other man in the neighborhood. "That," he said, pointing to the other bottle, "is sleep medicine." And she knew he slept soundly from bedtime until she awoke him in the morning.

"I hope you may soon recover," she said.

At night, having taken his medicine, went early to bed. "Now for a good sleep," said he.

About midnight he called to his wife, who was fast asleep:

"Mary! Oh, Mary!"

"W-what is it, dear?" said she.

"I've made a mistake," he moaned, "the greatest mistake of my life. Instead of the sleep medicine, I took the appetite medicine, and I just can't stand it; I'm hungry as a bear."

She did not scold as she prepared beefsteak and coffee.

In the morning, after taking his medicine, he sat down at the table to await breakfast. "I'll eat you out of house and home now, Mary," said he.

When breakfast was ready she asked: "Tea or coffee, James?"

But he did not answer. He did not look up. He was sound asleep. She did not awaken him, perceiving that this time he had taken the sleep medicine for the appetite medicine.

With staring eyes, he sprang from the chair about noon, and, laughing when he saw his wife smiling, he threw both bottles as far as he could into a five-acre field of clover.

YESBERA,

THE LEADING CLOTHIER AND MERCHANT TAILOR.

North Side Public Square, AUBURN, INDIANA.

Dr. I. S. Townsend & Brothers.

Consultation Free.

At the Swineford House, Tuesday March 21st. One Day Only.

REMARKABLE CURES OF AUBURN AND VICINITY.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the most as they tell of his remarkable diagnose and wonderful cures border on that of the miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him and to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It cost nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free, A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided.

One of Auburn's most respected citizens Mr. M. N. Ward of Auburn, on the corner of Second and Jackson street, says: "I came to see Doctor Townsand four weeks ago I could hardly walk to the doctor's room without help. I have had heart disease and weak lungs and catrrah in my head for 20 years and was given up by the best physicans. I had rheumatism so my joints was so stiff I could not walk and my head hurt me so I could not rest or sleep. I was nearly deaf in right ear, but now can hear as well as I ever could. My neighbors all know how I have suffered. I can hear the clock tick in both ears, I thank God I feel well. Doctor Townsend has cured me. I have not been able to work for over one year, doctoring and taking patent medicines. I feel I am able to do two men's work now, have gained in flesh. I advise all to call on Doctor Townsend and be cured. I am willing to see any one and tell how bad I was, and let them see how well I am now,

Another respected lady of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson who has had a complication of diseases stomach, kidney, heart and lung disease and neuralgia pains all over, her limbs swollen so she could not step on them. She now feels nearly well, her pains have left her and her heart is well and she feels better every way.

Mr. Ward says his eye sight was so bad he could hardly see. He now feels that he could dispense with his glasses. The Docter performed over twenty cures on his last visit. He will forfeit $5 00 for any case of catarrh he cannot cure. An eye witness to a lady who was helped to the doctor's room four weeks ago, is now doing her own work

Miss McMillen cured of blood and skin disease of 4 years standing.

Obituary.

Mrs. Anna Margaret Bremermann, nee Asendorf, was born in the village of Schwarm, situated near Bremen, Germany, on the 31st of March 1821 and died in Auburn of pneumonia, March 10, 1893.

In 1848 she was united in marriage to Detrich Bremermann, whose death occurred during the year 1871.

Emigrating to America in 1870, she chose Auburn, Ind., as her future residence and even up to the time of her death it continued to be her home. She was the mother of three children, one son, whose death occurred prior to their removal to this country, and two daughters, Mrs. J H. Gugerli, of Auburn, Ind., and Mrs. H. Neitzer, of Detroit, Mich.

She was converted in 1872 during the ministry of Rev A. Meyer, immediately united and maintained a consistent connection with the German M. E. church She was a great lover of the church of her choice, loyal to its institutions and contributed liberally of her means to all the benevolences of the church.

The later years of her life were consecrated wholly to the service of her Master and to the preparation of her soul for the enjoyment of those pleasures which God has prepared for them that love Him.

She knew in whom she believed and never had any doubt of the reality of the religion which she professed. Her end was peace.

Besides her two daughters she leaves four grandchildren, an aged sister, two son-in-laws and many friends to mourn her loss. The funeral services were conducted in the German M. E. church at 10:30 a. m., Sunday March 2, by Rev C. Koch, when the remains were taken to Evergreen cemetery for interment.

Farm For Sale.

The farm known as the Gœtschius farm, situated near the center of Richland township, DeKalb county, Indiana, on the old Auburn and Lisbon state road, about four miles northwest of Auburn. The farm is under first class cultivation, about 160 acres. On said farm is a two story brick house, with wing, a good barn and all necessary out buildings needed on a farm; splendid orchard, first-class well of water. The soil is mainly sandy, with plenty of stock water. It will be sold as a whole or in parcels, as the farm is susceptible of division. Enquire of Ira B. Goetschius, on the premises. tf.

DeKalb's Last Deer.

Jacob Bishop, of Butler township, was here Friday. He brings word of a very unusual occurrence for DeKalb county, the appearance of a live deer, which passed through his neighborhood one day in the last part of October. It was a full grown buck, having horns of four or five prongs. It was first noticed by a neighbor, Perry Griffin, as it was passing through. From there it ran across Mr. Bishop's place and finally out of the neighborhood. Mr. Bishop was away and did not get to see this unusual visitor, but many others saw it. We presume it had strayed away from some section of the country where there are more woods than in DeKalb county, and we presume it is the first wild deer seen in this county for twenty-five years. If anyone remembers of a similar occurrence we would like to hear of it.

A Complete Surprise.

On last Thursday, March 9, while Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Fretz were eating an early dinner, preparing to attend the funeral of Mr. Frantz, a host of warm friends and neighbors drove up, unloaded baskets well filled with provisions necessary for a first-class dinner; also a very fine center table, scarf and other presents, Before the shock had cleared away the house was well filled, the table spread and loaded with the goodies, and after 43 had satisfied their wants, twelve baskets were left. A few hours were spent in social chat, which was made as pleasant as possible by all. After singing a song entitled "The Feast of Love," conducted by Bro. L. W. Treesh, and prayer by Bro. Sebert, the presents were duly presented, it being Mr. Fretz' 33 birthday. After many thanks and a hearty welcome for all to come again, and another song, "God be with You till We Meet Again," was sung, the crowd began to arrange for home, feeling that the day had been spent profitably.

The "Paris" and "New York."

Chicago News Record

A short time ago some American citizens of New York had the unusual and notable privilege of seeing the stars and stripes unfurled at the head of a first-class, well-appointed and thoroughly equipped modern steamship. Formerly the United States had a mercantile navy fairly entitled to respect. The addition of a first-class merchantman more or less meant but little.

It is a sign of the extent of the lapse from the condition of those days that there should be a to-do and celebration over the transference to the American flag of two vessels. For years our merchant navy has not been a thing to view with pride. Scarcely a maritime nation on the globe can not show a better. And foreign merchants and mariners have looked with interest at the spectacle of a country bounded on three sides by immense stretches of sea hiring its shipping done by foreign vessels.

Perhaps it is an occasion for rejoicing when two foreign-built steamers are admitted to the American registry and permitted to fly the American flag and accept a subsidy from the United States treasury. It may be that this is the beginning of a "new era" and foreshadows a rapid development of our commercial marine. Admitting that all this is true it is worth while to consider the underlying principles involved in the matter.

On the same principles that America has prevented free importation of foreign woolens she has also prohibited the importation of foreign-made ships. At the same time the tariff laws have prevented the importation of materials entering into the construction of ships. Thus there has been little American shipbuilding and hence there are few American ships.

A suspension of the law against foreign bottoms has enabled the two foreign built vessels mentioned to be "imported" free of duty and become American. This is what we are hurrahing about.

The U. S. courts will be asked to settle the matter of Sunday closing of the world's fair.

Washington state legislature is also in a dead lock on senator. Over 100 ballots have been taken.

Boston had a five million fire last Friday morning in the heart of the city. Several lives were lost.

Samuel C. Cousins in Toronto thinks he is Charlie Ross, but can't make Charlie's father, Christian K. Ross, in Philadelpia, believe it.

Reports claim that only 26 per cent of the last year's wheat crop is left on hand. This is somewhat less than last March, however.

Gold mines, believed to be valuable and extensive, have been opened in Canada by Chicago parties, about fifty miles from the "Soo."

Cleveland announces that all office holders will be allowed to serve out their full terms. This will be good news to many an anxious heart.

Some green goods chap has sent his alluring circulars to Gov. Mathews, but the governor, like all well informed men, understood his little scheme.

Gen. Patrick Collins of Boston, will get John C. New's place as consul to London, the best place in the gift of the president, said to worth $50,000 a year.

Davis, speaker of the Tennesee house of representatives has been disbarred by court, for improper practices as a lawyer and the House turned him out also.

Will E. English of Indianapolis son of W. H. English candidate for vice-president with Hancock, wants to be minister to Switzerland. He is a man of ability.

Talk in foreign countries that Franz Joseph, Emperor of Austria, will abdicate in favor of his brother the Archduke Charles Louis.—a very unusual accurrence.

Gresham has proved his democracy, by selecting as his first assistant secretary of state, that sterling democrat, Josiah Quincy of Massachusetts. Gresham is all right.

Editor Wadsworth of the Laporte Argus was a candidate for public printer and likely to succeed, but has withdrawn, owing to ill health. He would have been an excellant choice.

Murderers are shot, not hanged, by law in Indian Territory. Last week the sheriff of Jackson county, Choctaw Nation shot Elias Loring, a full blood Indian sentenced for murder.

A son of the king of Sweden was married to a poor but highly respectable Swedish girl in Chicago lately. He is studying for the ministry, and both are said to be very sensible people.

Senator Hill has called on Cleveland. From this it appears the Senator is willing to come in out of the rain, like a good little boy. He boasts of being a democrat, and this is a good way to show it.

John M Coulter, president of the Indiana University goes to Chicago University. Bigger salary. Indiana is furnishing men of brains for all other states, but seems to lack money to keep them at home.

Warsaw will connect Eagle Lake and Spring Fountain Park with the main railroad crossing by means of a reliable canal. That will end all the trouble we have been having with the extra railroad tracks there.

Blizzard reported in the northwest with mercury twenty below.

Harrison was given a grand ovation by all parties, on his return last week to Indianapolis. A sensible plan. It was a graceful return for the friendly way he received Cleveland, the day before inauguration, as well as on that day.

The chaplain in the Joliet, Ill., prison refuses to let anyone but Lutherans and Catholics teach in the prison Sunday school. Gov. Altgeld orders him to let all denominations send in teachers as heretofore but he refuses to yield.

Cleveland is likely to change out the officers faster than he did eight years ago, and it is said the first question he asks about an applicant is, "Does he drink?" and if told that the man drinks, he turns him down and drops him at once.

Louisville, Ky., is prosecuting its election boodlers in the federal court It is proved that the U. S. revenue officers collected over $17,000 from the men employed under them, by means election assessments, which is contrary to law.

Senator Beckwith, of Wyoming, has been again appointed by the governor, as it was in doubt whether the first appointment was legal. The governor can appoint only in case of vacancy, and there was a senator serving till March 4.

Mayor Ingraham of Portland Me., will not take the office to which the returns show he was elected because he believes one precinct was counted wrong, and that if counted right, his opponent would be elected. We might add that Ingraham is a democrat.

If we are expected to thank Harrison for that "car coupler" law, how are we to account for the fact that a democratic House passed it a year ago, and a republican senate pigeon holed it till recently when public opinion compelled them to bring it forth and pass it.

Cleveland gives out that men who held office under him before, can not expect it again. This will be a hard rule to enforce, but if he serves all alike there will be no cause to complain. This will retire Mayor Zollinger of course, and may affect all the old postmasters.

Cleveland wants to wait and study up the Sandwich Island treaty awhile before acting in the matter. He will be wise to find out what the Islanders wish, and if they desire annexation, then let them come in. But if they oppose it, we have no right to annex them. But no other nation should be allowed to control them.

The gold in the treasury, that was getting so low while Foster was secretary, is increasing now, two millions of the yellow metal being offered to the government last week in exchange for silver certificates, and bonds of 1890. So there will probably be no new bonds issued for Carlisle, the new secretary receives offers of more gold every day or two, and not from the east as usual, but from the west.

We have an article this week from the Chicago News Record, about two ships that will be allowed to raise the U. S. flag. The reason we have not had the U. S. flag on merchant vessels at sea has been and still is the unwise tariff laws that prevent it. Had it not been for this pet republican legislation, we would still have our flag on the seas as we used to. Let us again have free ships and plenty of them.

Cleveland sent in the name of Gov. Gray as minister to Mexico about the first thing he did. This shows Cleveland's good judgment in the highest light, and is a just rebuke to those Indianians who fought Cleveland out of an alleged friendship for Gray. Such imprudent friends might have caused endless trouble between two of the best and ablest democrats in the country—Cleveland and Gray. But the Indiana democracy have faith in both.

The Indianapolis Sentinel wants the railroads running to Chicago to paint and fix up everything along the lines, and also wants all the towns and farms slicked up to make the state look pretty to the crowds that go through to see the great fair. It claims that 85 per cent., of all who go to the fair, will pass through this state or some part of it, and that 90 per cent. of all foreign visitors will cross the state. So it will pay us to slick up and put on our Sunday outfit!

Republican papers are again making themselves ridiculous by talking against the apportionment of the state by the recent legislature, in the same way they have about other apportionments by democrats. They show ignorance, because every time a republican legislature made the apportionment it was more unfair than it has been since, as anyone can see by looking at a map of the districts. The "gerrymander" they made was the worst we ever had. The republicans profited for years by these gerrymanders, and never realized how wicked it was till democrats made one about half as bad.

The new laws provide for electing township officers in the fall at the general election. This was done on a plea to save election expense. But it is all wrong. Township officers are of the highest importance, and a poor officer will waste more money than the cost of a dozen elections. These important offices will now be chosen in a heated, general campaign, when no attention will be paid to them, and any sort of a chap can get on the ticket and be elected with the crowd. The local needs of the township will be utterly forgotten. The law is one of the most foolish of the many foolish things they did.

It is laughable to hear a party that claims to be against all class legislation howling for free silver under the Bland bill. That bill gives to the few wealthy men who have silver mines, 100 cents for each 70 cents worth of silver they can bring to the government mints. In other words, if the mines produce 70 millions of silver a year, the government would have to pay by this law, 100 millions for it. There are other objectionable features about the Bland law, but this is enough to make any intelligent person, or any one who is honestly in favor of free silver, refuse to support such a scheme. We do not believe free silver on the right plan would do any harm, but the Bland plan is a national swindle.

Republican papers and speakers are still making themselves ridiculous in the eyes of well informed people by continuing the old gags that helped to lose them the last election. For example; "In 1860 the wealth of the country was $16,159,000,000; now after thirty years of republican rule it is $62,610,000,000. Such are a few of the results of republican supremacy, etc." Every well informed person knows this is all nonsense. No doubt the wealth of the country, in its total, has increased, but only a few men have been made wealthy by republican management, and they are manufacturers, importers and other protected classes. All that any other class has increased in wealth, has been done in spite of the many obstacles thrown in their way by this same republican party. The greater number of our people, in spite of thirty years of hard work, find themselves to-day worth no more than they were many years ago. And all this the people know, and they have kicked out of power, a party that had no other reasons than these to offer, why they should be kept in possession of the government. As Lincoln once said, You can fool a part of the people a part of the time, but you can't fool all of them all of the time."

This we do cheerfully.

M. E Gardner, of Villisca, Iowa, has purchased the Butler Review of O. H. Downey and entered on his work as publisher of that paper. He is evidently a man of ability, and a sound democrat, which continues the Review in the old faith, and secures to the people of Butler a good paper. Our relations with Mr. Downey have always been pleasant, and we have no doubt will continue so with the new proprietor.

If space can be secured the state's collection of birds will be exhibited at the World's Fair. The work of collecting specimens has been going on for eighteen months, about 150 varieties are now tastefully mounted in the state museum. Birds native to Indiana and those that fly over the state in their migration to the north or south are included in the collection. Some of them are rare and are rapidly becoming extinct.—South Bend Times.

W. S. Purdy brought in last week, a curiosity in wood, similar to one brought to our notice a few years ago by J. H. Weaver. It is specimens of peculiar markings in wood. Mr. Purdy was sawing up some logs of soft maple to make into stovewood, when on splitting it he noticed some queer marks on the freshly cut ends. It showed a bright plain letter, a capital "I", perfect in form and clean cut. He sawed off a number of pieces and found the same marks for some distance. The specimen we have is fading out somewhat, but is still plain. As in the specimens we had from Mr. Weaver, we suppose these marks are caused by worms that eat into the wood, and so cut off the flow of sap through the parts eaten off. If they happen to eat a path the shape of a letter or any other object, of course it will show for some distance. But it is quite a study to trace up one of these accidental freaks.

Miss C. E Strickland, at Washington sends her regular remittance to the COURIER and does not forget a good word for her old neighbors at Auburn. Good sugar making off and on for a week or so, but the season will no doubt be a short one, as winter broke up so late. But it makes little difference now, for most of our farmers have cut down their maple trees, and those that have not, do not care to bother with it. A good sugar camp, properly worked, would pay however, without doubt, as either the syrup or the sugar finds plenty of purchasers.

For use in a single scene of the Spectatorio, to be presented at "The McKaye Spectatorium" at Chicago, the Columbian Celebration Company has imported direct from the plantations of the Boston Fruit company, at Jamaica, W. I, five carloads of trees, shrubs, plants and other tropical flora. All this consignment is to be used in the scene representing the landing of Columbus at San Salvador, and will be in itself an object worthy of more than passing interest. All the other scenes will be equipped as completely as this one has been.

Court.

Work goes on at a fair rate. The grand jury has been kept busy with a cloud of witnesses and Prosecutor Butler is up to his eyes in work. Just what the harvest will be, "No feller can find out." The fellow who tried to burglarize in Butler last week, Chas. Scott, is in Sheriff Ralston's stronghold. The COURIER last week had an account clipped from the Record, of the lively shooting scrape between him and the nightwatch at Butler, and his capture. He is a young fellow, and his pal who is supposed to be a Garrett lad, has not been caught, but figures in the case under the time-honored name of John Doe. As the boys had not broken into the store, they are now held for "conspiracy," and it may go hard with Scott, and his partner also, if he is found. The case of Martin Locke vs L. S. railway for damages goes to next term, for the reason that Locke, who was struck by a train at Waterloo last year, has since died, which gives the case a new turn. J. F. Shuman, W. L. Penfield and Frank Roby are Locke's attorneys, while John H. Baker is attorney on the docket for the railroad. Just how this will work, we do not know, for Baker is now U. S. district judge, We presume there will be a re-adjustment of attorneys by the time the case is brought on. The gambling case from Waterloo of Lower vs Stiefel, court overruled a motion for a new trial, and it will be appealed to supreme court. The Garrett neighborhood quarrel of Rosa Cannon vs Sarah Harner ordered off the docket by the judge. Laura Shutt vs John Kruse, she gets judgment for costs. Emma Smead was divorced from Edward Smead. John D. Leighty vs Newman to quiet title, Judge ordered mortgage canceled, and other necessary steps to make title o. k. Edward Baker vs H. Trentman et al, judgment for plaintiff $537.15. In case of Knisely vs McCurdy, judgment for $449.21. Chas. Robinson vs Peter Humbarger, surety of peace was dismissed by the court as the affidavit of Robinson did not show that it was made on Humbarger's wife, or that she had cause to fear he would do her any injury. In Sarah Boyer vs Cyrus Boyer, finding for plaintiff that she has second mortgage on land, and F. D. Wetmore has the first. W. H. Showalter vs Clarence Reynolds, new trial granted on questions of attachment. Ellen J Heckathorn was given a divorce from David Heckathorn with custody of two minor children, and $2,000 alimony. Adams Knott was pronounced incompetent to care for himself, and a guardian will be appointed with bond at $2,000. M. Boland was appointed receiver for the Indiana Dimension Co., and the property of the company ordered sold at private sale. The matter of C. Aultman vs Boozer estate is on trial now, and may last a day or two. On Tuesday Judge Powers sustained a motion of J. B. Baxter administrator of the estate to strike out most of the questions and answers of plaintiff's witnesses for the reason as court holds, that they are disqualified to testify, being agents of the corporations as to transactions between them and the decedent, Boozer in his life time, under section 500 of the statutes.

One of the latest devolpments in court business is the suit brought by S. J. Brandon against Sam. Hanna, growing out of the recent changes in the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. Mr. Brandon and Mr. Hanna had made a deal by which Mr. Brandon conveyed his stock to Mr. Hanna, and then Mr. Hanna sold all the stock he had to Mr. Nickey, the whole transaction resulting in a great loss of money to Mr. Brandon, and under circumstances that he thinks his only chance for justice lies in the courts. So the suit has been brought in a hope that he may recover his property that he thinks unfairly taken from him. It bids fair to be a hotly contested case.

Latest. Scott, mentioned above got two years in the penitentiary. The trial jury is at work only two changes having been made from the list published in the COURIER last week. They are Andrew Boyd and Scott Shoemaker excused, while Clyde Brandon and Charles Voss take their places. Reports have got out that all who have played progressive pedro, will be prosecuted. This is not so. The prosecutor will be satisfied if he can stop real gambling.

If Congressman Turpin can find that pensioner whom he accused on the floor of the House the other day of drawing nineteen dollars monthly from Uncle Sam "for total deafness," while he is at the same time telephone tender in the Pension Office in Washington at $1,800 a year, he should bring him before Congress at once. If you are a parent and have a son who is dear to you, bring him up in such a manner that he will never be a speechmaker. The most tiresome man in the United States to-day is the one who is always watching for an opportunity to make a speech. The worst of it is that the man who wants to make a speech is never a good speaker. He generally has a wheezy voice and yellow teeth, and in nine cases out of ten he says "eyether" and "nyether." So, if your boy develops a weakness for speaking, lead him out to the woodshed in the still, dreamy gloaming and hit him with two cords of green elm.

Anent the superstition that—the number 13 is an unlucky one, the New York Sun calls attention to the numerous repetitions of the number on the new 25-cent piece. On one side of the coin there are no less than ten repetitions of the number 13. There are 13 stars, 13 letters in the scroll held by the eagle's beak, 13 marginal feathers on each wing, 13 tail-feathers, 13 parallel lines in the shield, 13 horozontal bars, 13 arrowheads in one claw, 13 leaves on the branch in the other claw, and 13 letters in the words "quarter dollar." It remains to be seen whether anybody will be afraid to take this coin on account of its bearing so many marks of ill-luck, but the probability is that most men will esteem themselves unlucky if they fail to get a good pocket-full of them.

The fascination of a great city is as mysterious and as potent as the force which drives the meteors into the sun. Nine years ago John C. Eno, President of the Second National Bank, of New York, fled in disgrace to Canada. Warrants for his arrest were issued, but for nine years he has been living safe and in comfort in Quebec. He had a beautiful home, a wife and family and many friends in the Canadian city. In new York the prisoner's dock and almost certainly the prisoner's cell awaited him. In Quebec he was free and apparently happy. In New York he would be deprived of his liberty and made wretched by a vivid consciousness of guilt. Yet John C. Eno surrendered himself to the New York authorities to stand the trial he has for nine years delayed. The moth came back to the candle's flame.

How hollow are the royal pretensions of friendship among the ruling powers of Europe is well illustrated in a cynically worded dispatch that comes from St. Petersburg. Owing to defects in the new supply of rifles turned out by the Government factories in Russia, half of them were rejected. The rearming of the Czar's infantry will thereby be delayed, it is stated, three years. These details throw a new light on the recent visit of the Czar's oldest son to the court of Germany, where he was given an apparently most cordial welcome. And the situation is still more brightly illuminated by the closing words of the dispatch referring to the defective arms and their result on the military forces of the Moscovite monarch. They were that a "knowledge of this state of affairs is believed to have influenced the Czar to assume a more friendly attitude toward Germany." Royal amenities in Europe to-day are things apart from ordinary human actions.

The Cat and the Looking Glass.

Many years ago at a certain farmhouse the household cat was observed to enter a bedroom in course of spring cleaning. The looking glass being on the floor, the cat on entering was confronted with its own reflection and naturally concluded that he saw before him another cat. A fierce growl was the result, followed by a rush at the mirror, and then meeting an obstacle to his vengeance, a fruitless cut round to the rear. This was more than once repeated with, of course, equal lack of success. Finally the cat was seen to walk deliberately up to the looking glass, keeping his eye on the image, and then, when near enough to the edge to feel carefully with one paw behind for the supposed intruder, while, with its head twisted around to the front, it assured itself that the other had not escaped. The result fully satisfied the cat that he had been deceived, and never after would he condescend to notice a cat in a looking glass.

RESORT TO SHODDY.

HIGH TARIFF ON WOOL ENCOURAGES ADULTERATION.

A Connecticut Manufacturer Tells of the Change for the Worse Which Has Been Wrought During the Past Twenty-five Years.

A Manufacturer's Confession.

It is interesting and instructive to hear the manufacturers of woolens tell how the duties laid upon raw wool by a paternal government have made their honest prosperity, which was once the wonder of the world, impossible, and compelled them, in order to continue business, to degrade it into a disagreeable imposition on the millions of American workingmen who must purchase their clothing in the "Protected Home Market".

Mr. W. B. Estell, who, under the auspices of the New York Reform Club, recently investigated the effect of tariff duties on wool growers and woolen manufacturers, gives an interesting account of a conversation he had with one of the large manufacturers of woolens in Connecticut. Speaking of the change for the worse which has been wrought during the past twenty-five years, this manufacturer says: "Twenty-five or thirty years ago I was making as fine a grade of woolens as could be found anywhere in the world. I could import my foreign wool, which is absolutely necessary to the manufacture of good cloth, free of duty; this enabled me to pay a better price for the domestic wool, which is just as essential as the foreign article, and yet place upon the market, at a fair profit to myself, a grade of goods which defied 'pauper made goods' from abroad. In these days I was selling the products of my factory, not only in America but in foreign countries as well. I would be doing so to-day were it not for the insane duties on raw material.

"The compensatory duties, which have been levied for the protection of myself and the workingmen I employ, have not borne the good fruit promised, but have resulted in debasing the manufacturing of woolen goods until I venture to say there is not one manufacturer in America, who caters to the ordinary trade, who is not using more or less adulterants, instead of the pure wool, and must do so if he wishes to continue in business.

"When we could import our raw wool free of duty, we took delight in manufacturing the very best quality of cloth—indeed, we were compelled to do so because of the low duties on the foreign manufactured product. We would make a certain pattern of good quality, send samples of it to our customers with price list and always got good orders. Now all is changed. Instead of sending samples, the clothing manufacturer sends us a sample of the kind and weight of cloth they want to sell at a certain price, and to give the usual guaranty to show their customers that the cloth is warranted to be "all wool." They know full well that we must adulterate with shoddy, perhaps to the extent of 50 or 60 per cent., to reach the price named, but they prefer to rely implicitly on our guaranty. Sometimes, however, they excuse themselves by saying that after all shoddy is wool, and that, therefore, the goods are as represented.

"The duty upon raw wool made the compensatory duties on manufactured woolens necessary in order to enable us to do business, but no sooner were we protected by a high duty upon the goods which competed with ours than we began to cast about for means to increase our profits. One of the most effective means we found to be the introduction of shoddy into our fabrics—not in place of the foreign wool, but to take the place of the high-priced American wools. Our large profits did not materialize, because the very high duties upon woolens gave the business an unhealthy boom. The result was that everywhere woolen mills sprang up, and the competition, instead of continuing in the healthy way in which the increased duties upon woolens found it, developed into a fight to the death. Every known adulterant was used and others were sought until the trade became thoroughly demoralized. It has never recovered and never will, until the old conditions are restored and the manufacturing of woolens is once more placed upon a sound business basis.

"Give us free wool and take the duty off manufactured woolens, and I venture the prediction that no factory which deserves to live will die. Instead of free wool and free woolens injuring the employers and employes, and reducing wages, we will extend our markets, pay just as high wages, employ more hands, and give the American consumers the best article in the world."

McKinleyism in France.

France has just complated a year's experience of her new high-protection regime, and the results are far from satisfactory to her McKinleys. Even counting in the enormous imports of January a year ago, made in anticipation of the new tariff, the record for the year 1892 shows a falling off of over 7 per cent. in importations. Exports have fallen away but a little, although in manufactured articles there was a loss of $5,000,000. But the greatest evils have been felt in the disarrangement of business and in the disturbances wrought in the public revenue. For some time the government held out the hope of doing something to relieve the business embarrassments caused by the new tariff, in the way of commercial treaties, but these have come to little, and the distress in some parts of the country has been severe. Marseilles, for example, lost 20 per cent. of its maritime commerce in 1892. The revenue has been millions of francs away from the estimates, and, altogether, the Meline tariff has proved itself about as ingenious an instrument for business upheaval and financial derangement as its fellow, the McKinley bill. The worst of it is that, with the former as with the latter, its evil effects grow worse with time.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Our Bottles Go Abroad.

Five carloads of American-made bottles will be shipped to England by Craven Brothers, proprietors of the Salem Glass Works, by the White Star Line next week. This is the first time that bottles manufactured in this country will be brought into competition with the English-made article in its own market. The first shipment will include 1,000 gross of long-necked bottles. They will be packed in boexs made to hold two gross each. The order was received yesterday by cable from Lea & Perrins, manufacturers of Worcestershire sauce.

The workmen engaged in the manufacture of these bottles earn on an average $5 per day, but by reason of their superior skill Messrs. Craven claim that they can compete in the English market with the cheapest manufacturers abroad and furnish much better bottles than the English can make. The firm are firm believers in tariff reform, and a universal market for their wares.—Philadelphia Record.

How to Get a Revenue.

Protectionists claim that if we adopted free trade in the United States wages would have to be reduced to the level of wages paid in European countries. Why is it that under the alleged free trade of England wages have not been reduced to the level of wages paid in protectionist France, Germany, Italy, Russia, China et al.? And why is it that in States where high wages are paid we have not had to reduce wages to the level of those paid in States where low wages are paid? We have free trade between the States of this nation. This fact accounts in part for the great prosperity of the country.

If protection keeps wages high is it because of this that when changes are to be made in the tariff the beneficiaries of this robber system, or their lobbyists, hasten to Washington to advocate no change in the schedule or to make it higher? If this is the reason, why is it that protected employers pay lower wages than unprotected industries, and at every opportunity reduce wages or have a strike or lockout when in increase in wages is requested a la Homestead? Verily, it looks as though the protectionist barons would advocate free trade if it would reduce wages. The contract labor law was passed to prevent these same protected employers from importing laborers to work for low wages.

But if we adopt free trade, where are we to get revenues from to pay the expenses of the government? Some persons advocate a tax on incomes. Others claim that the only just method is by taxing into the public treasury the rental value of land? Why? Because the value of land is caused by increase in population and by public improvements, and that value justly belongs to the whole community. The necessity for government and the value of land are both the result of population, and the revenue of ground rent from the one should pay the cost of the other. Whenever ground rent is thus taken for the support of government, industry and enterprise will be relieved from taxation, and no inducement will remain for holding land without using it. Land speculation will cease and natural opportunities will be opened to labor. Workmen who cannot make fair bargains with employers will then be able to employ themselves; not that everybody will take to farming, but that with agricultural, mining and building lands accessible to those willing to put them to use there would be no lack of employment, and wages in all industries would rise to their natural level—the full earnings of labor.—W. L. Crossman, in American Industries.

Duty on Coal.

TARIFF RATES ON COAL IMPOSED BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

It appears, therefore, that our impost tax of 75 cents per ton on bituminous coal is exceeded only by the little kingdom of Denmark, which assesses 80 cents per ton on tariff tax. Fifteen countries of Europe and the Pacific put us to shame by placing all coals upon the free list; and particularly striking is this fact, when we contemplate it, that in the production of bituminous coal, the United States stands first, having mined during 1892, 110,000,000 tons; of anthracite, 48,000,000; thus making a total production of fuel in this country last year of 158,000,000 tons.

New England and the Northwest ask for free coal. Accessible to our section of the country are the great deposits of bituminous fuel in Nova Scotia, and to the northwest are the coal fields of British Columbia.—T. Aubrey Byrne, in American Industries.

A Halt to Jingoism.

The sugar lobby has failed to enforce annexation of Hawaii upon the Senate. Representations made by naval officers had undue effect on the President, but a thorough investigation of the claims made by Minister Stevens caused Secretary Foster to disavow his hasty if not collusive action and to induce the Senate, according to the latest reports, to defer consideration of the question altogether at this session. The longer annexation can be postponed the more certain is the moral sense of the American people to overcome the conspirators who are ready to sacrifice every principle dear to the American people in order to get a sugar bounty before Congress shall repeal the law by which it is now to be had.—Chicago Herald.

American Women Might Try This.

The French newspapers tell of a very interesting match that came off in France. Two women in good society challenged each other to talk fast. Each was to utter as many words as possible in a fixed time. Each woman talked three consecutive hours. One uttered 203,500 words. The other won the match with 206,080 words.

A TERRIBLE TALE.

And the Resultant Tragedy Was Left to the Imagination.

Several gentlemen, sitting together in the smoking compartment of a Pullman car, fell to relating their experiences in railroad accidents. Four or five adventures of the sort had been related, when an Englishman in the party declared that all these stories were as nothing compared with a railway tragedy in his own country, of which he had been an unwilling spectator. Of course he was at once called upon to tell the story.

"Five years ago," the Englishman said, "I took the 6 o'clock train one morning from Bristol to go to a town about twenty miles distant. It was a local branch road. As you are no doubt aware, the English locomotives are not furnished with comfortable cabs for engineer and fireman—or as we call them, the driver and the stoker—as yours are. Those two persons are practically out-of-doors.

"Our train had gone on without incident for some miles, when I, who was in one of the foremost carriages, heard loud voices, apparently of persons in a violent quarrel, somewhere in front of me. I put my head out of the carriage window, and saw that the engine-driver and stoker were engaged in a fight on the engine.

"Their angry words became fewer and fewer as their blows rained thicker and thicker upon each other. Finally they clutched in a desperate struggle. The driver seemed to be engaged in an attempt to force the stoker off the engine.

"I shouted to the guard, but he was out of hearing in the after part of the train. Nearer and nearer the two desperate men came to the step of the engine. The driver gave his antagonist a desperate push; the stoker saw that he was gone, but clung to the driver. A last terrible struggle, and over both went to the ground.

"This left the engine entirely unattended. Evidently the steam had been left fully turned on, for the train began to rush forward at an increasing rate of speed. On and on we went, at a pace which became terrible. No one could get to the locomotive, and no one knew how to handle it if he could have got there.

"We whizzed past a station where we should have stopped, and caught glimpses of astonished faces looking at us. Past another station—past a third—past a fourth, on we whirled, at an even swifter speed.

"Then we all knew that the next station was a terminus. When we reached that we should be hurled against a buffer, and the train would be wrecked. What was to be done?

"Nothing was done. We plunged on and on. The terminus came into view. It came nearer and nearer, seeming to bulge swiftly into greater size as we bore down upon it. In a moment more——"

The door of the smoking compartment opened, and the porter called out, "Albany!"

"Good-day, gentlemen!" said the Englishman, getting up quickly. "Sorry, but this is my station!"

He disappeared, and the others in the smoking compartment never heard how the story came out.

NEW ORDNANCE FOR THE FAIR.

There was recently shipped from Providence, R. I., for the Government exhibit at the World's Fair a mortar and carriage of a new type. The pieces are somewhat unique in principle and construction. The accompanying cuts represent them just as they will appear at the Exposition. The carriage being fourteen feet in diameter, no railroad could take them out of New England on account of the low bridges, and it was found necessary to ship them to New York by water, where they were reshipped on the Pennsylvania road to Chicago.

Two Weddings.

The late Duke Maximilian, father of the Empress of Austria, was one of the most simple and affable of men. One day, as he was traveling on the train between his country residence and Vienna, he fell into conversation with a banker from Stuttgart.

"Are you going to Vienna?" asked the Duke.

"Yes; to see my daughter. She has just been married."

"Ah!" said the Duke; "mine has just married, also. Was it a good match?"

"Excellent! And that of your daughter?"

"Not bad, either."

"My daughter married the Banker Goldschmidt."

"Mine, the Emperor of Austria."

Could Then Lick Stamps.

The chance that General John Corse, who "held the fort" at Allatoona, and, after a terrible battle, declared that he could "lick all hell yet," may again be appointed to office, recalls to the Boston Globe this incident: When he was made postmaster of Boston, the newspapers were full of stories of his valor, and scores of clippings were sent to him at his home in Winchester. Repetitions of the phrase just quoted were abundant. At length, one day, his wife, half in jest and half in a feeling of annoyance, said to the general: "There is one consolation at least, and that is you have got through licking all hell, and will occupy yourself for some time to come in licking postage-stamps."

The Legislature.

The co-employe's bill, in an amended form, got through both Houses Saturday. The appropriation bill includes $50,000 for the World's Fair. The appropriation of $110,000 for the Feeble Minded Home passed the Senate but was defeated in the House. The bill giving new parties watchers at the polls got through the House but was beaten in the Senate.

There was a free-and-easy feeling in both Houses Monday. A good deal of joviality prevailed, and a number of resolutions were passed by both branches congratulatory, complimentary, etc. The report of the Committee on Affairs of the Prison South, giving results of the recent investigation, were read in both Houses, and the majority report, exonerating the prison management, was concurred in.

The minority report was spread upon the minutes.

The Senate took up the bill empowering the State to levy a tax on the gross receipts of the telegraph, telephone, express, and sleeping car companies. The opening session was marked by a message from the Governor, in which he said that this measure, as well as the bill amending certain sections of the new tax law, and known as the Administrative Tax bill, was "carefully prepared by the State Tax Commissioners" and "I am convinced that their provisions are perfectly fair.

"They are of the most vital interest to the tax-payers of the State, and have been drafted in a spirit of absolute fairness to all interests concerned, and with the greatest regard to the decisions of the Supreme Court, and, I am informed, will add $25,000,000 of property to the tax duplicate that is now escaping taxation. I am willing to waive my constitutional right, and will receive and consider the bill even if presented to me on this, the sixth day of March."

Immediately upon receiving this message the Senate took up certain pending amendments to the first-named bill, and the original bill was changed, making it the duty of the Prosecutors of the various judicial districts in which taxes are due and unpaid to bring suit. The bill passed by a vote of 40 to 4. It was also passed by the House.

Both Houses adjourned sine die.

It is currently believed that the Clover Leaf railroad difficulty at Frankfort can only be adjusted by placing the road in the hands of a receiver, and this is expected to occur at any day.

The Richmond Telegram has changed hands, and is now to be run by a stock company. The incorporators are H. D. Bertch, L. V. Armstrong, S. W. Gillilan, A. D. Hosterman, J. N. Gawer, and E. S. Kelly.

Doc Anderson of Franklin, was doing some carpenter work at his home. He placed a hatchet above his head, but it fell, the blade striking him on the nose and cutting off a large portion of that member.

The recent storm destroyed the large frame barn of Willis Reese, southeast of Muncie. A $200 horse was killed. A great deal of damage was done by the storm in that part of the County. Mr. Reese's loss is over $1,000.

Eva Rose, the only support of a widowed invalid mother, at Madison, committed suicide by taking poison. The mother is dying from her troubles. A son in Anderson was telegraphed for to attend the sister's funeral, but an answer came that he was also dying.

Jacob Price, an old man near Jordan village, concealed $300 in a tea chest in his cellar. The other night two burglars entered the house and, finding him alone in bed, choked him until he revealed the hiding place of his money, which they secured and escaped.

Willett Fisher of New York, who was injured in the L. E. & W. wreck at Peru last January and has been lying in the hospital at that city since, has brought suit against the railroad company for $10,000 damages, alleging defective bridge, track, and trestle approach.

A strange man called at the hospital in Peru, and asked to see Jack Cavanaugh, the young man who was recently assaulted by Miss Sadie Baughman, who threw nitric acid in his face. On being refused, the caller stated that if Cavanaugh appeared against the girl he would kill him within a year. He said 'tis claimed, that Cavanaugh ruined her and must suffer for it.

At Brazil, while Jasper young was teasing his wife by snapping a revolver in her face, which he supposed to be empty, a cartridge was discharged and the bullet entered Mrs. Young's left eye, tearing it almost from its socket. The bullet penetrated to the region of the brain. Physicians were immediately summoned and announced the injury fatal. The couple had been married only a short time.

Daniel Baines, engineer of the spoke and rim factory of Greensburg, received an injury from which he died shortly afterwards. He was blowing off the mud valve when a piece of pipe flew up and struck him on the forehead. He started to walk home, and on his way fell on the pavement and soon after died from a blood clot on the brain. He leaves a wife, a bride of six months, and three children by a former marriage.

Mrs. A. F. Ramsey, Charley Ramsey, and Homer Siegler narrowly escaped death by being asphyxiated at Crawfordsville. Vapor escaped from a natural gas stove. They're still in a critical condition.

John Wise, an old resident of Wabash County, who, years ago, gained considerable notoriety as a criminal, died from the effects of being kicked in the abdomen by a horse. The horse had fallen in its stall and was lying on its back, when Wise, in assisting him to get up, was struck in the bowels by one of the animal's hoofs. Inflammation set in and death resulted.

A cause is now pending in the Circuit Court at Marion, which will affect thousands of acres of land in that county, as well as in Wabash and Miami Counties. William Poconga, Chief of the Miami tribe of Indiana, claims exemption from taxation according to a treaty made between the Miamis and the United States over seventy years ago. He claims, also, that a correct interpretation of the treaty removes the liability of the Miami Indians in contracts of every description. The case has already attracted considerable attention. The best legal talent in the State has been employed. It is not likely that a settlement will be reached this side of the United States Supreme Court.

The Use of an Enemy.

Always keep an enemy on hand, a brisk, hearty, active enemy. Remark the use of an enemy:

1. The having of one is proof that you are somebody. Wishy-washy, empty, worthless people never have enemies. Men who never move, never run against anything; and when a man is thoroughly dead and utterly buried, nothing ever runs against him.

2. An enemy is, to say the least, not partial to you. He will not flatter. He will not exaggerate your virtues. It is very probable that he will slightly magnify your faults. The benefit of that is two-fold. It permits you to know that you have faults and are, therefore, not a monster; and it makes them of such size as to be visible and manageable.

3. In addition your enemy keeps you wide-awake. He does not let you sleep at your post. There are two that always keep watch, namely, the lover and the hater. Your lover watches that you may sleep. He keeps off noises, excludes light, adjusts surroundings, that nothing may disturb you. Your hater watches that you may not sleep. He stirs you up when you are napping. He keeps your faculties on the alert. Even when he does nothing, he will have put you in such a state of mind that you cannot tell what he will do next.

4. He is a detective among your friends. You need to know who your friends are, and who are not, and who are your enemies. When your enemy goes to one who is neither friend nor enemy, and assails you, the indifferent one will have nothing to say or chime in, not because he is your enemy, but because it is so much easier to assent than to oppose, and especially than to refute. But your friend will take up cudgels for you on the instant. He will deny everything and insist on proof, and proving is very hard work

The Mustache.

The mustache is becoming very fashionable in France. Parisians have been hunting for the origin of the custom of wearing this adornment, and the legend of most popular acceptance just now ascribes it to Spain. At a period after the Moorish invasion, when the Christian and Moslem population became so mixed that it was so hard to say which were Moors and which Spaniards, the pious Spaniards hit upon the mustache as a means of identification. They permitted the hair on the upper lip to grow, and also a tuft on the under lip, an outline of the cross being thus formed. Thus, say the Parisians, the mustache became a symbol of liberty, equality, and fraternity.

Far and Wide.

Not on this broad continent alone, but in malarial-breeding tropical regions, in Guatemala, Mexico, South America, the Isthmus of Panama, and elsewhere, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters affords to inhabitants and sojourners protection against malaria. The miner, the freshly arrived immigrant, the tiller of the virgin soil newly robbed of its forests by the ax of the pioneer, find in the superb antifebrile specific a preserver against the poisonous miasma which in vast districts rich in natural resources, is yet fertile in disease. It annihilates disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, fortifies those who use it against rheumatic ailments bred and fostered by outdoor exposure; infuses genial warmth into a frame chilled by a rigorous temperature, and robs of their power to harm morning and evening mists and vapors laden with hurtfulness; strengthens the weak and conquers incipient kidney trouble.

Origin of "Dixie."

The Southern papers are again discussing the authorship of the song "Dixie," without, however, throwing any new light on the subject. About ten years ago the Magazine of American History declared that the song originated in the North, and had no reference to Mason and Dixon's line, but was sung by a lot of New Jersey negroes, who were sold into the far South. They had belonged to a man named Dixie, and they naturally improvised a refrain about him. General Longstreet says the song originated with a number of Southern cadets at West Point. And it is also claimed that it was composed for Dan Bryant's minstrels in 1860.

How's This?

The Bibliomaniac.

"You have a fine library. I suppose you read a great deal?"

"No, I don't. It takes all my time making the money to pay for these books."—Puck.

Still Bright and Booming.

Many bright and useful publications come round to us annually, and the sight of them is as refreshing and welcome as the faces of friends on New Year's Day. Friends' faces are kept in remembrance; good books for reference, inasmuch as they lead and teach us what is to be done in many painful straits. One such publication, always foremost, is before us, brimful of sound advice and the raciest bits of fun, original and copyrighted, from the pens of such noted humorists as Bill Nye, Opie P. Read, Danbury News-Man, and others. It is a free gift of the season at the druggists' counter, and will be sought for as the highly popular St. Jacobs Oil Family Almanac and Book of Health and Humor, 1893. The work differs somewhat from its former editions, but is none the less attractive, and in many of its features is the superior of former numbers. One special feature is the "Offer of One Hundred Dollars," open to all contestants, the details of which a perusal of the book will more fully give. The almanac is sent forth by The Charles A. Vogeler Company, Baltimore, Md., proprietors of some of the best known and most reliable medicinal preparations. A copy will be mailed to any address on receipt of a 2-cent stamp by the above firm.

In Death.

The custom is universal in Madrid of closing one of the two outer doors of the house when a person dies. This door is kept closed for a novena, or period of nine days.

A Clean, Nice-Fitting Collar

Is what every neat housewife desires for the male members of her household; this, however, is not at all times so easily obtained when dependence is placed on the ordinary means of securing it, but those who wear the "Linene" collars and cuffs are absolutely free from the annoyances arising from the defective work in the laundry. The advertisement of Reversible Collar Company in another column of this issue will enable those who desire something nice in the way of collars and cuffs to obtain a sample of the "Linene" goods and to test their merits. Those who try them usually continue to wear them.

Big Heads.

Big heads do not always indicate intellect. Professor Virchow, the German scientist, points out that the Greeks, one of the most intellectual of nations, are one of the smallest headed of races.

If in Need of a Remedy for a Sore Throat, or a Bad Cough or Cold, use promptly Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, a useful medicine to keep in the house, because of its great helpfulness in all Lung and Throat troubles.

Pork is so high that an imitation of ham gravy has appeared

The New Bread.

ROYAL unfermented bread, made without yeast, avoiding the decomposition produced in the flour by yeast or other baking powder; peptic, palatable and most healthful; may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

Can be made only with Royal Baking Powder.

Receipt for Making One Loaf.

ONE quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

He Made Allowance.

A French journal reports the case of a man who entered a coffee-house and sat down near a customer who was reading the morning newspaper which belonged to the establishment.

"After you with the paper, if you please," said the new-comer.

The other man nodded assent, and went on reading, but at the end of half an hour had hardly finished the first column. Just as the waiting customer was about making a second and perhaps impatient application, he noticed that the reader had lost one of his organs of sight. His resentment vanished.

"Ah," said he, in a low voice, "I am not surprised. The poor man has only one eye, and has to read everything twice over."

The Columbian Stamp in Trouble.

Ten miles from Asheville is a postoffice known as Candler. Mr. J. S. Henry of this city sends a good many letters there, and lately has been using the Columbian stamps. On Thursday he received a letter from his correspondent there saying that the postmaster at Candler had made him pay regular letter postage on every letter he (Mr. Henry) had sent with the Columbian stamp on it, and compelled him to state who it was sending letters "with those pictures on them for stamps" so he could "have the man indicted." In vain did Mr. Henry's correspondent explain and remonstrate. The letters with the Columbian stamps on them were not forthcoming until, as the postmaster said, "the postage was paid."—Charlottsville, N. C., Observer.

In the Same Language.

Many great men have written illegibly, and it was suspected that this was the reason that Judge Briefly cultivated a hopelessly bad handwriting.

A hint that ought to have had a good effect was given the Judge by a client who called and found that the lawyer had left a note for him.

The client sat down and studied over the note for a while. He could make nothing out of the hasty scrawl. Then he wrote beneath it four or five lines that looked as if they might have been meant for writing, followed in this sentence in a plain hand:

The Teeth.

Much is expected of the use of electricity to deaden sensibility in teeth that are to be filled or extracted. As to extraction, it is announced that already the use of an electric current delivered through electrodes containing cotton saturated with cocaine or ether has produced complete local anæsthesia so that teeth have been extracted without pain.

A Silkworm's Thread.

The longest continuous fibre known at the present time is that of silk. A cocoon of a well-fed silkworm will often yield a thread 1,000 feet long, and an instance is mentioned in which one has been produced containing 1,295 feet without a break.

Bayonet.

The bayonet is so called because it was first used, it is said, near Bayonne. A Basque regiment, having exhausted their ammunition, and being hard pressed, placed long knives in the barrels of their muskets and made the original bayonet charge.

I Vote for Hood's

Forty Years in the Ministry

I Should Lose the Use of It.

I felt better soon after I began with Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken four bottles the rheumatism entirely left me. I have been a minister of the M. E. church 40 years, and like many others of sedentary habits have suffered with Dyspepsia and Insomnia, but while taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I have had a good appetite, food digested well, I gained several pounds, and sleep better. I vote for Hood's." Rev. W. R. Puffer, Richford, Vt.

The Modern Way

Commends itself to the well-formed, to do pleasantly and effectually what was formerly done in the crudest manner and disagreeably as well. To cleanse the system and break up colds, headaches and fevers without unpleasant after effects, use the delightful liquid laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Delusive Hopes.

When Capt. Cook first visited Tahiti, the natives were using nails of wood, bone, shell, and stone. When they saw iron nails, they fancied them to be shoots of some very hard wood, and, desirous of securing such a valuable commodity, they planted them in their gardens.

Locations for Factories.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company desires to have the raw material on its 6,150 miles of road in Illinois, Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota, and North Dakota utilized.

In addition to the vast agricultural resources, its territory comprises forests of hard and soft wood, mines of iron and other metals, coal and other minerals, quarries, clays of all kinds, tanbark, flax, and other products. Water-powers (both river and artesian) are also still available.

A number of new factories have been induced to locate—largely through the instrumentality of this Company—at enterprising towns on its lines.

As the interest of the Company is to secure the location of industries at places where the surroundings will insure their permanent success, the information furnished a particular industry is pertinent and reliable.

The people on the whole System are one live and thriving community of business men in whose midst it is safe and profitable to settle. Local capital is being largely invested in local factories, and taken as a whole, the country through which the road runs is commanding attention as the coming industrial territory of the United States. Solid concerns, manufacturers, large or small, who thoroughly understand their business are sought for at suitable points on the road.

Individuals or companies wishing to embark capital in Western industry can find a profitable field.

For particulars relative to industrial advantages on the line, address Luis Jackson, Industrial Commissioner, C., M. & St. P. R'y, 160 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Three Thousand Tons of Shine.

Morse Bros., of Canton, Mass., made the largest sale of "The Rising Sun Stove Polish" during the year 1892 they have ever made since they began its manufacture, thirty years ago. They sold the enormous quantity of seventy-nine thousand two hundred and eighty gross, weighing two thousand eight hundred and fifty-five tons, which would load a train of over two hundred cars.

These figures give some idea of the great popularity and increasing sale of "The Rising Sun Stove Polish."

Drs. Townsend Coming.

Among many testimonials we find these: I had spinal curvature that doctors told me was incurable and I am now well. Another said: I was given up by fourteen doctors, who told me I had Bright's disease of the kidneys, but thanks to Drs. Townsend I am a well man. Another: I was bedriden for over ten years with a complication of female diseases. Some of the most eminent specialists, including three professors in medical colleges, and they all told me I could not get well. Four years ago I placed my case in the hands of the Drs. Townsend, and in 5 months and 4 days from the time I commenced treatment I dressed myself and walked across the room, and in another month I felt as well as I ever did in my life and have remained in excellent health ever since. Another says: I had epilepsy for fifteen years and was cured. Another: My whole nervous system was broken down and I was practically an old man at 31. I could not sleep, my hands trembled, I would get dizzy and forgetful and became so bad that I had to give up business. I consulted many doctors, the best I thought, in the country, and finally went to Europe, and spent over $9,000 and three years' time and was no better, but gradually got worse. I returned home to die and closed up all my business affairs. At last a friend, who had been cured, advised me to go to the Drs. Townsend. Without any faith, but to please him, I went, and to my great surprise they told me they could cure me, and they made good their their word. for from the first dose of medicine I commence to improve, and in twelve months I was completely cured. A lady says: My case was pronounced to be tubercular consumption by seven of our best physicians, and under whose treatment I got worse all the time. The Drs. Townsend cured me in just four months. One says: I had catarrh that affected my head so I was almost crazy. It went into my ears, and oh! such a roaring, I was almost wild; it had gone down also upon my lungs and the doctor said it was the bronchitis. Thanks to the Drs Townsend I am entirely well. Another says: I was cured of a bad cancer. A lady of great refinement, who had receiveed serious injuries during a confinement, was cured after other specialists utterly failed. Thousands a cases similar to the above might be cited.

Examination by letter or in person free and sacredly confidential. If unable to see the doctors write full peticulars Thousands treated by correspondence. Address, with stamp:

We hope that she may be restored to her husband and family, and enjoy many years of happy life in her western home

Frank Reynolds, who lives just outside our city limits, had a curious experience with fire in his residence last week. His wife and himself thought they smelled pine wood charring in the evening, but failed to discover anything, and finally retired, still being sensible of the odor of burning wood. Mr. R. woke up about two o'clock in the morning and discovered a light in the adjoining room, and hastily investigating he found the wainscoting blazing vigorously. A bucket of water extinguished the blaze He found that the soot had accumulated in the bottom of the chimney in the cellar, and had caught fire from a spark from above, and so heated the chimney as to set fire to the wood work on the outside. The damage was trifling and fully insured, but shows what unexpected causes bring about a disastrous fire.

A late prominent medicine manufacturer once gave his opinion that we couldn't make Brant's Balsam a great seller, because we gave such large bottles for the money, there wouldn't be the large profits made by other manufacturers with which to advertise the goods. He hadn'd learned that quality and quantity are advertising always fully appreciated, as proven by the rapid growth of sale of Brant's Balsam, the leading seller everywhere. The Columbian Fair.

E. W. Allen, secretary of "Our Friends' Co operative Bureau" of Chicago, was through here last week, as his duties take him to various parts of the country. The business of the Bureau with which he is associated is to furnish first-class accommodations to visitors attending the World's Fair, and at a reasonable rate. Some of the first questions that come up when a man concludes to attend the fair are these: "How may I be sure of anything like comfortable accommodations at reasonable rates after I am in Chicago? Where am I to stop, and how about transportation to the grounds? How about meals and what will they cost?" The Bureau proposes to help the visitor out on all these points. It will lease a number of buildings at convenient points near the center of the city, and not too far from the grounds. Here good rooms can be had at a reasonable rate. Parlors will be furnished, so there can be general meetings of friends from the same neighborhood; arrangements as to beds for one, or for two persons, good meals at 25 cents, good carriges to convey members to the grounds and back, and other means for speedy transportation from and to the various depots, care of baggage, etc., and so much crowding and waiting for street cars and express wagons will be avoided, and the same service secured at a much more reasonable rate, and with no delay. They have their own dining rooms, bath rooms, a Bureau of Information, and facilities for receiving and sending mail. They also have arrangements to help secure excursion rates on railroads, and will have things so tickets can be bought for entrance to the fair, without the frequent delay on crowded days,—and probably all days will be crowded. Now how are all these advantages secured? By becoming a member of "Our Friends Co-Operative Bureau," To become a member a fee of $10 is required which gives the member the above named advantages for ten days. This sum will be more than saved as may be seen; members are furnished FREE with bus fare and express on baggage to and from depot to rooms, car fare to the fair grounds and back once each day for nine days, free use of parlors, offices, bath rooms, and information by guides. Besides this, you have the use of a carriage ten hours, at some time during the ten days. These items at present rates would foot up $23 and by becoming a member of the Bureau, you have them free. Rates for rooms will be $1 to $2.50 per day for each person. Further information can be had by addressing Mr. Allen, at Monadnock Building, Chicago, or calling on the agents here, Messrs. Rickel and Sprott.

Remembered the Pastor.

FAIRFIELD CENTER, IND.

MR. EDITOR:

Our little burg is not dead yet, judging from the appearance of things on last Wednesday morning. Notwithstanding the fact that it rained from early morn till late at night, looking down Main street towards the Lutheran parsonage it seemed as though it had rained down quite a sprinkling of men and women who had gathered together to make glad the hearts of their pastor and family. They came from north, south, east and west laden with baskets, boxes and bundles large and small.

After refreshments were served a survey of things revealed the fact that enough canned fruit had been bought to last a year; sugar, tea, coffee, pork, potatoes, apples, etc., etc. Not only did this generosity extend to the occupants of the house, but also the pony in the stable fared sumptuously. A handsome carpet of 25 yards, they left in kind remembrance of their pastor's efforts in behalf of their spiritual welfare.

Summing up the amount left, they found the sum to be $63.62. This makes the second donation Pastor Walker has received within six months. The kind people of Sedan and surrounding country came in sled loads the latter part of January bringing many kind tokens of regard. Among other things was a handsome robe with Newfoundland dog skin center. This donation amounted to $40. Both sum up to $103.62.

Such gifts leave a lasting impression upon the minds and hearts of the receivers, and it is hoped that the benefits derived may not be one sided, but that the people in giving may be richly blessed as well as their pastor in receiving.

Vick's Poetical Catalogue.

This new and unique catalogue from the best known seed house in the world, is unlike anything the world ever saw before as far as we are able to say. Nearly every leading flower and plant, besides the usual description, is accompanied by a poetical selection from some well known author, in which is a dainty allusion to the flower in question, a description of some of its beauties or properties, or its "language" as its real or fancied virtues and properties are sometimes called. The book would be valuable for these alone, as many of these bits of poetry are rare, and some difficult to find. It must have cost these enthusiastic gardeners a vast amount of trouble and no little expense, to compile all this literature and attach each gem to its own particular flower. Send to Vicks, Rochester, N. Y., if you wish a copy of this "Poet's Number," Free to all customers of last year. To others, 10 cents.

Indiana's Educational Exhibit.

[Ft. Wayne Journal.]

W. N. Hailman, educational agent of the Indiana world's fair commissioners, has filed an outline of the exhibit with B. F. Havens. The preparations so far embrace eighteen bulletin boards, setting forth school organization, funds and history of various institutions; a map of the state, showing the location of all the school houses; school books, numerous photographic displays and kindergarten displays. Nearly all of the exhibit is now in Laporte, packed, and all will be on the world's fair ground by April 3.

Stricken Down with Heart Disease.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: I feel it my duty, as well as a pleasure, to publish, unsolicited, to the world the benefit received from DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE REMEDIES. I was stricken down with Heart Disease and its complications, a rapid pulse varying from 90 to 140 beats per minute, a choking or burning sensation in the wind pipe, oppression in the chest, much pain in the region of the heart and below lower rib, pain in the arms, shortness of breath, sleeplessness, weakness and general debility. The arteries in my neck would throb violently, the throbbing of my heart could be heard across a large room and would shake my whole body. I was so nervous that I could not hold my hand steady. I have been under the treatment of eminent physicians, and have taken gallons of Patent Medicine without the least benefit. A friend recommended your remedies. She was cured by Dr. Miles' remedies I have taken three bottles of your New Heart Cure and two bottles Nervine. My pulse is normal, I have no more violent throbbing of the heart. I AM A WELL MAN. I sincerely recommend every one with symptoms of Heart Disease to take Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies and be cured.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It is a great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn, Ind. tf wholesome qualities they add to the food. Some countries have absolutely prohibited the sale of bread containing alum.

Three days is a very short time in which to cure a bad case of rheumatism; but it can be done if the proper treatment is adopted, as will be seen by the following from James Lambert, of New Brunswick, Ill.: "I was badly afflicted with rheumatism in the hips and legs, when I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It cured me in three days I am all right to-day: and would insist on every one who is afflicted with that terrible disease to use Chamberlain's Pain Balm and get well at once." 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Even small doses of alum, given to children, have produced fatal results, while cases of heartburn, indigestion, griping constipation, dyspepsia, and various kindred gastric troubles from irritation of the mucous membrane, caused by the continuous use of food prepared with the alum or alum-phosphate powders, are familiar in the practice of every physician.

It is not possible that any prudent housewife, any loving mother, will knowingly use an article of food that will injure the health of her household, or perhaps cause the death of her children.

How shall the dangerous alum powders be distinguished? And how shall the danger to health from their use be avoided?

Generally, alum powders may be known from the price at which they are sold, or from the fact that they are accompanied by a gift, or are disposed of under some scheme. The alum powder costs but a few cents a pound to make, and is often sold at 20 or 25 cents a pound. If some present is given with

ACADEMIC HISTORY.

By W. H. McIntosh.

Courier readers and old-time Academy students will look with pleased surprise upon the above picture of a building familiarly associated with their youthful days and Auburn's humbler existence.

To most it would have been difficult to idealize the town's early pride—the first great step in her educational advancement made nearly forty years ago.

Although the Academy has become a vague recollection, its corps of instructors dead, departed or engaged in other fields or different pursuits, and its hundreds of youthful students matured and scattered far and near; although upon its once familiar site from which all vestige of occupation has long since disappeared, a thrifty young grove is rising and luxuriant grasses grow, yet memories haunt the cherished spot of youthful friendships and ardent study, devoted teachers and responsive pupils and to awaken these in maturer experienced years, somewhat of its history is here presented and a roll call of those who in the seventeen years of its existence sought to give instruction within its plain, old-fashioned rooms.

On July 19, 1853, a futile notice was given for a school meeting called for Aug. 9th at 4 p. m. for the purpose of voting on building a school house. The call was premature and a room in the old court house and shabby, small buildings were temporary make-shifts.

Two years later, the necessity for better school accommodations became pressing and the entire attention of the town board voicing public demand, became centered in obtaining an eligible site for a school house and in preparations to build upon it.

Sept. 20, '55 Messrs. Long, Berry and Spangler, a committee on site chose lots No. 56 and 57 W. A. and paid for them $150. All funds that came into the town's treasury were pledged in payment of building expense. Plans and specifications were prepared by Messrs. Barney and Houghton acting under instruction and an invitation for sealed proposals till Jan. 1, 1856, was advertised in the Democratic Messenger. On Jan. 21, six proposals had been presented and of these that of O. C. Houghton was accepted and to him the contract was awarded to do specified work including the building of a cupola, for $1325. He gave bond in the sum of $2,000, have to a building up according to contract by Jan. 1, 1857. His sureties were E. W. Fosdick, W. Park, V. Weaver, J. H. Ford and W. Griswold. Payment was to be made by orders on the town treasury, less $225, due on acceptance of the building by the board.

Mr. Houghton as a preliminary grubbed and cleared the ground, then got out his lumber and put up the frame but the close of Dec. '56 found the work incomplete and extension of time was granted.

During the summer of 1857, specifications for inside finish were drafted by Houghton and proposals invited. Wm A. Lowrey was the only person who filed an offer and July 11, he was given the contract to lay the second floor and to do the inside work for $775.

Messrs. Brandt, Houghton and Dickinson were appointed a committee to supervise the work. Mr. Lowrey in turn was obliged to ask further time but finally completed his contract and in the first suit of law in which Auburn was a party, he was successful and insured his full contract price.

The first floor being available, Messrs. Weldon, Griswold and Dickinson, school trustees, in the summer of 1858 employed as the first corps of teachers for a twelve weeks' term, John H. Moore as principal assisted by Miss Marcia Gray and Miss Vesta M. Ward.

The furniture firm of J. and E Ettinger furnished two tables with chairs for use of teachers and Aug. 22 1858, the school opened and inaugurated the graded free school system in the town of Auburn.

In the following November a contract for completion of the second and third stories of the school building was given to James W. Case for $670, the work to be done by July 1, 1859.

This made the cost of the academy $2,770 to that date.

In March. 1859 Andrew Larimore applied for use of the school house in which to conduct a select school and consent was given conditioned that no interference would be permitted with tools or material of Mr. Case at work finishing the upper rooms.

The academy when completed was as seen in the engraving, three storied. One outer door gave access to all rooms. From an entry within this door, two inner doors opened, the one on the right to the primary department, that on the left to the intermediate room. Winding stairs right and left led up to the second floor where two rooms were likewise entered by doors, that to the right opening into the grammar and that to the left into the high school departments. The third story was arranged as a rhetorical room, having raised platforms at the east and west ends. Here students were wont to practice reading from the examples of Kidd and Putnam and to drill upon intended declamations.

There were recitation rooms on the first and second floors at the north end of each school room and in them a small part of the south wall was utilized as a black board.

The seats were old-fashioned, cumbrous and unstable. Outline maps in colors hung upon the walls of the high school room and the space before the teachers' desks which stood upon raised platforms was occupied in each department by recitation seats to which classes invariably came.

By an ingenious device, it was so arranged that whenever it was desired on public days to unite the high school and grammar rooms, the panels which separated them, pendent on hinges, could be swung up and supported upon iron braces.

Prior to its destruction, the third story of the building had been partitioned into two rooms, seated with new improved school furniture and good slated blackboard surface had been prepared through the enterprise of Calvin P. Houser, agent, seconded by the school board. These elevated but pleasant rooms were occupied by advanced classes.

In August 1859, Mr. Larimore was hired for a fall and a winter term and his teachers were Laura Nimmons, Elizabeth Smith, Hannah Davis and Vesta Ward. The school became known as "The Auburn Union School," and gave bright promise of a prosperous future with growing reputation. In the spring of 1860, Messrs. Pierce and Griswold school trustees granted Mr. Larimore the use of the school house without rent for a third term of fourteen weeks. The close of this school year showed an attendance of 240 pupils, many of high grade of scholarship and the Auburn institute as it was termed began to attract outside notice with an increased patronage by "foreign scholars."

The first school board elected on a municipal ticket, Messrs. W. Park, J. M. Miller and E. B. Mott engaged Chester P. Hodge as principal of the "Auburn Seminary" as it began to be called, for fall and winter terms with Marilla Platter, Sarah V. Wheeler and Hannah Dav is assistants.

Prior to the opening of the winter term a successful teachers' institute was held in the seminary, at which Edward Wright, the first county school examiner presided and in which C. P. Hodge and J. H. Moore were instructors.

In the fall of 1861, V. F. Wise taught a select term followed by a regular engagement for the winter. Lodema Tannehill taught in the grammar department. His successer in 1862 was James E. Rose, assisted by Hadessa J. George, H. C. Coats, Mrs. Emma Ervan and Mrs. Henry Alling. Enrollment in all grades reached 300 pupils, and every township in the county except Fairfield was represented in the High School room.

In 1862 and '63, Mrs. V. M. Swarts taught both regular and select terms with marked success and fully upheld the high prestige of the school.

Charles A. Munn organized the schools at the fall session of 1863, as "The Auburn Male and Female Institute," with three departments, primary, junior and senior. John Stahl was in charge of the senior and Mrs. Swarts of the junior rooms. Many young people from outside profited by the teachings of Mr. Stahl, a studious, ambitious and well informed young man.

The school trustees in the fall of 1864, were S. W. Sprott, A. Larimore and Philip Fluke, who engaged Spencer Dills as principal, Mrs. H. J. Ralston as first, Miss Lamb as second and Mary Rush, third assistant for a winter term that began Dec. 5. The selection of a superintendent and principal was fortunate, judicious and advantageous securing somewhat of permanence for the management of the schools and widely extending the territory tributary to Auburn's educational interests.

In June, 1865, Mr. Dills was appointed school examiner for a term of three years and Aug. 20, following opened a home normal school of especial benefit to proposed district school teachers. His corps of teachers were T. J. Saxton, M. D. Rush, and Margaret S. Searight and his course of study was embraced in five grades covering the usual period of school attendance.

Mr. Dills was again employed in 1866 with T. J. Saxton for the grammar room. Miss Frank Clark intermediate, and Miss Julia Hoover the primary. Continued prosperity attended successive terms; the prestige of teachers was upheld and the standing of the school maintained so that when a new board consisting of Messrs. J. H. Ford, J. B. Casebeer and J. W. Case was organized, these gentlemen wisely retained existing teachers and hired in addition Elra Case, Miss Baldock and Miss Rainier.

Messrs. Dills and Saxton on April 8, 1867, conducted a select term at whose close, was issued the one only catalogue ever published of the teachers and students of the different departments.

In June 1868, the term of S. Dills as school examiner expired and Wm. H. McIntosh was appointed his successor. Mr. McIntosh taught a fall select term and was engaged as superintendent and principal for the regular winter term. Teachers in other departments were, Mollie M. Dinius, Frank Clark and Hattie Steele. Faithful, arduous service was rendered by each of these teachers to an extent unsurpassed before or since.

A new school board, Messrs. Sprott, Dills and Plumb engaged Charles M. Hertig as principal for the winter term of 1869, with Mary Young, Phœbe A. Babcock and Hattie Steele for teachers, in the other grades. Mr. Hertig was learned in languages for which he had no scholars but deficient in government and his stay was limited to but ten weeks.

On Dec. 5, 1870, Publius V. Hoffman a scholarly young man native of DeKalb county began a four month's term assisted by Mary Eberly, Mrs. Hattie Carper and Anna Rainier. He was succeeded for a spring term by Hermann P. Colgrove supported by M. F. Long, Mary Young and Phœbe A. Babcock.

In 1871, W. H. McIntosh again taught in the old academy beginning his fall term with Calvin P. Houser, Laura Clark and Emma Hull for his assistants. The term was so successful both in respect to members enrolled and interest manifested by pupil and patron that a new school board composed of Messrs. Griswold Davis and Hollopeter decided to retain these teachers during the winter. Ardor in study continued unabated throughout and closing exercises were impressive and memorable.

The fall term of 1872 was marked by the attendance of eighty young people in the High school department alone and the high grade of scholarship and the assiduity of these students has rarely been surpassed in the history of such schools.

Mr. McIntosh taught the winter and spring terms of 1872—3 assisted by M. F. Long, and Misses A. Rainier, E Hull and L. Hall In the summer of 1873, the school board consisting of J. J. Wood, Albert Totten and Wyllys Griswold engaged a new corps of teachers consisting of A. R. Hoffman, Mollie Schoonover, Hattie L. Griswold, Mattie Miller and Mary McNerney.

Mr. Hoffman approved himself an excellent teacher and his management gave such satisfaction that all these teachers were retained until the close of the spring of 1875. In the fall, increase of enrollment owing to municipal growth required the use of the third story of the building as previously stated, and Miss Frank Stahl and Miss Laura Clark were employed as additional teachers. During the fall and final term, on the night of Oct. 16, 1875, the old academy was discovered to be on fire, and without appliances to extinguish the flames, the congregated population of the town stood in the foreground helplessly and saw this pioneer structure destroyed together with all its furniture, text books and apparatus. It had performed its mission well and has become an historical incident in Auburn's history.

PEOPLE so constituted that they must object to everything are now inveighing against the new stamps. The example was set by Senator Wolcott in a moment when his senses were being soothed by the sound of his own voice. The complaint is that the stamps are too big to be licked. The allegation of inability to lick a postage stamp has heretofore been considered a disparagement.

ALL other inventors of means of rapid transit may hang their heads if Mr. Gates, of Cleveland, realizes his fond hopes. Evidently this is the kind of a bird we have been looking for.

DR. TALMAGE has been preaching about fishes, and is most enthusiastic in his praise of a fish diet, on which so many statesmen have grown great. He thinks that if every hard-working American could eat a few pounds of fish daily his stock of phosphorus would be so huge that he would thrill the world with his genius. The Doctor is careful not to tell the public what particular kind of fish he himself eats. It must be an unusually frisky one.

PARTICIPATION in scandals of large size appear to be deleterious to health. The death of Reinach in Paris and the cross-examination to which his stomach was subjected are still remembered. Now Serbi of Rome, a factor in the banking steals, has betaken himself from evidence, and it is feared that his stomach will prove as non-committal as the Frenchman's.

McLEOD, the Reading Railroad magnate, was once a Duluth pop maker. Perhaps it was in the manufacture of this damp and inflating commodity that he learned those lessons of the immense profits attaching to "wind" and "water" judiciously combined which subsequently stood him in such good stead in his manipulation of the Reading stocks.

MUCH interest has been taken in Dr. Parkhurst's efforts to point out to New York the error of its ways and the gentleman's notable success in this direction. His chief adviser and associate in the work of hastening the lagging millennial dawn, a man named Gardiner, has been sent to the Penitentiary for two years, some officious person having in turn pointed out his error, a kindly recognition of the value and benignity of fair play. The hope is expressed that the chariot wheels of reform may not be permanently clogged by the moral debris of Mr. Gardiner.

PERSONS who are inclined to take a gloomy view of pauperism and crime in America would do well to glance at the official reports of the municipality of London. The two years ending Jan. 1, 1891, the date of the last biennial report, the cost of maintaining the paupers of London was £2,340,000, the equivalent of about $11,700,000. During the two years there were 109,748 criminal convictions. While these figures show that the percentage of crime and pauperism in London greatly exceeds that of New York, the same report indicates a much lower percentage of attendance in the public schools.

ALASKA's resources and commercial possibilities are perhaps less understood than those of any other section of the Union. Nevertheless they are slowly being developed. The scenic and other natural attractions of this far northern country draw a considerable and ever increasing stream of travel to it every summer. Under these conditions the possibilities of the Territory cannot long remain hidden. Already a line of side-wheel steamers has been planned for service on the Yukon. The first vessel is now building. It will connect with Norton Sound steamers and run 2,200 miles up this great Alaskan River.

A NEWSPAPER report is to the effect that Archbishop Walsh, the famous Dublin prelate, alleges that intemperance is increasing in Ireland, and gives as a reason for his belief that arrests for drunkenness in 1887 were 79,000 in number, were 87,000 in 1888, 92,000 in 1889, and 100,500 in 1891. It is not probable that so able a man as Archbishop Walsh and so thorough a student of social sciences made the mistake of supposing that there were a greater number of drunkards because more drunkards had been arrested. The facts cited merely show that there was a more efficient police administration and a stricter guardianship over the unfortunate victims of the whisky habit.

His Point of View

Dean Hole in his "Memories" mentions an old gamekeeper who sorrowfully surveyed a model farm as if it had been some fair city overthrown by an earthquake and remarked dolefully, "I've known the time when that farm was as pretty a spot for game as could be found in the county, and now—why, there ain't a place where a partridge can make a nest, or hare or rabbit can hide!

"What's the good o' the place now?" he went on. "You see that grass field yonder. Well, you'll scarcely believe it, but it was once the beautifullest bog for a jack snipe as ever you'd wish to see. I've killed three couple of a morning among the tussocks and rushes afore they spoilt it with them drains!"

"Ah," said the Dean, "but you must not forget that there is more wheat and more food than before the land was reclaimed."

"Ya, and what's the use of it?" the gamekeeper said. "What's the good of wheat which it do not pay to raise when them fureigners are a-sending more'n we want? And more's the shame, the farmers never leave no stubble. No, the place is no good now?"

More Flattery than Truth.

One day as Sir Isaac Heard was with George the Third, it was announced that his majesty's horse was ready to start for hunting. "Sir Isaac," said the good monarch, "are you a judge of horses?" "In my younger days, please your majesty," was the reply, "I was a great deal among them." "What do you think of this, then?" said the king, who was by this time preparing to mount his favorite, and, without waiting for an answer, added: "We call him perfection." "A most appropriate name," replied the courtly herald, bowing as his majesty reached the saddle, "for he bears the best of characters."

Costly Cows.

Chicago correspondence:

Trudging away down in the southeast corner of Jackson Park, visitors to the grounds occasionally meet a man in top boots, with milk spattered on them, and with a milk-pail of greater or less capacity in one hand. There is a suggestiveness of the country about him not in keeping with the World's Columbian Exposition. Visitors who have drunk Chicago milk down-town can't reconcile the man to the scheme of metropolitan life. It looks like a mistake. It is not, however. Down in cattle house No. 1 are the most famous of America's Jersey milch cows and every morning the milkman squeezes the udder of a cow valued at $15,000.

There are forty-four of these animals gathered by the American Jersey Cattle Club, of New York, from twenty-two States. They are entered in the great dairy competition, by which is to be determined the best grade of dairy cows. Haltered by twos in double rows of stalls separated by a passageway twenty feet wide, these animals enjoy a uniform temperature of 60 degrees. They are bedded knee deep in straw, and an air of tidiness prevails quite in keeping with animals valued at $15 a pound.

Among the States represented in this stable are: Alabama, 3; Connecticut,

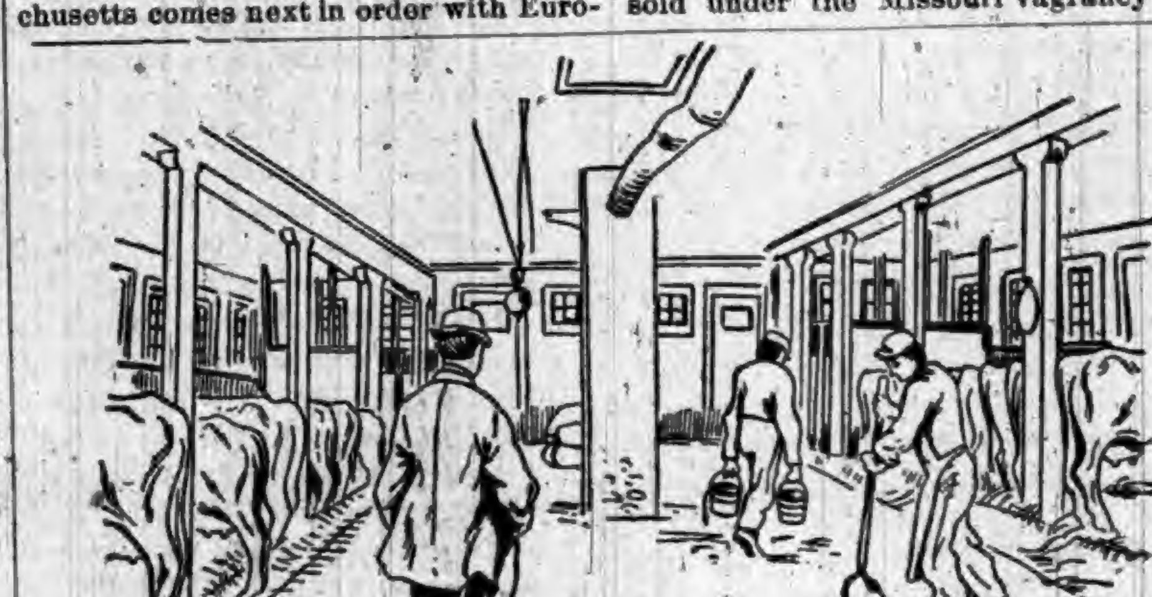
Alabama leads with the champion butter-maker of America. This cow is Signal's Lily Flag, with a record of 1,047 pounds of butter in one year. She is the property of W. E. Matthews, of Huntsville, Ala., and she is valued at $15,000. Massachusetts comes next in order with Eurotissima, an ex-champion, with a record of 947 pounds of butter in a year. This animal is owned by D. F. Appleton, of the Waltham Watch Company.



AMONG THE JERSEY COWS.

Islip Lonx, with a record of 700 pounds, ranks next. She is owned by Judge Foster, of Minnesota. Little Goldy, belonging to Mr. Matthews, of Huntsville, Ala., has a record of 34 pounds 8½ ounces of butter in one week. Alteration, of the same herd, has a record of 24 pounds and ½ an ounce for the same period. Taking the past records of the forty-four cows, their average, per head, is 19 pounds of butter each week.

Separated from the cows in little pens are four calves, the oldest but three weeks old, and yet it was chewing hay, when your correspondent made his visit, with the gravity of a pine-woods ox. As a general thing kind-hearted people who see these little animals quit eating veal. They are of a beautiful fawn color, slender in limb, and out of their great black eyes is a look of innocence that might well make a butcher falter. However, veal cutlets are seldom made out of these animals. Assistant Superintendent Goodell estimates that an average cutlet from one of these calves—breaded, of course, with potatoes on the side—would come to about $17,50.

The first of the calves born on the Exposition grounds is the property of Frederick Bronson, president of the New York Coaching Club. Chief Buchanan has asked the privilege of naming the little aristocrat, but while he is searching for a title, John, the colored attendant, has dubbed her "Baby Bronson." John watches over the baby in her crated box as solicitously as a nurse would watch a princess, and he declares his ward has as much sense as most babies.

The whole herd of Jerseys is in charge of V. E. Fuller, Superintendent for the American Jersey Cattle Club, which makes the exhibit. They were selected from 30,000 standard-bred cows. The roster of the exhibitors includes the three Vanderbilts John D. Rockefeller, Theodore A. Havemeyer, C. I. Hood, H. M. Flagler, all New York millionaires; John Boyd, of Chicago; Ayer and McKinney, of Philadelphia; and J. J. Richardson, of Iowa. It is said the club membership represents more

Milk from the Jerseys is sold to people who call for it, and the demand is much greater than the supply. Physicians had given them up to die, prescribing as a last resort the milk of these Jerseys. You can imagine with what eagerness the parents of these children applied for the privilege of purchasing. In nearly every case the babes improved from the first."

A shipment of Guernsey cows was received the other day and the animals installed in shed 2. LIFE-SAVERS FOR GRIP-CARS.

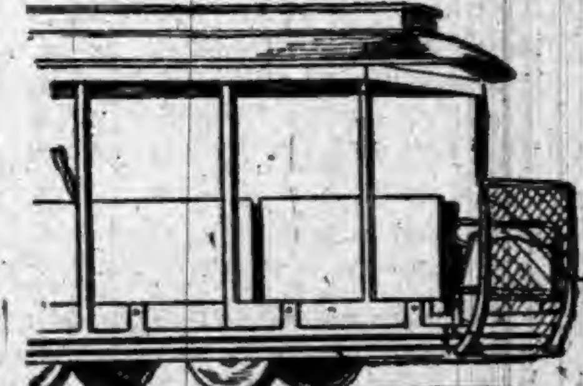
A New Device to Prevent Front-End Accidents on Cable Trains.

Mr. A. J. Brown, of Chicago, is the inventor of what appears to be a practical device for preventing front-end accidents on grip or electric cars, says the Chicago News.

It is in the form of an attachment projecting about four feet from the

the dashboard, occupying very little space. It is supposed to remain down all the time when the car is on the road, except when there is danger of collision with some other vehicle.



RAISED.

Then it is easily lifted out of the way. The device weighs about one hundred and twenty-five pounds, and costs from $15 to $20. The accompanying cuts will give some idea of what it looks like when attached to a grip car.

Beginnings of an Inventor.

A Berlin correspondent sends to the New York Tribune a letter about Werner von Siemens, the famous inventor, who died recently in that city. The whole city, and indeed the whole of Germany, was in mourning for him. Among those who felt his death the most keenly were the poor of Berlin, thousands of whom had been helped by his generosity. In his "Memoirs," which he completed only a short time before his last illness, he dwells upon an incident of his boyhood, trifling in itself, that had a great influence upon his subsequent career. It was nothing more than a victory over a gander.

His younger sister, he says, was sent by her mother to get some trifle in the barn. She returned a minute later crying, because a terrible gander had tried to attack her as she passed the barnyard gate.

A second attempt on her part was equally unsuccessful. Then an appeal was made to Werner.

"My father," he writes, "gave me a stick and told me to use it when attacked by the gander, and all would go well. With my sister I opened the gate, and the bird, hissing, and with bended neck, started toward us. My sister, crying, clung close to me.

"I wished to flee, but remembering my father's words, I marched toward the gander with my eyes shut and brandishing my stick to the right and left. True enough, the bird turned and ran away, and we accomplished our errand."

To the boy it was a great victory, and he never forgot it. In after life, whenever he was near becoming discouraged before some almost insuperable difficulty, he remembered the gander, and shutting his eyes, as he used to say, he pushed on to a new triumph.

His first patent was applied for from a prison cell. After graduation from the artillery school, in Berlin, he was attached to a regiment in Wittenberg. Here he acted as second in a duel, and was sentenced to five years' imprisonment. In his cell, however, he was allowed to fit up a laboratory and continue the scientific experiments on which he had been engaged.

Within a month after his incarceration he perfected his method of galvanic gilding, and applied for a patent. It was granted, and a pardon with it. Probably a pardon was never received with less glee.

Siemens had other experiments under way in his workshop, and begged to be allowed to remain till they were finished, but the keeper told him that such a course would be an insult to the King, and sent him forth.

Women in Medicine.

The first scientific medical journal ever issued by women will be published this month by the Recorder Publishing Company, of Toledo, Ohio. It will be edited by E. M. Roys-Gavitt, M. D., a graduate of the Woman's Medical College, of Philadelphia, with Claudia Q. Murphy, editor of the Woman's Recorder, as managing editor. It will be a fifty-four-page monthly. Among the first contributors will be Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi, of New York, and a number of other prominent and successful physicians. All the work will be done by women.

Not a Failure.

Johnny Gibbs is a youthful philosopher. He believes that life would be simplified if people would be content to do one thing at a time.

The other day Johnny was hard at work with paper and pencil. His mother looked over his shoulder.

"Why, Johnny," she exclaimed, "your spelling is perfectly dreadful! Look at that—'siting in a chare.' I'm ashamed of you!"

"But, mamma," said the little boy, reassuringly, "this isn't a spelling lesson. It's a composition."

The Grammatic Parade.

And a fine commotion its coming made.
The girls and boys all opened their eyes
In utter amazement and surprise,
For the Parts of Speech in grand array
Were out for a glorious holiday.
First marched the Nouns of every kind,
Not even the commonest left behind;
Proper, collective, all were there,
In the great festivity to share.
Then came the Verbs in their solid strength,
Making a line of marvelous length;
And noble they were to see,
Led by the hardy veteran To Be.
The regulars fine won every eye,
As gallantly they went marching by;
The naughty irregulars, sad to say,
Behaved in their usual lawless way;
But the ranks held many a stanch old duffer,
Who knew both how to do and to suffer.
Every one felt, as he viewed the host,
That Verbs had truly a right to boast.
The Pronouns followed, and not a few,
For, of course, they brought their relatives, too.
Now, magnificent, proud, and grand,
The Adjectives came, a countless band;
They were lovely and beautiful to behold,
They were fine, impressive, courageous, and bold;
A brilliant, glittering, shimmering mass,
'Twas a dazzling sight to see them pass.
Just here, I think, Adverbs came in;
They made, I assure you, a terrible din,
Quarreling, in a disgraceful manner,
About who should march with the Adverb banner.
Now came the Conjunctions, a plodding set,
But helpful in whatever company met,
Not seeking their own, but others befriending,
For union their influence constantly tending.
But what shall be said of the neat Preposition,
Small, but so handy in composition?
They marched in time and kept the pace,
Though each one carried an objective case.
The bold Interjections brought up the rear
Arousing the echoes with cheer after cheer;
Hurrah! Hip hurrah! What a noise they did make—
Enough, you might say, the dead to awake!
The Nouns and Verbs were mortified quite,
By such behavior and thought it not right;
Indeed, I heard one proper old Noun,
Who is known and respected all over town,
Say, "I'm thankful those fellows who make such a fuss
Bear no relation to any of us."
The parade being over, back to school
Went the Parts of Speech and submitted to rule,
As every good boy and girl should do,
Who likes to be counted honest and true.
—Helen A. Walker, in Golden Days.

A Day with a King.

The little King of Spain is said to be the most powerful ruler in the world. The sight of him in his little cradle has made the Spaniards cease their cruel quarrels with one another, and Spain has not been so peaceful and prosperous for many years.

Would you not like to peep at this royal little man in his home—to know just how he spends the day?

His home is in Madrid, the capital of Spain. The little fellow, only 3 years old, has the second story of the royal palace all to himself and his attendants. His own rooms are directly over the Queen's. The Queen loves her little boy dearly. She has had a small winding staircase built from her own bedroom up into his chamber. The least sound, a cough, a sigh, in the silence awakens her. A dozen times in the night, sometimes, she goes to stand upon the little stairs, and listen to see that all is right.

The little King's bedroom is bright and pretty. The carpet is red. His bedstead is of bronze; its curtains and spreads are blue. A pretty fairy lamp burns at night on the table. When he was ill, not long ago, the Queen slept on a sofa by his side seven nights without undressing.

His little majesty rises at seven. His nurse and his governess come then to dress him. The first thing he does is to kneel on his little bed and repeat word by word after his governess, the Countess of Peralta, his morning prayer, for his dead papa's memory, for his mother's health, and for the happiness and peace of his kingdom.

Then comes his bath—splash! In cold water, with a quick rubbing. Now a train of stately servitors come in, very solemnly, to bring his chocolate on a silver tray engraved with the arms of the Spanish crown.

At nine the Queen comes up her staircase to embrace her little boy. She takes him on her lap, laughs with him, sings little songs with him, talks with him as mothers do, and both forget the kingdom of Spain.

At ten comes the great event of the little King's day—the changing of the guard before the palace. The guard parade of soldiers is a gorgeous sight. Everybody comes to look on and to hear the gay military music. There is the infantry, the cavalry, the artillery. The marching is superb. This little boy stands at the window and claps his hands to see the soldiers keep step and the sunshine flash on the sabres. There he is every day at that time, with his nurse and governess, applauding, singing and shouting like a little madman.—Little Men and Women.

Combing Dolly's Hair.

Mabel's mother went into the nursery one day, and overheard her little girl saying:

"Now, Dolly, 'ou mus'n't be cwoss, or twy to get away or cwy. If 'ou don't let me fix 'ou up, folks won't say 'ou is nice and kiss 'ou. Be still, now."

"Why, child! What are you doing?" her mother asked, when she came up close to Mabel, and noticed she was pulling out the doll's hair in handfuls.

What Flossie Thought.

Flossie was enjoying herself out in the cool green grass with two or three of her playmates when her mother called her.

"Come in, Flossie," she said, "the grass is too damp for you to be playing in it."

"'Tisn't wet, mamma," pouted Flossie. "It's just as dry as it can be."

"No, it isn't. I know better than you do what is best. Come on in the house." And the mother led the way.

Flossie rose slowly.

"Well, I guess I must," she said to others. "Mamma thinks I don't know anything about anything I know about, and there's no good in telling her anything about anything." And Flossie followed.

A Cat Jumps Twenty-two Feet.

There is a large Maltese cat making its headquarters at the Seventh Police Precinct Station that is bound to go on record as the smartest feline known. Like all other cats it delights in capturing sparrows, but unlike other cats, it has never been known to let a bird get away that it made up its mind to catch. Lieut. Thompson is authority for the statement that the cat, perched on the cornice of the building, made a leap of twenty-two feet into a tree and caught a sparrow. The Lieutenant has also watched the cat while bird-catching and has counted nine sparrows carried to a spot and after the hunt was over devoured one by one. A peculiar trait of the cat is that there is but one man who reports at the station that she will make friends with, and he is Patrolman Rowland. When he is on night duty the cat will follow him from the time he goes on duty until relieved next morning. All the dogs in the Newburg region have encountered the cat on several occasions, and when she is in sight the canines take the other side of the street.—Cleveland Press.

A Curious Marriage Custom.

The marriage customs in some parts of Brittany are very curious. In Cornaille the village tailor is the important personage to whom the candidate for matrimony applies for a list of eligible girls. Having selected one, the tailor at once proceeds to the maiden's father, carrying a wand of broom. He is dressed for the occasion in official stockings, one of which is of violet color and the other red, and with him is the suitor and his nearest relative. While the family chiefs are making their arrangements the lovers retire to the other end of the house and discourse their own "sweet music." It is necessary that the engaged pair should put an end themselves to the term of negotiation. They approach holding each other by the hand, to the table where their parents or relatives are seated, when bread, wine and brandy are brought in. The young man and the maiden eat with the same knife and fork and drink out of the same cup, and the day for the union is then agreed upon.—The Million.

Telepathy.

Few people would be apt to understand what you meant if you talked to them about "telepathy." New sciences spring up so rapidly nowadays that it is hard work to keep track of the new words coined for them. Telepathy is related in meaning to telegraphy, in that it is a sort of mental telegraphy or feeling at a distance, being derived from the Greek, pathos, feeling, and tele, at a distance. It is only a new and more scientific name, however, for what we commonly speak of as mind-reading, though not all mind-reading is telepathy. Richard Hodson, Secretary of the Society for Psychical Research, defines telepathy as the ability of one mind to impress or be impressed by another mind otherwise than through the recognized channels of sense, and cites some remarkable instances of mind-reading and thought transference investigated by the society. These, he thinks, confirm the conclusion that thought transference is a reality.—Chautauquan.

A Woman's Lonely Half-Century.

A strange romance was ended by the death near Stonersville, Pa., recently, of Mary Reis, who for fifty years led a lonely life because her parents forbade an early marriage. She was 78 years old. When a girl she fell in love with a young man whom her parents did not admire, and they forbade a marriage. This broke Mary's heart and her home had no more charms for her. She preferred to live by herself and she refused to accept the hospitality of friends or neighbors, saying that all the world was against her. Twenty years ago she moved into the little stone house, and after that she rarely saw anybody. On Monday a friend called and offered to help her in any way, but the aged lady refused aid. Her body was discovered on her kitchen floor and $30 was found in the little house of the recluse.—Philadelphia Record.

Protecting Fruit from Frost.

A cultivator of fruits which are likely to suffer from severe frosts has devised a simple way of protecting his trees. He places on every acre a 100-gallon iron cask. This is filled with oil, which is conducted by two pipes between the rows of trees. At every twenty feet are elbows over which are flat iron sheet pans, containing oil. This spatters and vaporizes as it burns, and not only makes an intensely hot flame, but creates a dense smoke which acts as a smudge. The cost of the plant is put at $25 per acre, and the oil should not cost over $7 an acre in the coldest winter. This method is likely to be of special value in citrus orchards, as well as in the cultivation of winter vegetables where there is danger of frost.

How One Whist Party Was Enlivened.

A novel and mirth-provoking experiment was devised recently by an original hostess for the selection of partners at a whist party. Family albums were ransacked for photographs of all the gentlemen present in long dresses, in kilts, or in the "first pair," and these were shaken together in a hat, from which the ladies drew. Some of the bald heads above the dress suits bore sufficient resemblance to the bald heads in the muslin baby frocks to be easily recognized, but in others it was difficult to trace ownership. The most amusing part of the play was the amazement of the men when the pictures appeared, for they, like the ladies, were unaware of the plan.

The Best System of Fortification

Is that adopted by people in precarious health who wisely fortify their systems against disease with that acceptable and effectual barrier against its inroads—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Precautionary measures, when the health is but slightly impaired, is, as physicians well know, worth any amount of medication afterward. A premonitory malarial chill, a fit of indigestion, increasing irregularity of the bowels, a warning rheumatic twinge, inactivity of the kidneys, slight at first bilious, sallowness accompanied with furred tongue—these are appeals to the sense of self-protection which no person of common judgment will disregard. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters preserves those who take it from malaria, dyspepsia, chronic constipation, rheumatism, kidney and bladder trouble and liver complaint. Nervous invalids, persons troubled with the infirmities incident to advanced years, ladies in delicate health, and convalescents derive infinite benefit from the Bitters.

SERIOUS FACTS ABOUT BREAD

Which Housekeepers Should Earnestly Consider.

A serious danger menaces the health of the people of this country in the numerous alum baking powders that are now being urged upon the public.

There is no question as to the detrimental effects of these powders upon the system. Every Board of Health, every physician, will tell you of the unwholesome qualities they add to the food. Some countries have absolutely prohibited the sale of bread containing alum.

Even small doses of alum, given to children, have produced fatal results, while cases of heartburn, indigestion, griping constipation, dyspepsia, and various kindred gastric troubles from irritation of the mucous membrane, caused by the continuous use of food prepared with the alum or alum-phosphate powders, are familiar in the practice of every physician.

It is not possible that any prudent housewife, any loving mother, will knowingly use an article of food that will injure the health of her household, or perhaps cause the death of her children.

How shall the dangerous alum powders be distinguished? And how shall the danger to health from their use be avoided?

Generally, alum powders may be known from the price at which they are sold, or from the fact that they are accompanied by a gift, or are disposed of under some scheme. The alum powder costs but a few cents a pound to make, and is often sold at 20 or 25 cents a pound. If some present is given with it, the price may be 30, 40, or 50 cents a pound.

It is impossible to name all the alum powders in the market, but any baking powder sold at a low price, or advertised as costing only half as much as cream of tartar powders, or accompanied by a present or disposed of under any scheme, is of this class, detrimental to health and to be avoided.

But the easy, safe and certain protection of our bread, biscuit and cake from all danger of unwholesomeness is in the use of the Royal Baking Powder only. This powder is mentioned because of the innumerable reports in its favor by high medical authorities, by the U. S. Government, and by the official chemists and Boards of Health, which leave no doubt as to its entire freedom from alum, lime and ammonia, its absolute purity and wholesomeness. While its use is thus a safeguard against the poisonous alum powders, it is satisfactory at the same time to know that it makes the whitest, lightest, sweetest and most delicious food, which will keep moist and fresh longer, and that can be eaten with immunity hot or cold, stale or fresh, and also that owing to its greater strength it is more economical than others.

These facts should incline consumers to turn a deaf ear to all importunities to buy the inferior powders. If a grocer urges the sale of the cheap, impure, alum brands, it should be borne in mind that it is because he can make more profit on them. The wise housekeeper will decline in all cases to take them.

Take no chances through using a doubtful article where so important a matter as the health or life of dear ones is at stake.

Lady Duffus Hardy's Newspaper.

The late Lady Duffus Hardy, the author of several popular English novels, found her greatest pleasure in writing and editing a little newspaper of her own at her own home. She printed in this sheet all her innermost thoughts—every good, as well as bad one—and she also infiltrated family secrets and scandals in the neighborhood. After her paper was written and edited for the week it is said she appeared before the world ennobled and purified because she had then ridden herself of all meaner thoughts. To this day no one has perused the volumes of her paper, but when the time comes to open these pages Heaven only knows to what the world will be treated.

For Engaged Girls.

The craze of the day is for some odd little trinket to hang in the chain of the chain bracelet locked on the arm of every girl lucky enough to have a lover. Last year there were lucky belles, and "bleeding hearts," all diamonds, with a single ruby drop, but now the "battered heart" is the supreme thing. It is of hammered gold with the ruby gleaming in the midst. Glass lockets, too, are seen, and in their transparency a four-leaved clover appears. And tiny little lanterns with magic slides through which the girl that wears it, and she alone, knows how to find the face of the man who carries the key to the fetter.

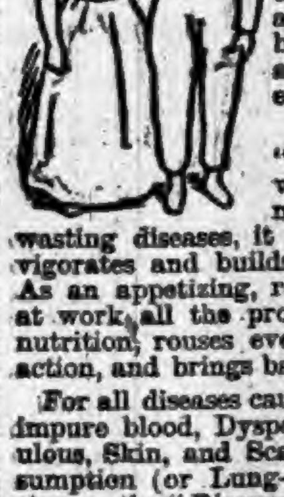
WHEN a man has a cataract, it is cruel to dam his eyes any further.



CHILDREN who are puny, pale, weak, or scrofulous, ought to take Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That builds up both their flesh and their strength. For this, and for purifying the blood, there's nothing in all medicine that can equal the "Discovery."

In recovering from "Grippe," or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, or other wasting diseases, it speedily and surely invigorates and builds up the whole system. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, rouses every organ into natural action, and brings back health and strength.

For all diseases caused by a torpid liver or impure blood, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin, and Scalp Diseases—even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages—the "Discovery" is the only guaranteed remedy.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

Inspiring Conversation.

Conversation parties are very popular in the suburbs. The company is divided into groups indicated by the color of the ribbon tied to their number card. The numbers from one to twelve will have yellow ribbons, twelve to twenty-five blue, etc., which in a large company simplifies finding one's partner, and saves valuable time for discussion. When, as at one recently given in Brooklyn, the absorbing question, "Do Hens Have Souls?" has to be settled in five minutes, it will be seen that the economy of time is vital.—Philadelphia Record.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.........MARCH 23, 1893.

INDIANAPOLIS has voted $75,000 to the G. A. R. meeting.

GOV. GRAY has been confirmed by the Senate as minister to Mexico.

FT. WAYNE will build a larger medical institute to accommodate increasing business.

ST. PATRICK'S day was observed Friday in the large cities, with more than usual interest.

EIGHT inches of snow in Virginia last Friday. Truly winter is taking his time to it and seems in no hurry to go.

HEAVY floods continue in Australia. Much property is swept away, and the damage is said to be fifteen millions.

GARZA, the Mexican revolutionist in Texas, is getting in a tight place, and several of his men have recently surrendered to the U. S. troops.

SECRETARY CARLISLE says he will not remove competent and faithful persons in the light house and life-saving service for political reasons. That is as it should be.

U. S. TREASURY is receiving a great deal of gold in exchange for bills of small denominations. Some of the gold is light-weight on account of wear etc., and is received only by weight.

MAN at Grand Rapids last week fatally injured in a prize fight. Good. Pass the worthy killer around over the country and let him kill the other prize fighting brutes. Then we'll hang him and that ends it.

S. W. ALLERTON has been nominated for mayor of Chicago, by independents, republicans and such democrats as object to the nomination of Carter Harrison by the democrats. It looks now as if he would defeat Carter.

CONGRESS passed a bill to let in free of duty, the wreckage and other property of the U. S. vessels Vandalia and Trenton, wrecked by a hurricane at the Samoa Islands. Why not let the "foreigner" pay it? This question may be answered by any republican editors who feel like opening up the tariff question.

BILLY BEANE of the Goshen Democrat has his picture in last week's number, a real and for surely picture that looks as "natchal's life." Brother Beane is one of the oldest editors in point of service in the state, as the Democrat is one of the oldest county papers. He can show you files of the Democrat for the early forties.

GEN. ALGER and other Detroit capitalists have purchased a large quantity of fine timber lands in Canada. Question is: Will they want this timber and lumber to come in free of duty, or will they let the foreigner pay the duty? or what will they do? Several hundred republican editors are holding their breath till they hear how it should be.

SEVERAL counties in the state, as we note by our exchanges, are dividing the care of the poor as far as medical services are concerned, into small districts, often giving a single township to one physician and in that township he only has charge of that work, and for which he is to be paid a stated sum. This is nearly the same plan our commissioners are about to adopt, and it looks like a good one.

OCEAN freight ship Naronic with a valuable cargo has been missing several weeks. It is believed she has foundered at sea. The Sarnia, a passenger steamer is also overdue several days. She has 800 passengers. Later: Two life boats with the name "Naronic" have been found floating in mid ocean. The ship is lost, but possibly the crew may have been picked up. The Sarnia has reached land with a broken shaft.

Election Law Changes.

Every body is interested in the changes made in the election laws by the recent legislature. They are in substance, these:

The Thornton act, which abolishes the spring election of township officers, extends the terms of these officers to four years, thereby extending the terms of the present incumbents and consolidates these elections with the presidential elections. This act has the emergency clause and thus went into effect at once.

Second in importance is the celebrated McHugh municipal act, by the terms of which municipal officials in all cities (not towns) incorporated under the general laws of the state are given four years tenure of office, and these city elections are also consolidated with the presidential elections. This act also extends the terms of present incumbents. This act went into effect as soon as it was signed—or, rather not signed, but negatively approved—by the governor.

The third new law affecting these elections in the Williams act, repealing that section of the Australian ballot law which requires the publication of sample ballots in the newspapers. It had an emergency clause and went into effect at once.

Admission to World's Fair.

Rumors have been going over the country that the 50 cents charged for admission to the World's fair will cover nothing but entrance through the gates into the grounds, and that after one is inside he must pay to get into the buildings. But such is not the case. After one is in the grounds he can go into any place he pleases, free of any charge, except a half dozen or so of private enterprises. Among these private enterprises we might name the Irish, Turkish, Moorish and German "villages." These are put up by private parties who have paid for the privilege, and they will charge to go inside and see their shops, dwellings, parlors, etc, etc. But except these unimportant items all the great show is free after the 50 cents is paid for entrance.

Are You Going to the World's Fair?

If so I wish to say that I am building a second residence exactly like the first, and adjacent to it and am prepared again to offer a good selection of rooms and dates. These two houses contain thirty rooms and every one will be taken for the entire fair season. Select your your rooms now while you can have your choice

Now Try This.

It will cost you nothing and will surely do you good, if you have a cough, cold, or any trouble with throat, chest or lungs. Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, is guaranteed to give relief, or money will be paid back. Sufferers from La Grippe found it just the thing and under its use had a speedy and perfect recovery. Try a sample bottle at our expense and learn for yourself just how good a thing it is. Important to Taxpayers.

By an act of the legislature of 1891 the time for the annual settlement with the state was changed from June 1st to May 15th. To enable the auditor to make the settlement as required by law he must have the tax duplicates to work on immediately after the third Monday in April. It will be impossible therefore for the treasurer to extend the time or visit the towns to recieve taxes. Section 1656 R. S. forbids the treasurer under penalty taking the books from the office. Taxpayers will do us a favor by paying before the rush of the last few days.

The Next Congress.

We quote from the South Bend Times in relation to the makeup of the coming congress:

The political complexion of the Fifty-third congress is now pretty fairly established. In the new house of representatives, which will not meet until next December, unless an extra session is called, there will be 217 democrats, 128 republicans and 8 third party men, and there are two vacancies yet to be filled The democrats will certainly have a majority of 79 over all. The present roll-call of the senate shows 44 democrats 38 republicans, 1 populist, 1 independent, 1 Farmer's Alliance man and three vacancies—one each in Montana, Washington and Wyoming. Two of these vacancies are temporarily filled by appointment—Mantle (Rep.) from Montana, and Beckwith (Dem.) from Wyoming—but should all these vacancies be eventually filled by republicans, which is barely possible, and all the third party men combine with the republicans, there would be a tie, with the democratic vice-president casting the controlling vote. Both houses of the Fifty-third congress will be safely democratic, and Mr. Cleveland's administration will not be hampered as it was in 1885-9.

A USEFUL PUBLICATION.

The Official Mouthpiece of the World's Columbian Exposition.

When the United States Government took control of the World's Columbian Exposition last October, a board of control was appointed to carry on the work to a successful completion. One of the acts of the board was to order a publication which should give the information that people are most desirous of obtaining in connection with an enterprise now uppermost in the public mind. The work was given the title of the "Official Directory of the World's Columbian Exposition," and active preparations were at once entered into. It has now so far progressed as to warrant placing into the hands of solicitors for the purpose of taking subscriptions. It will contain not only very valuable, but also very interesting information. Will be illustrated with about one hundred full page or half-page engravings, and will contain the name of every exhibitor, his home address, what he is exhibiting and where the exhibit may be found at the Exposition. It is information which intending visitors most urgently need, and will be highly appreciated by the public everywhere. W. B. Conkey Company of Chicago, who are the official publishers, desire a representative in this locality, and will mail handsome descriptive circulars on application.

Another DeKalb Man Succeeds.

The legislature of Montana at its recent session made a new county by cutting a slice off of one of its twenty big counties. It was Deer Lodge county again, the same big one from which Silver Bow county was taken some years ago and in this case, a slice was also, taken from Missoula county. Of course in the new law, the legislature had to provide for new county officers, and select them. In the list that accompanies the creating act we find that of our old-time friend, Josiah Shull, of Phillipsburg, in that state. He is named in the act, as clerk in the circuit court, and with all the other officers named, is directed to qualify, give bonds and enter on his duties at once. The county seat is to be Phillipsburg, till such time as a vote may be taken, when of course, it may be selected as the permanent county seat. The debts of the old parent counties are provided for by making the new county, which is called Granite, pay its proper share. We see in the list of names of the new county's servants, that of a lady, who is named as county superintendent of schools. This dividing up of a large county, in a new state, reminds us of the old times our fathers tell of in Indiana, as when DeKalb was a part of Wayne county, the county seat of which was Richmond, which is still the county seat of Wayne county. And DeKalb, at the time of its final separation, was a part of Lagrange and Allen, just as the new county of Granite above mentioned was a part of Deer Lodge and Missoula. But we started this article to call attention once more to the DeKalb man's tendency to "get there." whenever there is a reasonable chance. We extend our hand toward the top of the Granite Mountains by way of congratulations.

The North Galveston Brick Plant.

The kiln of red pressed brick that was opened a few days ago at North Galveston, Tex., revealed a quality of material pronounced by experts as fully equal in density, durability and color to the best St. Louis pressed brick. The North Galveston Brick Company is a pretty big concern. The machines, buildings, yards and general capacity equals some of the best plants in the country. More factories being built, a steady increase in population and an abundant influx of capital seems to be the present record of this thrifty young city. For particulars call or address Rickel & Spratt, local agents, or address the North Galveston Association, Box 963, Minneapolis, Minn.

Bad complexion indicates an unhealthy state of the system. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are pills that will correct this condition. They act on the liver, they act on the stomach, they act on the bowels. Robbins & McCord.

Our old Fairfield friend, Christian Barkey, was here Tuesday. It is a long, hard climb for him in his present crippled state to come up into the COURIER office, but he did, and squared up his matters as he has always done each year.

Isaro Farver was here Friday and brought word that John Warstler, residing near him, had a stroke of paralysis Tuesday, and was in bad shape. He was building the fire when the attack occured, fell to the floor, and has remained helpless since.

A number of the teachers of the county are arranging to spend their vacation at the Valparaiso normal, where they will not only have the opportunity of attending a good school but can take advantage of the nearness to Chicago and the numerous cheap excursions to attend the World's fair.

The new Wabash runs two trains a day, each way, between Montpelier and Wolcottville. Trains leave Montpelier at 8 a. m. and 4:40 p. m. going west, and those going east leave Wolcottville at 12:30 p. m. and at 6:40 p. m. Of course, the supper will not be "oranges alone," but a prime meal of the best the land affords, as is their custom. Give them a good patronage. Mite as usual, 15 cents.

John Boots of Jackson township reports the best Jersey bull in the county. At least the boys think so. A short time ago they undertook to put the gentle animal into the stable, and had him part way there, when he revolted—struck would be a better word—and by the time the battle was over he had the three boys whipped, and then he didn't go into the stable till he got ready.

We made the acquaintance last week of B. C. Cook, the manager of the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works under the re-organized company. We are most favorably impressed with him, and believe he will prove not only popular, but efficient, and that under his charge the material interests of the establishment will be greatly advanced. We welcome him to his new citizenship in Auburn.

The smaller school children had a great time Monday evening hunting free gum. Hoff's, Salyer's, Thomas' bakery and perhaps other places, had received several hundred small free samples of gum. The little ones went on a raid to capture this free gum, and as it was already gone, they were sent from one business place to another in droves, to meet disappointment in each case, and to the annoyance of the proprietors of the places honored by their clamorous call.

Ligonier Banner: A. J. Smith, general passenger agent for the Lake Shore, writes a citizen of South Bend that it will be impossible to secure $2 a day rates in Chicago during the world's fair, but that it will be cheaper to return home to spend the night, instead of remaining over night in Chicago. * * * To facilitate the movements of trains between Toledo and Chicago it is said that the Lake Shore is going to construct 130 miles of switches, locating them at short intervals apart, so that at a moment's notice the tracks can be cleared of freight and the passenger trains can go rushing on their way. It is intended to run passenger trains half hourly from Toledo to Chicago, if the business warrants it and it probably will.

Hudson World: Ike Cool visited with his mother and other friends in Waterloo last Sunday. * * * Trains during the last few days have not come up to schedule time on account of the soft condition of the road bed. * * * Ballasting has been commenced on the Wabash, and in about thirty days through trains will be run over the entire road. * * * Wm. Day has let the contract for his new dwelling house. His house will cost $1,000 when completed and will be an ornament to the city. * * * J. H. Wagner's new store room, to be occupied by a ready made clothing department, will be completed in a few days, and will immediately be taken possession of by the new proprietor. * * * E. A. Metz was in Fairfield Center and Corunna on Monday and Tuesday. * * * Died, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs Henry Ships, on Sunday, March 12 The funeral took place on Tuesday. * * * The new seats have been put in the depot, and travelers can now rest easy even though trains are a little late.

A special car carrying a score or two of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, came up from Ft. Wayne Saturday evening to help organize a lodge here. If all the Ancient Workmen are as wide awake as that crowd, there will be no flies on the A. O. U. W. of Auburn.

The weather clerk this spring must be off on a vacation. At least the machinery seems to have got beyond control. Such a wonderful variety is its changes from cold to warm, from wet to dry, from rain to snow, would be amusing, if it were not so disagreeable and so inconveniet.

Lin Thomas had the joke on the lads last week. They somehow got the idea into their heads, that Lin, as often happens to young men, had gone and got married, and troops of them gathered at the South Main bakery and proceeded to give him a mild belling. Now, they feel a little sold.

The S. H. G. meets Saturday with Mrs. Baldwin. Program, roll call, quotations from Homer; Renaissance and Reformation; Geoffrey Chaucer, Mrs. Moody; The Navy of the United States, Mrs. Raut; The Jews and Antijudaism; Miss Casebeer; paper, Sketch of Bryant's Literary work, Mrs. Moss.

Butler Review: Two or three weeks ago two young men or boys stole from Levy & Co's. ware house, $35 worth of furs. They hired a team and sold the furs for $5 to a man near town. The parents of the young men have paid for the furs and we withhold their names from publication, trusting that they will not let the like occur again.

Hudson begins to experience some of the disadvantages of being a railroad town. Her girls have begun to flirt with the trainmen as they go by. We feel like saying that the best cure we know of for this is to get better looking young men to become citizens of the place, and we guarantee the girls will have the good taste to keep their smiles for home consumption.

An unusual episode of the Picker funeral was the sudden arrival, at the grave of Bert Baker, a grandson residing at St. Joe, Michigan. He had been notified of Mr. Picker's death, but had to reach here over three railroads, and so came up just in time to hear the last words of the ceremony at the grave. Five minutes more and he would have met the people going away.

The COURIER takes its own good advice this week by publishing a history of the Auburn school, and in addition has it illustrated by a fine picture of the old academy building. This picture is taken from a photo made by Postmaster Gordon, just before he went out of the photo business, and not long before the school house burned. Hundreds of students and teachers will remember its familiar features.

The Red Oak, Iowr, Sun has the following good words for the new editor of the Butler Review: "M. E. Gardner, who in partnership with his brother, E. O. Gardner, has made the Villisca Letter a fine success in the five years it has been established, has concluded to become a Hoosier. He likes the way Indiana acted in the last election and has bought a democratic paper at Butler, a stirring town of 3,000 population in the democratic county of DeKalb in the democratic state of Indiana. He is now the editor and proprietor of the Butler Review. The Sun is sorry to lose him as a neighbor and co worker, and most cordially commend him to the good people of DeKalb county as a first-class newspaper man and an industrious democrat. He will give them the best kind of a paper.

Mr. and Mrs. James Campbell moved to Nappanee this week, on Monday. They will buy them a home there, and will likely remain there permanently. Nappaneeans may be sure of two industrious, honest and worthy people, added to their list of citizens.

Geo. E. Young of Angola, was here Monday on business. He is the prospective postmaster of his town unless the department surprises him with some new ruling. He will make a good officer and we think the selection for that live town a most creditable one.

F. J. Yesbera, Auburn's popular jeweler, is going to give away a gold watch on May 1st, 1893, to the person guessing closest to the exact time a certain watch will run after being fully wound up. For each and every dollar you spend with him you will have a chance to guess, so do all your trading with him and get lots of guesses.

Ernest Williams is leader of the old, original Auburn Band, the one that has been in existence so long, and has won such marked honors in several band contests. He is also leader in the orchestra made up also of members of this popular band. Mr. Williams is an accomplished musician and able teacher and under his instruction we look to see our band take the front seat.

Nothing in the line of stock is so beneficial to a community as a good breed of horses. This being the case, we are glad to hear that so fine a stallion as "Billy Morgan," belonging to Casebeer & Matheny is to stand in this place this season. David Waters has him in charge at D. D. Moody's barn. Dave is proud of his ward, and well he might be, for his good qualities are worthy of it.

A man named Headley was present at the recent trial at Angola in which damages were claimed against the railroad for injuries by being struck by a train, and the Herald says he was heard to remark that "the railroad could not catch him that way." But only about two weeks ago, he was caught by the train where the wagon road crosses the railroad at that dangerous curve between Pleasant Lake and Angola and thrown several rods and the buggy smashed though the horse escaped. Though badly hurt, he was alive at last accounts.

Butler Record: Dr. W. P. Carpender returned from El Paso, Texas, Wednesday. His many friends were glad to meet him again, and we hope he may conclude to locate permanently among us. * * * Monday night a passenger train consisting of an engine, baggage, coach sleeper and dining cars passed through Butler over the Wabash going to the world's fair as an exhibit train. The owner was down town, and returning home found the tramp comfortably seated and snoozing by the stove. He ordered the tramp to leave after giving him something to eat.

Quite a number of Mr. Coe's pupils in the High School went out there also. The lecture was a good one and received marked attention. Our friend D. T. Smith presided and made an excellent chairman.

It does the work. Mr. Chas. Goebel, Gaylord, Michigan, says; "I am asked, 'Did Brant's Balsam do you any good?' Well, I should say it did! LaGrippe left me with a serious cough and lung trouble, for which I took about all the cough remedies I had ever heard of, without benefit. Mr Russell, our druggist, suggested Brant's Balsam. As it was a large bottle for 25c I took one. It helped me: I used six bottles and was cured completely. (Cost $1.50.) Can heartily recommend it; it's a great medicine." 25 and 50c bottles at F. E. Davport's. 4

Court.

We closed last week with the case of Aultman vs Boozer going on. This, as we stated then, was a claim made by the Aultman company against J. A. Boozer who in his life time had been for many years an active agent for the company. Now several years after Mr. Boozer's death they claim he never settled with them for some machinery he sold. Much of the testimony for and against depended on the memory of men, as to transactions of six to ten years ago, and was of course very unsatisfactory. The case went to the jury Monday and after remaining out over twenty-five hours they disagreed. Whether it will be tried over or not we cannot say. The case of L. S. Goodwin vs Lake Shore road, complaint for damages, is set for April 10. Aaron Levy vs Ward, Werrbaugh and Wolf dismissed at Werrbaugh's cost. Phillip Reed was divorced from Jennie Reed, but she is given custody of two children aged 10 and 12. J. L. Davis vs W. E. Sargent, claim, plaintiff gets $119.50. David Enzor vs Stephen K. Enzor dismissed on a telegram from C. J. Coats, attorney, at cost of plaintiff. A case for custody of a child was up on Tuesday. Mrs. Clara Johnson asked the court to restore to her, her three year old son that had been stolen from her. She testified that she believed the boy was captured by defendant, John W. Freeze, a B. & O. brakeman, but refused to say whether Freeze was the childs father, and finally when cornered by attorney Hartman, she said she did not know who was the child's father. Then the defendant was put on the stand. He seemed to be pretty well established in his opinion of the matter, for he promptly swore that he was the child's father. It appeared from his testimony that he and Mrs. Johnson had lived together for some time but lately had disagreed and separated, and now that she was married, he wanted the child. Of course there was a lot of other testimony given by both, but we give the main points. The little boy, a bright lad was present and added greatly to the interest of the case, by going from father to mother and back again, and romping with both, utterly unconscious of the trouble they were having over him. The judge decided to give the child into the custody of the lady with whom he had been staying since he was taken from his mother. This was Mrs. Minnie Blum, her husband being also an employe of the B. & O. They have no children of their own, and she desires to keep the child. The Judge's order is to permit both father and mother to see the lad at convenient times. But Mrs. Blum is ordered not to take the child out of the county without an order from the Judge. Court reserves the right to change this order should anything occur to make it necessary. The injunction case of Brandon vs Hanna, in regard to transfer of Foundry stock, came up Tuesday, but was not decided when we went to press. Thursday last, the grand jury had finished their work, and headed by Bailiff E. T. Cochran, they filed into the court room to make their report. All business stopped, and after they were seated, the foreman, C. B. Kagey, sent up a bundle of papers for the judge to read. The judge looked over each one with care, asked if this was o. k. with the jury, and then dismissed them to their homes with a blessing and a county order, both good things to have.

BLOWN TO FRAGMENTS.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION IN A FLOURING MILL.

Over $1,000,000 Worth of Property Destroyed—The G. A. R. National Encampment—A Youth Sentenced to Be Hanged—Wabash Engineer Killed.

BLOWN TO FRAGMENTS.

Terrific Explosion in a Flouring Mill at Litchfield, Ill.

Litchfield (Ill.) special: At 3:30 o'clock the other morning fire was discovered in the big Keeler flouring mill, at this place, and despite the efforts of the employes it quickly spread throughout the building. In less than twenty minutes the flames were beyond control. While the employes and firemen were fighting the flames a terrific explosion, caused by flour dust, occurred and the immense structure was blown to fragments. John Cowie, head millwright, residence at Waterloo, N. Y., was instantly killed, and several employes were seriously injured.

The explosion wrecked nearly every business place in the village. Many persons were badly hurt by flying bricks and falling timbers. The damage to the mill alone will reach $1,000,000, and other property was damaged over $150,000.

The shock was felt in the adjoining villages of Clyde, Butler, Gillespie, and Pittsboro. In many of these places the concussion was so great that plate glass windows were broken. When the fire started the citizens of this town were awakened by the ringing of bells, and before many of them could dress they were stunned by the terrific shock of the explosion and the next minute found the walls of their homes falling in on them.

Axworthy Compromises His Shortage.

The city of Cleveland, Ohio, has relinquished all claims on the bond holders of Thomas Axworthy, the defaulting City Treasurer. Axworthy's embezzlements were discovered in 1888. The total amount he took from the City Treasury was about $800,000. He fled to Europe where his whereabouts were learned and he was soon followed by the attorneys of his bondsmen. A compromise was effected and after turning over his property to the bondsmen Axworthy returned to this continent and settled in a Canadian city. The other day the final payment of his defalcation was made to the city. It amounted in round numbers to $280,000. It is said that Axworthy will now return to Cleveland.

The G. A. R. Encampment.

At the national headquarters of the Grand Army of the Republic, in Milwaukee, it is stated that there is no thought of abandoning Indianapolis as the place of holding the National Encampment. Adjutant General Gray says that the encampment proper consists of about one thousand men, who meet to transact business, and that they will assemble at the appointed time and place, regardless of what may be done in the way of preparing to entertain the crowds that will go simply as a matter of pleasure. Some of the Indiana G. A. R. men talked of asking the Council of Administration to change the place of meeting, but nothing of the kind was done.

A Fifteen-Year-Old Boy to Be Hanged.

Trenton (N. J.) special: John Hill, a colored boy only 15 years old, is to be hanged in Camden on April 14. A petition in favor of commuting the sentence to imprisonment for life came before the Court of Pardons recently. The doomed boy's youth and the fact that he is an orphan were pleaded in his behalf, but the court dismissed the petition and if the Governor does not interfere he will be executed on the date fixed.

Fire in Chicago.

The Hoag manufacturing block at Chicago, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $83,000; insurance about $31,000. The loss on building is $16,000. Clark & Pfister lose $30,000, insurance $7,000; W. D. Hoag $8,000, insurance, $16,000; Roberts & Son $16,000, insurance $10,000; M. J. McKay $10,000, fully insured; Storey & Co. $5,000, fully insured.

Indiana Life Insurance Organization.

Indianapolis representatives of several life insurance companies met at the Denison House, Indianapolis, and decided to form a state organization. Each agent who becomes a member of the association will sign an anti-rebate pledge. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws for the government of the proposed association.

A Wabash Engineer Killed.

William Johnson, an engineer on the Wabash Railway, was instantly killed at the town of Worth. Johnson opened a partially filled oil tank on the engine, and the gas rushing out was ignited from the lantern in his hand, causing a violent explosion. He was blown 100 feet and instantly killed.

A Swedish Consul Dead.

Cholera.

The United States Consul at Rotterdam informs the State Department that there has not been a case of cholera in Rotterdam since November 17, 1892, or in the whole Netherlands since January 12, 1893.

Women May Vote.

The bill granting women the privilege of vote at all State, county, and municipal elections in Minnesota has passed the Senate by a vote of 31 to 19.

Great Damage Done by a Falling Wall.

During a heavy gale of wind at Toledo, the west wall of the burned Wheeler Opera House which was left standing after last week's fire, was blown down, completely wrecking the buildings recently occupied by Peter Saxtler, harness maker, and T. D. Parker, grocer, and tearing the east side out of a three-story building owned by W. A. Gilbouse, flour and feed merchant. Parker had just sold out his business to George H. Davis, and it is thought that Davis and two others are buried in the ruins. An explosion of gas or oil followed the falling of the wall and in a few moments flames shot up from the ruins, but in a short time the blaze was extinguished. The loss on the three buildings will be about $25,000.

JUDGE RICKS' FIRM RULING.

He Orders Engineers To Do the Work Devolving Upon Them or Quit the Company.

Toledo special: Judge Ricks, in fixing bail for Lake Shore engineers who refused to handle Ann Arbor cars, spoke of his firm purpose to impose the court's mandates with promptness and vigor.

"You are engaged in a service of a public character," continued the Judge, "and the public are interested, not only in the way in which you perform your duties while you continue in that service, but are quite as much interested in the time and circumstances under which you quit that employment.

"Your employers owe a high duty to the public, which they are compelled to perform under severe penalties of the law, and they have in turn a higher claim upon you and your service than that due from the ordinary employe. This Court does not assume power to compel you to continue your service to your employers against your will, but it does undertake to compel you to perform your whole duty while such relations continue, and does further claim, for the purposes of ascertaining whether its orders have been violated, the right to determine when your relations to your employers legally terminated, and when your obligations to observe this order ceased. The time for leaving your post of duty might come under circumstances when you could by such act unintentionally imperil the safety of lives intrusted to your employers, and do their business vast and irreparable damage. It might, too, unintentionally, involve you in a conflict with the Court, through obstructing its process and interfering with its mandates.

"The only safe way to obviate trouble is to quit the service of your employers if you do not intend to observe the orders of the Court as made, and which are binding upon you while that service continues. This you have a right to do, but if you continue in that employment this Court will expect you to do your full duty to your employers and to the public, and to observe the orders which have been made in this case."

A Bomb Exploded.

Rome special: A bomb exploded in the ancient Mattei palace, the residence of the United States Minister Porter. The explosion of the bomb did but slight damage to the building and nobody was injured. All sorts of surmises are afloat in regard to the affair, but nothing definite has yet been ascertained.

Mr. Porter called at the foreign office and told Signor Brin, Minister of Foreign Affairs, he was convinced that the explosion was not intended to injure him or to affront the United States Government. He expressed his regret that such an embarrassing incident had occurred, and assured Signor Brin of the sympathy of the United States Government and its willingness to let the affair pass unnoticed. Signor Brin thanked him for his visit and two hours later he returned the call to inform him that the Italian Government felt the deepest regret on account of the inconvenience caused to him and his family by the explosion.

An Offer to Ex-President Harrison.

Indianapolis special: Ex-President Harrison is to be tendered the Presidency of the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, made vacant by the resignation of Prof. J. M. Coulter. The trustees of the State University have been casting about for a new president ever since they received the resignation of President Coulter, but not until the latter part of last week did it occur to them that it would be a wise stroke to make Mr. Harrison the President of the institution. A delegation of Bloomington citizens, among whom are Elmer Corr, the local trustee of the college, and John W. Cravens, editor of the Bloomington World, are in the city to discuss the proposition with friends of the university from other parts of the State, and to offer the position to Mr. Harrison before they return home.

Jeff Davis' Remains.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Jefferson Davis Monument Association held at Richmond, Va., J. Taylor Ellison, the President of the association, was authorized and instructed to proceed to New Orleans to make such arrangements as shall be necessary and proper to remove the remains of the Hon. Jefferson Davis from that city to Richmond and determine the route by which they shall be removed. He was further authorized and instructed to confer with General John B. Gordon, commandant of the United Confederate Veterans, and General John Gynn, commander of the Louisiana division of the Confederate Veterans, with respect to the funeral escort from New Orleans to Richmond.

Toledo Opera House Burned.

The oldest and leading play-house in Toledo, Ohio, Wheeler's Opera House, was completely destroyed by fire. George Thatcher's Tuxedo Company played there the evening before, and run the curtain down on a quarter of a century of comedy, drama, and tragedy. Fortunately the company lost none of its scenery or baggage. It is not known how the fire originated. The block was the property of the Wheeler heirs, and twenty-five years ago cost $100,000. The insurance will not amount to over $37,000. Some fifteen attractions were booked for the remainder of the season, among them Joseph Jefferson, Digby Bell Opera Company, and Evans and Hoey. A new first-class theater will be erected before the fall season opens up.

Carlisle on the Yellow Fever.

Secretary Carlisle has issued a circular amending paragraph 18, article XI of the quarantine laws and regulations, Feb. 24, 1893, to read as follows: Steam vessels from a suspected or infected port where yellow fever prevails may be allowed to enter at the port of Baltimore and ports north of Baltimore, Md., after five days from date of departure from such ports without disinfection or detention unless in bad sanitary condition or with bad sanitary history. In either case they will be detained in quarantine five days after disinfection. This regulation to apply to the north Atlantic coast only.

Indiana Base Ball League.

A meeting of the proposed Indiana State ball league was held at Elwood, recently. Kokomo, Frankfort, Anderson and Elwood were present in person, while Fort Wayne and Logansport were represented by proxy. E. N. Cole of Kokomo was elected President of the organization and A. M. Gifford of Elwood, Secretary. The formation of a league was carefully discussed, and a successful plan was adopted. Each club will be compelled to place a forfeit of $500 for the completion of the season. Two more cities are lacking yet. Peru, Muncie, Marion, and Lafayette are to be selected from. The cities that will compose the league will be known at the next meeting to be held at Kokomo.

Rear End Collision.

Port Jervis (N. Y.) special: The east bound Erie passenger train No. 12, was run into by No. 10, another passenger train, at Lackawaxen, twenty-three miles west of Port Jervis. The rear Pullman sleeper was demolished and ten passengers, the occupants of the coach, were injured, some of them seriously. No. 12 was waiting at the station for a locomotive to replace one of which was disabled. The other cars were uninjured and no passengers in them were hurt. Surgeons and physicians were sent to the scene of the wreck on a special train from Port Jervis and the injured passengers were brought here and placed in the Hunt Hospital, where their injuries are being attended to.

Hanged for Wife Murder.

Howard Jefferd Schneider was hanged in the district jail at the outskirts of Washington, for the murder of his wife on January 31, 1892. He was indicted also for the murder of her young brother at the same time and place, but this case was not brought to trial. The double murder which led Howard Schneider to the gallows was one of the most sensational crimes in the history of the District of Columbia. By reason of the previous respectability of the murderer, the standing and wealth of his relatives, and the unremitting efforts of his counsel and friends to save him from the gallows, the case attracted widespread interest.

A Coal Miner's Terrible Revenge.

Berlin special: A miner named Boeheme purposely exploded ten pounds of dynamite in the iron mine Volkmarskeller, in the Harz district. He and six other miners were torn to atoms. Upon leaving home Boeheme gave his wife a letter, which, he said, was not to be opened till noon. The letter said merely that Boeheme would never return. Boeheme's, motive is supposed to have been revenge, as he had trouble recently with the superintendent of the mine.

No Ada Rehan Statue.

A New York paper says that the full length statue of Miss Ada Rehan, in silver, for the Montana exhibit at the World's Fair, which has caused such widespread discussion, will not be made. Sculptor Park of Chicago, it is stated, has changed the plan entirely, and only a silver bust of Miss Rehan will be made. No reason is assigned for the change, but it is believed Miss Rehan objected to the full length statue.

Jones Quietly Lynched.

Jesse Jones, who shot and killed Sheriff John Burnett of Campbell County, Tenn., on a Knoxville and Ohio train, was taken from the jail at Jacksboro and swung to a gate post. There were not over a dozen men in the mob and the lynching was done so quietly that the citizens knew nothing of it until next morning.

Mr. Ferry Dead.

Paris special: Jules Ferry, President of the Senate, is dead. Mr. Ferry's death was caused by heart disease. The affection of the heart from which Mr. Ferry suffered was due to the effects of a bullet striking a rib near the base of the heart at the time he was attacked by Auberlin in 1887.

Silver Justice.

The largest silver statue ever known since the world began was successfully cast at Chicago. Sixteen hundred pounds of sterling silver were melted in a crucible at Grand Crossing, the molten mass was poured into a huge mold, and Montana's silver statue of Justice was an accomplished fact.

Miners Strike.

One hundred miners struck at the Wheeling Steel Works' mine, Bellewood, W. Va., for higher wages, laying the entire plant off. One thousand men are out of work.

The McDonald Will Case.

The motion for a new trial in the McDonald will case was overruled by Judge Stephenson at Noblesville, Ind. An appeal was granted to the Supreme Court.

Gladstone Still Improves.

Mr. Gladstone is recovering from his indisposition and progressing so satisfactorily that no more bulletins will be issued as to his condition of health.

Woman Suffrage Defeated.

A bill extending the right of suffrage to women in municipal elections was defeated by the Lower House of the Michigan Legislature by a vote of 38 to 39.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

SOCIETY ORGANIZED TO DELVE INTO THE MUSTY PAST.

An Attempt in 1920 to Study the Strange Economic Belief of a Peculiar Sect Known as McKinleyites—A Few Tips for the Society.

"The McKinley Historical Society."

In about the year 1920 will be formed the "McKinley Historical Society," the object of which will be to delve into the mysteries of McKinleyism, that absurd economic belief that obtained sway in the United States about 1870 and culminated in 1890 in that monstrosity—the McKinley tariff bill. To study the causes and the effects of the growth of the idea that a nation can "protect" itself by making laws in the interests of a few, and can tax itself into prosperity by constructing artificial barriers across nature's highway of commerce and civilization; and to record and preserve in the public archives, alongside of the history of witchcraft and other strange ideas that have fascinated men's minds in this country, the history of the delusive teaching of McKinleyism and the dime museum features of the tariff act of 1890.

Here are a few "tips" that may serve as a starter for the McKinley Historical Society. First, on the RISE OF "PROTECTION."

The Walker tariff of 1846 and the "Free Trade" tariff of 1857 had given such general satisfaction that no party advocated, or would have advocated, higher duties had not the necessities of a civil war turned the attention of Congress to this stealthy way of raising a big revenue. The high duties levied gave great protection to the manufacturers of such goods as competed with those imported, and when, after the war, the country began to try to get relief from the exceedingly heavy burdens of taxation, these home manufacturers were willing to have duties lowered on all non-competing, but not at all on competing imports. They knew full well that if they based their claims entirely upon selfish motives the country would not allow them. Hence they set to work to invent terms and catch phrases to conceal their selfishness and to appeal to the prejudices of the unthinking voters. Their success was unparalleled and must have astonished even themselves. To be sure, they had to modify and shift their terms between Presidential elections and to invent new phrases when they and their political allies were being hard pressed, but for twenty-five years they held sway and dictated the financial policy of "their" country, until fully half of the property had been taxed out of the 65,000,000 inhabitants and into the safes and vaults of a few thousand manufacturers and monopolists. The rapidly accumulating wealth of the manufacturers gave them increasing importance and powers, and made it easier for them to hoodwink the masses of povertyites into believing that black is white. From the hundreds of unsound and sophistical economic ideas promulgated by the manufacturers and their set we make the following selections:

PROTECTIONISTS' UNSOUND THEORIES.

1. Protective duties on imports will protect manufacturers by taxing their raw materials, increasing home competition, lowering prices and profits, and by keeping wages high.

2. If a manufacturer is protected and can afford to pay higher wages, he always does so; he thus turns over to his employes nearly all that he gets from tariff duties.

3. Manufacturers organize themselves into trusts and combines so that they can raise wages and lower prices without opposition.

4. If free trade would compel the manufacturers to pay high wages they would favor free trade.

5. Protected manufacturers sell goods cheaper to foreign than to home consumers, so that they can have plenty of work for their employes at high wages.

6. Competition will work swifter and lower prices faster when restricted to one country than when spread out over the world.

7. Free trade between states will benefit all; but free trade between countries, even if no larger than states, will ruin all. By annexation or division and a slight change of names these effects may be reversed.

8. Both parties are benefited by a trade if they live in the same country; otherwise at least one will get fleeced, and the trade should be prohibited by law.

9. Countries where wages are low—like Germany, Spain, Italy, or China—need protection against countries where wages are high, like England and the United States. Some high-wage countries also need protection against low-wage countries, as the United States against the pauper labor of Europe.

10. High duties on tin plate, pearl buttons, and manufactured products will lower prices in the interest of commerce; but high duties on wool, barley, eggs, and farm products will raise prices in the interest of the producers.

11. A duty on sugar is a tax upon the consumer, but duties upon tin plates, clothing, and glassware are taxes upon foreigners.

12. "A cheap coat makes a cheap man." Protection is to avoid the curse of cheapness and to overcome the evils of machinery, railroads, and steamships in tending to make things cheaper.

13. "American Wages for American Workmen" is secured by high duties on the necessaries of life—what the workmen have to buy, and by free trade in labor—what the workmen have to sell. This is obvious to all who never stop to think.

14. "American Markets for American People" are had by high duties on what they must take in exchange for their surplus agricultural products, which must be sold in foreign markets at free trade prices.

15. "Protection for American Homes" is also to be had by taxing the house, furniture, utensils, clothing, and everything else needed by a newly married couple This is axiomatic and needs no demonstration.

16. Free trade will ruin countries unless they tie a string to it and call it "reciprocity."

17. All of the prosperity, including good crops, in a protection country, is due to high tariffs; and all of the poverty and misery of free trade countries is the direct result of low tariffs. This rule does not apply to any countries of the world except England and the United States.

Some other time I will record some more tips for the McKinley Society in regard to the curious things actually accomplished by the McKinley bill. Only a few of these can be briefly mentioned now.

M'KINLEY BILL TRICKS.

While pretending to lower the duty on borax, McKinley raised the duty on boracic acid, the thing actually imported, from 4 to 5 cents per pound; and the Borax Trust raised prices accordingly.

By McKinley construction genuine "American" tin plates are made from imported steel sheets, coated by imported tin with the use of imported olive oil and imported machinery, all carried on by imported workmen.

Aided by the political shepherds, McKinley fixed his bill so that goat hair costing two or three cents per pound became wool, and was dutiable at twelve cents per pound.

By changing "goods" to "fabrics" (a change not noticed by most Congressmen who voted for the bill), "knit goods" became "ready-made clothing," and dutiable at much higher rates.

By juggling with phrases McKinley took sago-flour, which competes with dextrine, out of the free list and put a duty of 2 cents per pound on it to the advantage of the Starch Trust, which soon advanced the price of dextrine.

To benefit a few manufacturers who sew together ruffilings and other trimmings, the duty was increased 50 per cent. on the hundred or more articles that compose the biggest schedule under cotton goods.

According to McKinley, "felts not woven" are "ready-made clothing," dutiable at nearly 100 per cent., instead of 60 per cent. as formerly.

By inserting a little clause five pages from the paragraphs it was intended to modify, the duty on flue wire was raised from 80 to 280 per cent., contrary to the expectations of nearly every one responsible for the McKinley bill.

Dozens of other apparently unimportant clauses raised the duties on flint and window glass, sanitary ware, linseed oil, lead ores, cutlery, etc. Somehow these hidden clauses always raised duties and somehow there was always a trust to take advantage of higher duties.

The McKinley bill has also done many other curious things, such as taxing the ends of cables between this country and Canada, where they protrude out of the water; and calves dropped on foreign soil by stray American cows. But there is no end to the absurd and wicked features of the McKinley bill, and the historical society will have its hands full for several years.—Byron W. Holt.

Full of Trap Doors.

The McKinley tariff bill is a marvel of bad legislation. It contains many suggestions of McKinley's impractical methods of doing business. It is as full of tricky clauses and tariff jobs as an egg is of meat. No schedule can stand honest criticism. Hundreds of jobs have already been exposed by the courts and by Treasury officials, and new ones are constantly brought to light—cases where the bill did not behave as was expected by McKinley, or at least by the most of his associates who framed and voted for it. Here is one just exposed by the Dry Goods Economist, of Feb. 25, 1893:

Section 373, schedule J, of the McKinley tariff specifies the duty on this class of cotton fabrics, which are the articles manufactured of cotton that are most largely imported into this country, and describes the goods as follows:

"Laces, edgings, embroideries, insertings, neck ruffilings, ruchings, trimmings, tuckings, lace window curtains, and other similar tamboured articles, and articles embroidered by hand or machinery, embroidered and hem-stitched handkerchiefs, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, ruffilings, tuckings, or ruchings, all of the above named articles composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, or of which these substances, or either of them, or a mixture of any of them, is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 60 per centum ad valorem."

The duty on these fabrics according to the tariff of 1883 was from 30 to 40 per cent. Why was it increased by the McKinley tariff? Because certain American manufacturers of ruchings and ruffilings, who found themselves in competition with European makers of these trimmings, brought pressure to bear in the right quarter in order to have the duty increased on these particular articles, not desiring by any means to increase the duty on the other items classified in this section. By negligence, apparently, the duty was increased, however, on the whole section. Thus, for the sake of benefiting the whole manufacturers, who sew together into ruffilings, ruchings and other trimmings some of the fabrics classified in this section, a decided change was made in the trade on lace curtains, in particular, and the consumer of laces and embroideries was called upon to pay a tax of at least 20 per cent. more than previously.

The increase in the duty on lace curtains has benefited not one single domestic manufacturer of those goods. On the contrary, all such manufacturers would be glad to see the tariff put back to its old figure.

Under a 20 Per Cent. Duty.

Fired with a burning zeal for combination, the makers of sole leather have set about organizing a huge monopoly in the manufacture of that necessary article. The tanners' plants are to be bought out with stock of the proposed sole-leather trust, and the former owners are then to be hired as superintendents and managers. It will require from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 to carry out this ambitious scheme, yet no difficulty is anticipated in raising the money. The people of the United States, who spend in each year over $200,000,000 for shoes, will note with interest this new project to bring their footwear under syndicate control.—Philadelphia Record.

John Graves in Luck.

After being thought dead for over twenty years a man turned up at Huntington, to claim a fortune that had been awaiting its owner. In 1872 John S. Graves went West. From the time of his departure nothing was heard of him. After he had been gone some time his relatives made an effort to locate him, but did not succeed. After several years had elapsed without any tidings Graves was given up for dead. Four years ago his uncle Jesse Griffith, died a bachelor, leaving $600,000. One of the heirs was the missing John Graves. Attorneys started a new hunt for him, and newspapers the country over advertised for him. Over a hundred persons answered, claiming to be John Graves, but in each case the fraud was detected. Finally Graves was legally presumed to be dead, and an administrator appointed in charge of the estate. The property was all turned into cash. The other day Graves appeared after an absence of twenty-one years, not having heard of his uncle's death. There was no trouble in proving his identity. He has been all over North and South America, in business, and as an Indian teacher. He is now located in Washington.

The crops in this State have not yet been killed. If the weather continues good, the yield will be greater than last year's. Reports from all parts of the State show wheat to be vigorous. The crop will be good, if the weather does not change, as it did last year. Fruit in Central Indiana shows a loss of at least one-half, but the Ohio Valley will yield its usual large crops. Strawberries, though not abundant, are remarkable in size and general flavor. Blackberries and the other small berries are not far enough along to judge of their crop or quality, but growers prophesy that Indiana will have her share of them, and also of every kind of fruit.

MORE TROUBLE WITH TURKEY.

Missionaries Claim that Official Correspondence Is Tampered With.

Several representatives of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions visited Washington last week. They came from the Boston headquarters of the body, with which they are connected, and had several interviews with Mr. Josiah Quincy, the First Assistant Secretary of State. The visitors were Dr. S. Judson Smith, Jr., secretary for foreign missions; Dr. Edwin Webb of the prudential committee, the governing body of the board, and the Rev. C. C. Tracey, a missionary, whose station is at Marsovan, Turkey. They told Mr. Quincy that Turkish officials interfered with the correspondence of the American missionaries in that country; that the missionaries were subject to much ill-treatment by the natives who were not restrained by the authorities, and that messages from United States Minister Thompson to the State department in Washington had never reached their destination, from which he (Thompson) inferred that his mail was tampered with.

Their statements were so positive that investigation of the records of the department was ordered to determine whether or not the correspondence on file substantiated the assertions. This investigation is not yet completed, but it is understood that the allegations of Messrs. Smith, Tracey and Webb will be fully sustained. This question of dealing with the relations growing out of the presence of missionaries in Turkey has always been a vexing and perplexing one to the officials of the State Department. The missionaries have a right of domicile in the Ottoman empire, but it is evident they are unwelcome guests. Their relations with the Armenians, who are more or less engaged in political movements against existing authority, do not tend to commend them to the good graces of the Turks. The consequence is that the correspondence between the governments of the two countries is to a great extent devoted to a discussion of complaints by missionaries of assault and other ill-treatment.

HOME FOR RED CROSS SOCIETY

President Clara Barton Gratefully Accepts Dr. Gardner's Offer.

Miss Clara Barton, President of the American National Red Cross Society, has sent the following letter to Dr. Joseph Gardner, of Bedford, Ind., in accepting the gift of land tendered by himself and wife:

> This land, as the property of the American National Red Cross, will be the one piece of neutral ground on the western hemisphere protected by international treaty against the tread of hostile feet. It is a perpetual sanctuary against invading armies, and will be so respected and held sacred by the military powers of the world. Forty nations are pledged to hold all material and stores of the Red Cross, and all its followers, neutral in war, and free to go and come as their duties require. While its business headquarters will remain, as before, at the capital of the nation, this gift still forms a realization of the hope so long cherished—that the National Red Cross may have a place to accumulate and produce material and stores for sudden emergencies and great calamities; and if war should come upon our land, which may God avert, we may be ready to fulfill the mission that our adhesion to the Geneva treaty has made binding upon us. I will direct that monuments be erected defining the boundaries of this domain, dedicated to eternal peace and humanity, upon which shall be inscribed the insignia of the treaty of Geneva, which insignia all the nations of the earth are bound by solemn covenant to respect. Not only our own people but the peoples of all civilized nations will have published to their knowledge that the American National Red Cross has a home and a recognized abiding place through all generations. For this I have striven for years, mainly misunderstood, often misinterpreted, and it is through your clear intuition and humane thought that the clouds have been swept away and my hopes have been realized. In accordance with views expressed by you in your letter of gift, I appoint an adviser, which I insist shall be yourself, leaving you free to appoint another to work jointly with you, knowing that in the future, as in the past, your heart will be in the work.

KANSAS HAS A WHISKY WAR.

Destruction of a Car Load of Liquor at Osage City Begins the Battle.

A great whisky war is on in Osage County, Kansas. The people are up in arms against the Kansas City houses that are running joints in several towns. Rev. D. C. Milner, President of the State Temperance Union, was called to Osage County two weeks ago, and has lectured at several towns. The people are divided and bad blood is shown on all sides. At Osage City a car load of liquors was seized and destroyed in the presence of a great throng. The liquors were hauled out of town to an abandoned coal shaft, where the bottles and demijohns were broken by the hundred and the contents poured into the hole in the ground. Beer kegs and whisky barrels were piled on a bonfire and thousands of gallons of red liquor were lapped up by the flames. Mr. Milner stood by and glorified over the proceedings, assisting in smashing the bottles containing the "liquid damnation." The State Temperance Union will wage a vigorous war on "joints" all over the State. Feeling is running high and a genuine whisky war is imminent.

CONSULSHIPS ARE IN DEMAND

Many Applicants for the Highly Lucrative Posts in Great Britain.

There is said to be an unprecedented rush of applicants for the various consulships, especially those which are reported to be desirable from a financial point of view. The best of these are are in Great Britain, where, under the operations of a peculiar law governing the administration of oaths, the consuls are enabled to retain the greatest part of the fees received on that account. That is what makes London, Liverpool, Manchester, Bradford, Birmingham, Belfast, Glasgow and several others such highly attractive posts. On the continent, and indeed in all other countries, these fees are part of the official receipts of the office and almost wholly go to the government. Paris, for this reason, is said to pay not more than $10,000 or $12,000 per year, and it is the best consulate on the continent, while London is credited with being worth four or five times as much.

"They wish it to be published at once," he explained, as the other finished the perusal, "so as to send copies to their friends."

"Great scoop, eh!" Burble cried, flinging up his arms, and then hugging the manuscript. "Talk about the enterprise of metropolitan journals! Well, sir, we will compel them once to quote from the Clarion. Here, Eb, up, there! Copy—copy—copy!" And when the boy had descended the fourteen steps of the stairs with four of his own, clutched the paper and clambred up again, his joyous employer shouted after him, "Tell Johnson to double-lead that, and set the headlines big as a vendue poster. Leave over anything to get that in—anything but politics or live ads."

Turning to Fassell, he slapped that lugubrious gentleman on both shoulders and exclaimed: "Don't scowl! Let the scorpion across the way sting itself to death with malignant envy when he sees our beat, but we should be as gay as red butterflies winging their way among yellow buttercups. If Election Day wasn't to come before our next issue, Willis, predestinate me to hades if I wouldn't put our rooster of victory right over that elopement article!"

At that moment the door opened, and Captain O'Flarretty and Miss Willowby entered.

"Ah! this is Miss Grace Willowby," said the editor, beaming and bowing. "You have been described for the Clarion as lovely, and the Clarion never lies. I congratulate you, sir." And he shook hands rather inattentively with O'Flarretty, for his gaze was absorbedly fixed upon the prospective bride. "Be seated—pray be seated."

But it was his associate who placed the chairs, and who received a "Thank you" from Miss Willowby.

"So, me dear sor," said O'Flarretty, "you have granted our requist and will publish our marriage in the prisint issue of your newspaper?"

"It will be on the press in an hour," Burble replied

"Oh, before it has happened?" Miss Willowby exclaimed. "But you said the Clarion never—never——"

"Never blared a false note or blazons a fiction. But it is prompt to a degree, amounting sometimes to anticipation, in telling the truth. As I understand it, you must be married by 12 o'clock to-night, and our paper will not be read outside this office before morning. What's futurity now will then be an accomplished fact."

"But you will not publish anything about the diamonds? That would be intoirely pramature."

"The article relates only that you and Miss Willowby have eloped from Quebec," Fassell replied, with a tone attuned to matter which the speaker deemed deplorable; "that you arrived in this village yesterday—that is, to-day; that you were wedded last evening—which will be this evening; and that, in the absence of the Rev. Joshua Perkins, the ceremony was performed by his assistant," with which the assistant's voice dropped by a despondent crescendo into a sigh so deep and internal that the others did not hear it.

"Diamonds! Diamonds!" ejaculated Burble.

So they told him all about the twenty stones, uncut yet set in legal difficulty; that the wedlock awaited the advice of Judge Purry, and that the fortune was then in the lawyer's safe.

"In our safe," remarked Burble, "for, like this office, it is shared by the Judge and me. See?" He turned the knob of the lock and opened the outer door. "But each of us has a private compartment, fitted with its own lock, the combination of which is not known to the other. Not that we are distrustful. The Judge and the journalist are bonded from heart to heart, like the Siamese twins. Silas Purry and Hiram Burble are Si and Hi in intimacy. Even now, at the very climax of a political campaign, when Si is a candidate on the Prohibition ticket and boomed by the humid and vapory apology of an opposition journal, while Hi sounds bugle blasts in the Clarion for his defeat and freedom's victory, nevertheless our personal relations are not strained." Col. Burble's eloquence was spoken to Miss Willowby, regardless of the two other listeners. "We bought these things of an agent. I paid for them in advertising, and gave the Judge one on his sixtieth birthday—about a year ago. We're nigh the same age."

"Oh, you're not sixty?" was Miss Willowby's gentle protest.

"If I'm not," was the reply, "it's because I'm closer to sixty-one—and a bachelor."

Over that hardly pertinent or praiseworthy assertion he seemed positively gleeful, as he gazed in rapt admiration at the fair visitor.

"How can you have so dashed all the hopes that you must have raised?" And she said that without so much as a suggestion of roguery. "Did you never once fall in love?"

"Yes—once. So did Judge Purry—both with the same girl. She couldn't make a choice between us. After trying for a dozen years she gave it up—gave us up—and married a Massachusetts man. As it might have been, Si and I were sure to be enemies till death. As it was, we became sympathetic friends for life. But I was telling you about these boxes. The locks are made to be set on four letters. You couldn't hit on the combination in thousands of thousands of times trying. The Judge says he would be sure to forget his if it wasn't fixed in his memory by a memorable subject. So the diamonds are quite safe in the Judge's box."

Burble shut and locked the door of the safe.

"And you're thinking, sor," said O'Flarretty to Fassell, "that the Judge will not come in till evening?"

"He has gone to a mass meeting which will not be over until nightfall," was the reply; "but I am sure he will keep his evening appointment here with you."

"Thank you. Then Miss Willowby and I will kill an hour or so of toime, and return at, say, 8 o'clock."

"I trust he won't disappoint us," said Miss Willowby demurely. "I must be married before midnight, you know."

In the garden of Colonel Burble's hopeful fancy many acorns of fortune had been planted, with never one to grow into an oak of wealth. But the buoyant man was ready to take another chance. If this delicious heiress should somehow find O'Flarretty unavailable, and yet should absolutely require a bridegroom before midnight, well——

She interrupted his thoughts, but did not at all disconcert his scheme, by asking: "And what was the name of the lady whom you and the Judge jointly loved?"

"Oh, she is only a memory——"

"But her name?"

"Dorothea."

As Miss Willowby bowed herself out of the office her last glance at Burble was mischievous, and he took it for encouragement; but what she was mentally saying to herself was this: "Oh, it is fun to find out things on the sly. Now, the 'memory' to which the Judge set the combination lock was the woman he loved. Her name was Dorothea. So the four letters are in D-o-r-o-t-h-e-a. Yet a man thinks he can keep a secret."

As for Burble, he hastily climbed the stairs to the composing-room.

"Johnson," he said, "unlock that last form. I wish to make an alteration!"

CHAPTER III.

AN ISSUE OF THE CLARION OF LIBERTY.

The conjoined offices of Editor Burble and Judge Purry remained as quiet as Miss Willowby had placidly left them for the space of ten minutes, and then came turbulence in the person of the lawyer, who struck the door open with a blow that meant enmity to somebody within. The editor had not come down from the composing-room, and it was Willis Fassell whom the Judge encountered. The young man had never seen anything like passion in this member of his tripartite chiefs, and he was too amazed to inquire about it; but not long was he left uninformed as to the object or subject of choler.

"You scoundrel!" the Judge exclaimed. "You hireling of the opposition! You traitor in my camp! Oh, don't look surprised. You must know what you wrote in the speech for old Sam Billings to deliver at the mass meeting. You were to put into that solid old farmer's mouth a plea for prohibition—a panegyric on my fitness for a return to the judicial bench. Aware of all that, you can imagine the effect when old Billings read a plea for personal liberty in beverages, and a virulent attack on me as an enemy of the inherent rights of freemen. I could have killed Sam Billings, and I think I would have slaughtered him on the spot if judicial experience had not inclined me to moderation. But I secured the manuscript, sir, and here it is—in your own undeniable handwrighting."

"Good heavens!" cried Fassell, instantly comprehending the disaster which had arisen from his confused state of mind. "Why, that's an article I wrote for the Clarion. I must have made a horrible blunder."

"Horrible, indeed, but blunders are crimes in a political campaign."

"What can I do?"

"You can take your punishment, young gentleman, if this thing defeats me. The penalty happens to be mine to inflict, sir, and down you go if I do. You wrote the verses that a woman in the Frolic Burlesque Company is going to sing at the Opera House to-night; didn't you?"

"In my capacity as associate editor of the Clarion, yes; but with a pledge of profound secrecy from the manager."

"Well, in my capacity as lawyer, the manager consulted me as to whether those verses were libelous. They touched upon the scandal in the church choir, you know."

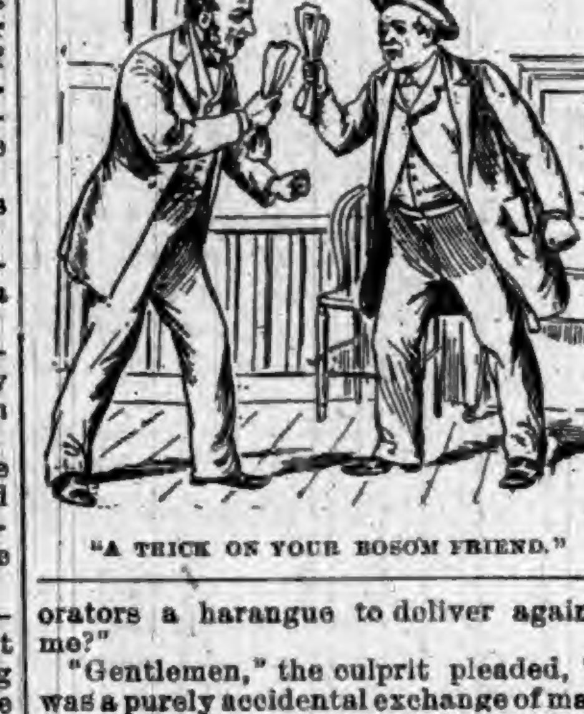
"Yes, I know—with the refrain. 'That is what a naughty echo said to me!'"

"The naughty echo says to me that, if I am not elected, the associate pastor will be exposed to all the awful consequences of that composition.

At this juncture Colonel Burble came downstairs. His descent was noisier than had been usual with even that tumultuous individual, and the manner of his entrance, before he had spoken a word, informed Fassell that another third of the accident had occurred. But it was upon the agitated Judge Purry that Burble bestowed his first outburst of rage.

"So you've attempted a trick on your bosom friend, Si?" he fumed and snorted. "You've bribed my associate to smuggle a violent prohibition article into the Clarion—making me say editorially that you're angelically right, and I'm demoniacally wrong."

"Slowly, Hi, and calmly, Hi," the now steadied lawyer said. "How about my associate supplying to one of my idiot orators a harangue to deliver against me?"



"A TRICK ON YOUR BOSOM FRIEND."

"Gentlemen," the culprit pleaded, "it was a purely accidental exchange of manuscripts. I was muddled by this elopement—by the arrival of a lady once a sweetheart of mine—by the duty of having to perform the ceremony making her the wife of another."

"What is she to you?" Burble explosively demanded. "Nothing. And don't let me see you trying to make her anything to you. I will forgive this accident, though I had to stop the press and open the form; but if you make the slightest overture of sentiment toward Miss Willowby, I'll—I'll——"

"His salvation or destruction is in my hands," and Purry drew from his pocket a paper. "Here is the variety show song written by Elder Perkins' associate, rhyming the scandal in the choir, and each verse ending with 'That is what a naughty echo said to me!' Elder Perkins won't be there to say: 'We will omit, if you please, the first to the last stanzas, inclusive.' They'll all be sung, with pirouettes and pigeon wings. This original copy, in your penmanship, Willis, will go into my safe box. Next day after election you will know your fate. Now, you see the necessity of getting out and hustling for the ticket. Hi, I exonerate you."

"Si, I hold you blameless," and the editor grasped the willing hand of the lawyer.

But on their associate they frowned in unison, while he stood gloomily silent, with one hand clasping a chair, as though to save himself from being swept to utter destruction by his employers' vengeance, and with the other nervously clawing his beard.

"Oh, comb the parting out of your whiskers," said Purry. "That's what you do when you're going on duty for Elder Perkins."

"And it will put a ministerial aspect on you," added Burble, "in readiness to unite Miss Willowby in wedlock with this O'Flarretty—or somebody."

The article which Sim Billings had spoken was ordered into hasty type for the delayed Clarion, and that delivered the editor out of the predicament. The speech which Sim Billings had not spoken was sent to the Banner, to be published therein, and that would help to undo the damage which the candidate had suffered. But the manuscript of the topical song was locked in Purry's box, and so there was no rift for Willis Fassell to see in the clouds that stormed over his dazed head. He sidled out into the street, and went home to a supper which he couldn't eat.

Burble and Purry had no more than watched the wreck of their employe float out of sight when Ebenezer, the devil, slowly descended the stairs step by step. That unprecedented method made the men turn to look at him. He carried carefully in his arms a small wooden box. On discovering that the editor was not alone, the boy turned to reascend, being all the time particular not to jolt the box.

"What's that, Eb?" Burble asked.

"I didn't know you wasn't alone," and Eb tried to hide the mysterious thing behind him.

"What have you there?"

"Nothing."

Burble caught him by the shoulder and whirled him around, whereupon he crouched down to the floor, gingerly holding fast to the box and saving it from concussion.

"You'll be right sorry you made me tell, Mr. Burble—afore the Jedge. You know what I said? That there wasn't no zim in the paper. Tain't my idee that the elopement helps out much, nuther—though it's better'n nothin'. But here's the zim—in this box, and you're a sacrificin' it.' He set the box softly on the table, and lifted the cover. "Them's the runnin' gear out of an old clock. That tin cup in the corner is full of gunpowder."

"An infernal machine!" Burble exclaimed.

"Perexactly. But it ain't meant to blow up nobody. It's jest zim fer the Clarion. It's sent in by a political enemy. It goes off—biff—bang!—when nobody's here. Lots of smoke, but no great shakes, and no particular damage. Big excitement though, and extra edition. Immense boom for the paper. That's what it is."

The boy was sternly commanded by Burble to go back upstairs, and not to say a word about his project.

"Now, Si," said Burble, "I am going to prove my unimpaired affection and never greater esteem. That speech by Billings may hurt you. But to more than make good for that mishap, you shall have this infernal machine. Fiendish plot to kill a Prohibitionist! Resentful sentiment aroused! Triumph at the polls! Put it in the safe to-night, and have it delivered at your residence to-morrow."

"Hi, old man," said the emotionally grateful Purry, "I thank you for this sacrifice. We will talk it over in the morning. But could that boy be depended on?"

"If he thinks a confession would send him before you, as judge, to be sentenced, he won't dare to ever own up. All is fair in love and war."

"And political campaigning is war," the Judge assented.

He opened the safe, and had locked the explosive apparatus in his private box along with the diamonds, when Miss Willowby slipped on a bit of snow in entering. She was not saved by O'Flarretty from falling, because that gentleman had his eye on the lawyer and his mind on the diamonds. It was into Burble's ready arms that she plunged, and they hugged her longer and harder than was absolutely needful in restoring her lithe, light person from an angle of thirty degrees to the perpendicular. But it was toward O'Flarretty, and for his failing to grab her, that she showed a shade of resentment.

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Burble," she said; "and you, Shamus, ought to thank him, too, for saving you the trouble of catching me."

"Me thoughts wor on the diamonds, darling," he said.

"It seems to me," she retorted, "that they are quite as dear to you as I am."

That theory as to her companion's mixed desire to possess her and her fortune was asserted impulsively, but it had been slowly formed in her mind during the day in consequence of his constant anxiety about the contents of the little leather bag. She was surprised and alarmed by her own words, however, and with the appealing gesture of a weak woman to the strong man into whose care she had placed herself, she smiled feebly on her impending husband.

"Have you come to a decision, Mr Purry?" that individual said to the lawyer, failing utterly to discover the evidences of a revulsion in Miss Willowby's feeling. "Is there, sor, any raison for further delay of the marriage ciremony?"

"I really can discover none," Judge Purry replied, as the couple took seats with him inside his railing. "The terms of the bequest, you tell me, were——"

And there he stopped, for, looking past his clients, he saw Burble making gestures to him. The demonstration was incomprehensible, however, and he continued: "Whether or no Miss Willowby is liable to prosecution on a constructive charge of larceny, and you, also, culpable as an aider and abettor of her act, I can see very clearly that your case will be bettered by the lady's marriage to-day in accordance with the provision of the will."

Burble could not overhear the advice that was being given. He busied his hands with opening a bunch of newspapers just from the mail; but his mind was occupied by a struggle to devise a way to substitute himself for O'Flarretty as the bridegroom. No glimmer of a feasible idea flashed from his active intellect on the black prospect. Was this ticket in the lottery of fortune only another blank? He was holding up a Quebec journal, and making a pretense of perusal, when a headline obtruded itself upon his comprehension. It belonged to a preliminary description of Miss Willowby's wedding, as it had been arranged to occur in the Canadian capital.

"Come here, you substituted bridegroom," Burble vivaciously cried, glad to interrupt the consultation. "Come here and read how Mr. Fergus Ferguson and Miss Grace Willowby were, ere this, to have stood at the altar."

O'Flarretty went over to the editor's inclosure and was followed by Purry; but Miss Willowby remained seated by the safe. For an instant she sat questioning herself whether she had not made a foolish exchange of bridegrooms. Then she carelessly placed her hand on the knob of the safe by which she sat. The door swung open, for Purry had not locked it, and there, within her reach, was the box containing the diamonds.

Thereupon a surprising thing happened. Miss Willowby thoughtfully, carefully, yet with no indecision, turned the knob of the Judge's private box from one letter to another, until the four forming the combination had been touched in the correct order. The bag of diamonds was exposed. A glance at the three men convinced her that her act had not been seen. Quickly and noiselessly she emptied the diamonds into her pocket, replaced the bag, shut the box, locked it, closed the door of the safe, and remarked:

"I suppose to-morrow's issue of that paper will contain the flight of the bride?"

"And the disappearance of the diamonds," laughed O'Flarretty, exultantly. "I was to have been only an ooshur at the wedding."

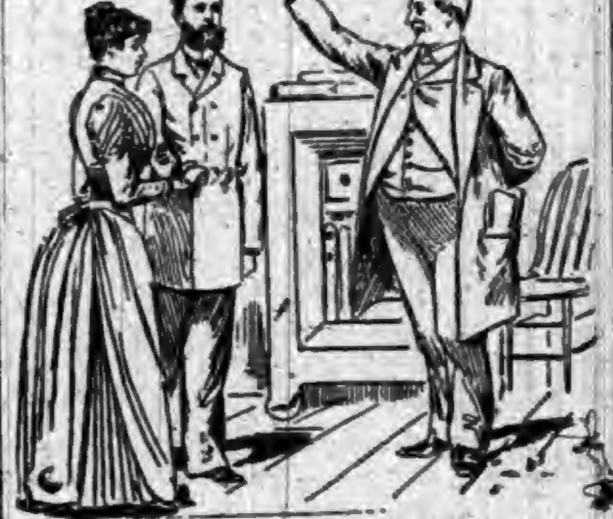
"So this article says," Burble remarked. "It also mentions the opportune arrival of some members of your family from Ireland."

"Indade!"

"You didn't expect them?"

O'Flarretty did not answer, but took the paper out of the editor's hands and put it into his own pocket. Then he returned to Miss Willowby, who had seen his sudden censorship of the press, and who now saw his suppressed agitation over the published news of the O'Flarettys.

"I have been amusing myself, 'Shamus,'" she calmly whispered, "by guessing a riddle. What makes you stare so? You heard Colonel Burble tell of his and Judge Purry's love of one girl. Then he said that the Judge's private box in this safe was locked on four letters, which the Judge declared he'd be sure to forget if they were not associated with a memory. I asked the name of the girl. It was Dorothea. My guess was that the name contained the four letters of the combination. Likely T-h-e-a, that being pretty and pronounceable. I've just tried it—out of curiosity, you know. 'Thea' is the open sesame."



THE COLONEL BLESSES THEM.

"And the diamonds are there, darling?"

"They are quite safe, Shamus."

The editor and the lawyer were in a whispered dialogue, too. But Eb, the devil, noisily interrupted them with a copy of the Clarion, moist from the press. Burble took it and ran a critical eye up and down its columns.

"Did they spell my name correctly?" Miss Willowby demurely inquired. "They're so apt to make it o-u-g-h-by, instead of o-w-by."

"And mine?" O'Flarretty asked with arduous gayety.

"Well," Colonel Burble replied, "your name isn't printed at all. I made a change in the types at the last moment. This article says that Miss Grace Willowby, Quebec's most beautiful and accomplished belle, came to Liberty and was married to a gentleman whom the editor did not deem it advisable to name."

"Meaning me, sir, of course," and O'Flarretty bowed in sincere gratitude. Then, as Willis Fassell entered, he added: "Here is the gintleman who has kindly consinted to officiate. Let the ceremony go on."

"Colonel Burble and I," said Judge Purry, very blandly, "have had a momentary consultation, and we advise delay."

"That's not to be thought of, sor."

"The fact is that the engagement is off altogether," said Col. Burble, in an authoritative tone.

"Off altogether!" Miss Willowby faintly echoed.

"For the reason that, if the news which the captain has pocketed is correct, his wife and two children arrived in Quebec yesterday."

O'Flarretty was for a moment irresolute. When he had made up his mind what to say, it was this: "To the divil with the prying, meddling, gossiping papers. Good evening, gentlemen. Good-by, Miss Willowby; and I trust you may be able to get a satisfactory husband in my stead."

With that he backed out of the office, bowing.

Then Col. Burble arose to the occasion. "Miss Willowby," he said, "all the aspects of your situation point to the positive necessity of a husband."

"Hush!" was her whispered response. "Don't look toward the window or the safe—not one of you!" Raising her voice, she went on: "You do me honor, sir, to offer your assistance, but I must beg at least two or three minutes of delay—until my unfortunate affair with Captain O'Flarretty is concluded. He took me for the sake of my diamonds. He has had to relinquish me, but he doesn't mean to give up the fortune if he can prevent it by a desperate exploit." After a furtive glance across the room she continued: "I told him how to open the Judge's box, because I wished to test his honesty. He has this instant gone out through that window, into which he had sneaked, and is now escaping with my bag."

"Oh, we must capture him?" Burble cried.

"No, no," she coolly commanded. "I am too luckily rid of him to ever wish to have him brought back."

"But the diamonds?"

"Oh, they have bothered me enough already.

"But their loss leaves you penniless." And Burble was eloquent as his own scheme began to dissolve into naught. "If we can recover them a husband can instantly be materialized."

"Without them!" And now it was Willis Fassell, suddenly resolute, who spoke. "Miss Willowby is the same dear young lady whom I wooed at New Haven five years ago, and to whom I now venture to offer myself again."

"And she accepts you," was her reply.

"In honesty I must confess," Fassell went on, "that a cloud hangs over me." He meant the topical verses, which were in the Judge's box. "Not until after next Tuesday's election shall I know whether sunshine or storm is to follow the cloud, but——"

The cloud was dispelled with an explosion like a thunderbolt. The door of the safe flew around on its hinges, and from the Judge's open box issued the smoke and smell of burnt gunpowder. The interior was a mass of clock-work and charred papers.

"The thief set the infernal machine off," said the editor.

"And my dreadful doggerel is destroyed," said Fassell.

"Whatever it was that you've lost," said Miss Willowby, blushing prettily and letting him hold her slightly tremulous hands, in which were the twenty diamonds, "here is my fortune. Captain Shamus O'Flarretty will discover that he has stolen only a poke o' moonshine."

Bulgarian Superstition.

Among the superstitious natives of Bulgaria the prophet Elijah is believed to control the elements. During heavy thunderstorms the women fall on their faces and pray: "Dear Lord Elijah, do not drive so fast with your fiery horses."

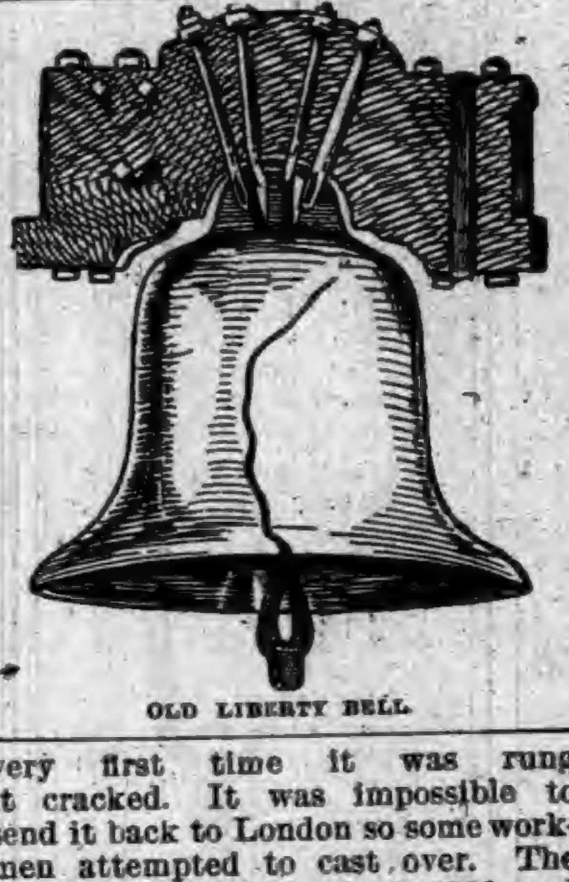
OLD LIBERTY BELL.

An Interesting Relic Which Will be Exhibited at Chicago.

The famous Liberty Bell of Philadelphia will be sent to Chicago for exhibition at the World's Fair, where it will be hung in the State building of Pennsylvania. It will be escorted by four of the biggest policemen Philadelphia can produce, and two will guard it day and night during its stay in Chicago. It will be taken West on the Pennsylvania Road, and will be placed on an open truck, so that it can be seen by every one during the journey. A committee of the City Council will accompany the bell and formally place it in the custody of the Chicago authorities.

This bell has a most interesting history. It weighs 2,080 pounds, stands four feet high, and upon one side is an inscription and the Scripture text: "Proclaim liberty throughout the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." The old bell, from its lofty situation in Independence Hall, has looked down on many stirring scenes in connection with our early history. Until its usefulness was impaired by the fissure in its side, which was first discovered in 1835, it was rung on every occasion of great public joy or sorrow. The bell was made in 1750 in London and brought to Philadelphia the next year, where it was received and hung with great public rejoicing. However, a disappointment awaited the people, for the very first time it was rung it cracked. It was impossible to send it back to London so some workmen attempted to cast over. The mold was opened March 10, 1753, and apparently all had gone well. But the bell did not have a good sound and it was believed that too much copper had been added and so a third casting was made. This was successful and the bell hung undisturbed until 1778, when it was removed to Allentown, Pa., to avoid capture and melting into cannon by the British. Upon the evacuation of the British it was brought back and has ever since remained undisturbed, with the exception of ten days in 1885 when it was taken to the New Orleans Exposition.



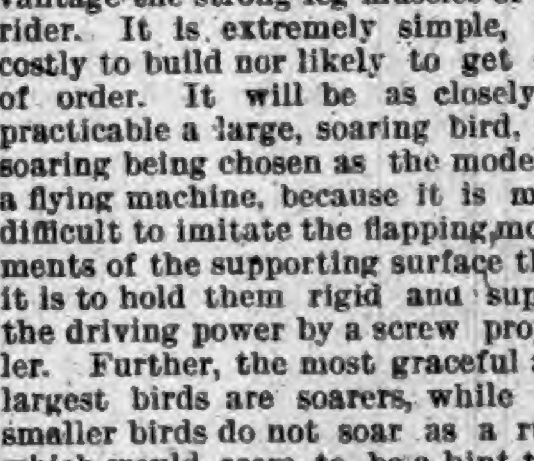
OLD LIBERTY BELL.

It derives its historic value from the fact that the signing of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress July 4, 1776, was announced to the people of Philadelphia by its ringing.

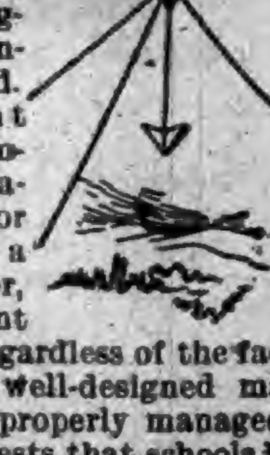
THE SKYCYCLE.

A Massachusetts Yankee Thinks He Can Soar Aloft.

Charles E. Duryea, of Springfield, Mass., is the inventor of the skycycle. It consists of a framework carrying large sails like sheets, forming a bird-shaped plane about thirty feet from tip to tip by ten feet from front to rear. It is provided with a rudder at the rear for steering and balancing, and at the front with a propeller for impelling it forward through the air. The rudder is controlled by a handle bar in the hands of the rider, the propeller driven by cranks and gearing, so as to use to the best advantage the strong leg muscles of the rider. It is extremely simple, not costly to build nor likely to get out of order. It will be as closely as practicable a large, soaring bird, the soaring being chosen as the model of a flying machine, because it is more difficult to imitate the flapping movements of the supporting surface than it is to hold them rigid and supply the driving power by a screw propeller. Further, the most graceful and largest birds are soarers, while the smaller birds do not soar as a rule, which would seem to be a hint that even Nature found it more convenient for her large birds not to flap. It contains little that is new or has not been proposed heretofore, but careful experiments and much study have led to the belief that it is sufficient for its purpose.



The great step, and the next one to be taken, is that of acquiring the ability to use the machine. This has beeen the great stumbling block to progress in the past, and like any hidden foe it has been more powerful because it has not been recognized by the inventors of the world. They have spent their time in improving the machine, searching for a lighter metal or a more compact motor, or more efficient storage battery, regardless of the fact that almost any well-designed machine would fly if properly managed. The inventor suggests that schools be established for the teaching of aeronauts.



Rather Glassy.

A glass factory at Liverpool has "glass journal boxes for all its machinery, a glass floor, glass shingles on the roof, and a smoke-stack 105 feet high built wholly of glass bricks, each a foot square."

A large quantity of ice has been put up by farmers in this vicinity for summer. A few hauled it from Carp Lake while others hauled from Hamilton and other places.

A few of our mathematicians have been solving the beef problem published in the COURIER a few weeks ago and say it can be easily done We will now state one that came under our observation years ago: "A tract of land is to be laid out in a farm of an equal square to be enclosed with a post and rail fence five rails high, so that each rod of fence shall contain ten rails. How large must this square be to contain as many acres as there are rails in the fence that encloses it so that each rail shall fence an acre of land [Why don't some one solve the beef problem and send in the answer so we can publish it? Ed.]

FRANCIS PICKER.

The subject of this obituary, was born at the City of Nottingham, England, March 19, 1814, and died at his home in Auburn, Ind., March 18, 1893, lacking one day of being seventy-nine years old. Mr. Picker was married to Elizabeth Pepper, at Horbling, in Lincolnshire, England, May 28, 1840. In 1852 they came to America, landing in New York City, May 4th, and after a stop of a few days, proceded to Albany, where Mr. Picker obtained work on the penitentiary then in course of erection, he being a bricklayer. After working there about three months he started for the west, by way of Buffalo and the lake and finally to Freemont, Ohio. Here he resided till 1864, when he came to Auburn, and worked that season on the present court house, laying brick. The next year he moved his family to this place, and here he has since resided. The funeral was at the Presbyterian church on Monday, March 20, at 2 p. m., the sermon being by Rev. G. W. Healy, the interment being in Evergreen cemetery and in charge of the Masonic brethren. To Mr. and Mrs. Picker five sons and three daughters were born. Of these, all survive but one. Edward, now somewhere in the west; Mrs. Mary Ann Hoffman, wife of Harrison Hoffman at Bowling Green, Ohio; Mrs Elizabeth Baker, wife of C. Baker in Auburn; Sarah Hosack, wife of Joseph Hosack of Columbia City; Geo. Picker residing at Coffeeville, Kansas—were born in England. The two youngest, John and Charles were born at Fremont, Ohio. Mr. Picker was an energetic, hardworking man, but in Dec 1869, had the misfortune to lose an arm. He was getting boards to finish off the brick residence that has been his home and at the sawmill of A. L. Hollepeter and Theron Clark, near where the Trout livery barn now stands, he was ripping some boards when his arm was cut off by the saw. Since then he has served several terms as constable. Nov. 4, 1884 was elected coroner for the county, receiving 255 more votes than his competitor. For some time before his death, he had been feeble, and lately quite low, and his son George was called to his bedside, coming from Kansas for that purpose with his wife. After staying here several days, urgent business called home. As said before, Mr. Picker was an industrious mechanic, following the business of bricklaying, and contractor for forty years, and there are many buildings in this section, that show his handiwork.

Obituary.

Alden Glen, son of Oran S. and Beulah Moody, was born March 26, 1889, departed this life March 16, 1893, aged 3 years, 11 months and 10 days. The funeral services were conducted from Cedar Chapel March 18th, and the interment took place in Cedar Chapel cemetery. Mr. Moody and family were formerly residents of Auburn and respected by all. Last January they moved to their new home about 5 miles south of Auburn. Our hearts beat in sympathy with the heartbroken family. The services were conducted by Rev. J. D. Brosy.

The family extend their sincerest thanks to the friends and neighbors for their kindness and assistance during their late affliction and bereavement.

Specimen Cases.

Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. GENTLEMEN:—My little girl had Blood Poison; her system was all run down, her body was completely covered with a rash and horrid red blotches, owing to the intense itching she could not sleep. Her digestive organs were in a very bad condition; she complained of pain in the limbs and we were very much alarmed about her. We tried everything we could think of but nothing had the desired effect until we found PITCHER'S LIVURA. She had not been taking LIVURA more than one week when her eyes looked natural again, her appetite improved, and before the second bottle had been used, the rash and blotches disappeared, the itching left, and she is now PERFECTLY WELL and has gained flesh. Mothers' Recommendation.

We are acquainted with many mothers in Centerville who would not be without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house for a good many times its cost, and are recommending it every day. From personal experience we can say that it has broken up bad colds for our children.—Centerville, South Dakota, Citizen. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Answered.

A Sunday school teacher in Lawrence, Kan., asked her class of boys what a boy should do to go to heaven. No one answered until a little Irish boy at the bottom of the class held up his hand.

"Well, sir, what must a boy do to go to heaven?" said the teacher.

"He must die," answered Patsy.

The Hoosiers Want the Best.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It is great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn, Ind.

Swickley, Penn.: We had an epidemic of cholerine, as our physicians called it, in this place lately and I made a great hit with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. I sold four dozen bottles of it in one week and have since sold nearly a gross. This Remedy did the work and was a big advertise for me. The members of the Epworth League held a supper in the basement of the M. E church last Friday evening. A number of the ladies in attendance who hung their wraps in the cloak room were relieved of money and valuables that were thoughtlessly left in them. The missing money amounted to about twelve dollars Suspicion soon rested on two or three boys aged from ten to fifteen years and they were shadowed the next day, and two of them caught in the act of taking some money from a place of concealment, They reported that they had been sent there for the money by another older boy, who was arrested and tried before 'Squire McNabb and we understand was committed. Much sympathy is expressed for the parents of the boy, who are among our best citizens, and who undoubtedly have done much to teach him better things, but like some others, he seems destined to go astray, in spite of the admonition of good parents

The New School House.

The COURIER believes in progress. It believes in educational progress. It is not, and never will be, the organ of fogyism, nor the promoter of discontent and dissensions. The COURIER does not pander to the too common taste for complaining. There are grumblers in every community, but they are more frequently wrong than right. These, and many other things we could say, by way of preface to a short talk about a new school house. But we must be brief and come to the point. Our school population is increasing, while our rooms remain the same old size. In ten years the number of teachers employed, has changed from seven to eleven. But we have only the same number of rooms we had then. This year's enumeration shows an increase of school children amounting to about 160 or enough to require three additional teachers. But with this growth of numbers to be provided for, we do not find that our school rooms have grown either in number or size. What is to be done? Shall we divide these extra pupils among other rooms, already too much crowded for convenience, for health and for effective work? Or on the other hand, shall we provide for them? Shall we consider the childern God has given us, as a burden to be shirked or as a blessing, a comfort and a material on which we can and should bestow thought, and love and care, and money even, that they may have the advantages we had, and for which our fathers paid, ungrudgingly? Are we not as able to assume these charges on our pockets, as our fathers were? Are we not as willing? What then shall we do? Shall we sit down and whine about the added expense? Shall we let a part of our children receive their education on the streets? Or force them to obtain employment in factories while they should be in school? These and many more thoughts in this line, have been called up by an article in last week's Dispatch, as well as in the Times, objecting in definite terms to the erection of a new school building. They say it is an expense added to us, while we are in debt. Certainly it is. We regret that our corporation owes money. But we have incurred this debt mainly for things we needed, and could not well wait for. And, included in the debt, as a part of it, is a portion of the indebtedness for our school buildings, a debt made greater by two expensive fires. Had our people been weak kneed when their school property burned, where would our schools be today? Where would the scores of bright young people who have graduated from our High School, and those still on the way to that end be? Are we any poorer for the money we have paid for these buildings? No, we are not poorer, but richer because we have given thus, of our means, for so worthy a purpose. Our town is better because liberal men lived in it then, and live in it now. Men of narrow minds and men who soak their purse strings in alum water, never build up a town, never create a school, never advance any of the interests of a town. If we owe money it is a misfortune, and we must pay. If we need more money to build a school house, or any other needed improvement, that is a misfortune. But it is not a fault, much less a crime. Let us meet it manfully. We cannot say to people abroad, "Don't come to Auburn, for we have no means for schooling your children, and we are too stingy to provide means." Our papers cannot afford to say to Auburn, "We will block the wheels of Auburn's progress unless you consult us, and ask of our superior wisdom and judgment, how far we shall go in making improvments and at what cost." They cannot afford to say "We who have been with this community but a short time, know more about its needs and how to meet them than those who have been here since the county was organized." If we need an additional school building in Auburn, and it is plain that we do, let us build one, and build a decent one. Then let us manfully go to work and pay for it. We are not rich in dollars and cents. But let us not advertise to the world that we are poor in the spirit that builds up an intelligent community even though the upbuilding should cost money. It is admitted that the town of Auburn is worth over a million. Now if one individual worth that amount were made personally responsible for the care and education of our 954 pupils, he would scarcely hesitate to incur the debt contemplated by our new school building. An unselfish man certainly would not hesitate, Many a man not worth a million stables his horses in better buildings and in better conditions for health and comfort, than we have so far given our school children. We procured of Mr. Harrison, superintendent of the Auburn schools, the following statement, to prove what we have said, of the necessity of providing more school room and school facilities:

"Our school enumerations since 1882 have been as follows:

1883	594	1888	610
1884	626	1889	651
1885	632	1890	688
1886	627	1892	795

And the enumeration just completed by R. C. Baxter for 1893 is 954. The number of scholars enrolled in the schools each year since 1888 has been:

1888-1889	531
1889-1890	540
1890-1891	601
1891-1892	608

While the present year the enrollment will reach 650 or an average of 70 in each department. The average number in each department since 1887 has been:

1887-1888	64
1888-1889	64
1889-1890	64
1890-1891	65
1881-1892.....with two new depts	56
1892-1893	61

The average monthly enrollment thus far for this year is 540. According to most approved ideas of school organization the enrollment in each department ought not to exceed 45. On this basis the Auburn schools at present ought to have twelve departments or an increase of three. And if the growth of the town continues as during the past five years one new department will be required each year.

In conclusion, we must say: We are all anxious to see our town grow, and we rejoice as each increase is reported. But how can we increase our size and population without increasing our expenses? Even our school houses, must keep pace with our population. And these like all else, will cost money. Shall we advertise to the world that Auburn wants no more people, or capital to locate here, as that would entail a new expense? We do not believe our people feel that way. Nor do we believe the expense of a new building is as great as the Dispatch would make believe. We believe the new building and its modern improvements can be had for $3,000 less than the sum stated. Surely the board will get the work done as cheaply as a good building can be had. But why make the only kick made, against our schools? The Dispatch has always favored the most expensive improvements for other purposes. Are expensive bridges, fire departments, electric lights, street improvements, etc., of more value than schools? Or is all this scare, in the nature of a political movement, made as the Dispatch said a year or two ago, it would always do, "just before the town election?"

Worthingtun's Illustrated Magazine

for April, opens with a timely paper upon "American War Ships of To-Day," by Hon. S. G. W. Benjamin. Nothing could furnish a more striking object lesson upon the tremendous progress America is making in mechanical and scientific invention than one of our latest men-of-war. In the quality of its ships the United States now stands in the foremost rank of the nations; we are also the only nation in the world that is able to construct and equip a modern ship of war entirely from the products of our soil, manufactories, inventive genius and mechanical skill. No less than nineteen ships of war have been added to our navy during the administration of President Harrison, every part of which, together with their armaments, with the exception of five guns, have been constructed in the United States. The article is fully and handsomely illustrated from photographs, drawings and paintings by the noted artist, Franklyn Bassford.

Another bright paper that will attract the attention of those who are interested in the prolonged "Shakespeare-Bacon controversy," is by Arthur Dudley Vinton entitled "Did Shakespeare write Bacon's works?" Mr. Vinton's theory is ingenious, plausible and well sustained, leaving in the mind of the careful reader the feeling that such evidence and arguments as are here presented are such as to render it extremely probable, at least, that Shakespeare and not Bacon was the author of the essays, the unfinished "Novum Organum" and all the rest of the Baconian theories and philosophies.

John O. P. Sherlock

John O. P. Sherlock was born in Pennsylvania, August 17, 1813, and died at his home in Auburn, March 25, 1893 at the age of 79 years, 7 months and 8 days. He was married to Hannah Truman at Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 4, 1834. They celebrated their golden wedding Nov. 4, 1884 at their home in Auburn, this happening on the day of President Cleveland's first election, and was therefore a double holiday to him. But they were so fortunate as to live several years longer, and on the 4th of last November came the 58th anniversary of their married life. They came from Ohio to DeKalb county in 1840 and has resided in Auburn since. For a long time Mr Sherlock has been confined to his home, and for some months has been lying quite low. His death was looked for any day. His aged partner, who survives him, is also in poor health. The funeral was at the M. E. church on Monday March 27 at 2 p. m., sevices being by the pastor, Rev. A. S. Wooton. The interment was in Evergreen cemetery. Thus passes away another of our earliest pioneers, a man widely known and respected.

HERE IS ALL THE NEWS

BOILED DOWN FOR OUR INTELLIGENT READERS.

Latimer, the Jackson Fugitive, Captured—The Choctaw Quarrel Results in Loss of Life—Japan Has Designs on the Hawaiian Islands—Ohio Oil Fields.

SLY OLD JAPS.

They Are Anxious to Seize the Hawaiian Islands When the American Flag Is Hauled Down.

Advices from Honolulu by steamer Alliance says: It is believed that Japan has designs upon the islands, owing to the employment of a large number of her subjects on the sugar plantations. Chief Justice Judd, in speaking about the matter, instanced first that the captain of the Japanese cruiser Maniwa had called upon the provisional government and said that if the United States abandoned its protectorate the Japanese would consider that no government existed in the islands, and would raise their flag. The Japanese Government is said to be profiting through the remunerative labors of their subjects, and another thousand of them have left Japan for Hawaii.

British Minister Wodehause is on friendly terms with the Japanese Commissioner, and it has even been charged that Wodehause has advised the Commissioner as to his policy.

Col. Volney Ashford, who was obliged to leave for the States for advocating what the Provisional Government is now seeking to bring about, namely, annexation, in conversation with the United Press correspondent said that Japan was a power not to be despised, and he was satisfied that the Maniwa would have made an effort to annex or establish a protectorate in the islands had she not been forestalled by Minister Stevens.

A BLOODY BATTLE.

The Choctaw Quarrel Results in Terrible Loss of Life.

A battle was fought at Antlers, I. T., between Indian factions. One hundred and fifty men were on each side, ten men killed and fifteen wounded is the result. One side represents the Choctaw Government and termed the National Militia, the others are followers of V. M. Locke, who resists arrest, fearing that he willl be killed instead of being given a trial by law. United States officers have arrested nineteen of the leaders of the militia and took them to Paris, Texas. All is quiet at present. In the Choctaw elections last summer there were charges of fraud and four men assassinated. This led to a factional war, which was suppressed by the United States forces. The present trouble is the outgrowth of the late election, when Jones defeated Jackson.

Latimer, the Jackson Fugitive, Captured.

A special from Jackson, Mich., says: Latimer, who was terribly fatigued from his long walk with nothing on his feet but the pair of felt boots which he procured after his escape, could stand it no longer and determined to procure a pair of shoes even at the risk of capture. He entered a shoe store at the small village of Jerome, and while bargaining for some shoes, was recognized. He immediately fled, but, in his exhausted condition, it was an easy matter to effect his capture. He is being brought here in a wagon heavily guarded, and it is not probable that he will escape again. The town is wild with excitement, and many people are going out on the road south of the city on which Latimer is coming toward this place.

Ohio Oil Fields.

Rising Sun (Ohio) special: The present outlook is very favorable for considerable drilling in this field during the coming summer. The operators are looking toward the east for a new field to be opened up in Scott Township, Sandusky County; also between this place and Bradner, along the Hocking Valley Railroad. Considerable work will be done the coming summer between Rising Sun and Findlay along the famous gas belt, as the indications are very favorable for the opening of the most sensational oil field yet opened in the State. The gas pressure is gradually growing weaker, and it will undoubtedly be followed by oceans of crude. The largest portion of the territory is already under lease, still oil men are scouting around, picking up small acreage.

Will Have Capital Punishment.

Lansing (Mich.) special: The escape of Larimer, after murdering one of his guards, has revived discussion of the subject of capital punishment. The inadequacy of punishment in certain cases has brought about several interesting lynchings in the State in the last few years. There are now pending two or three bills providing for the infliction of capital punishment in certain cases, one of which bills, in view of the murder and escape at the State Prison, is likely to become a law. The members have been canvassed upon the subject and a majority are said to favor the passage of one or the other of the bills.

Big Failure.

Frank Nicolin, the big miller of Jordan, Minn., has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, naming Gerhard Hilyer as assignee. His liabilities are said to be $120,000.

Gen. E. Kirby Smith Dead.

Gen. E. Kirby Smith, professor of mathematics in the University of the South since 1875, died at Sewanee, Tenn., of congestion of the lungs.

Child's Death in Agony.

Effie was the pretty 5-year-old daughter of Wesley Ray and wife, who reside three miles east of Marietta, Ohio. The other evening, in company with other children, she was playing around a fire in her father's yard, when, in some way, her dress came in contact with the flames. In an instant she was all ablaze. Her mother and others close by tried to smother the flames with a piece of carpet, but before they could do so the poor child was so badly burned from her waist to her shoe tops that the skin and flesh peeled off in large strips. She lived in untold agony for six hours. What makes this particularly sad case is the fact that Effie is the second child these bereaved parents have lost by burning.

COL. ELLIOTT F. SHEPARD.

Col. Elliott Fitch Shepard, editor of the Mail and Express, died suddenly at his home, No. 2 West Fifty-second Street, New York. His death followed the administration of ether by Dr. Charles McBurney, and the family physician, Dr. J. W. McLane, who were about to make an examination to ascertain whether the Colonel's suspicion that he was suffering from stone in the bladder was correct. Colonel Shepard had been in good health, but a month ago he noticed symptoms that led him to believe that he was suffering from stone in the bladder. He let it go and did not consult a physician until a week ago, when he went to Dr. McLane and told him of his suspicions. The doctor confirmed them and advised him to at least submit to an examination and to undergo an operation, should it be deemed necessary.

About 1 o'clock Col. Shepard said he was ready for the surgeons and they, with the nurses, began the work of putting him under ether. He had inhaled the drug but two or three times when the physicians detected dangerous symptoms and stopped the inhalation. Col. Shepard sank rapidly and for a time it was feared that he could not be rallied. Powerful restoratives were administered. At the end of an hour's work with oxygen he was restored to partial consciousness, and he continued to rally until about 4 o'clock. Then, without warning, and for no apparent reason, he began rapidly to sink. The oxygen treatment was resumed but it was of no avail, and at 4:20 o'clock he passed away. He was unconscious to the end and his death was peaceful. The cause of his death given by the physicians was œdema of the lungs.

EFFECTED HIS ESCAPE

By Administering a Drug to the Turnkey and Prison Guard.

R. Irving Latimer, the famous matricide, has escaped from the State prison at Jackson, Mich. Latimer got out by getting the keys and walking out of the front door of the prison. The keys are missing. Capt. Gill, in charge of the prison at night, is in jail now. It is supposed that Latimer got possession of some powerful drug and administered it to the guard and night turnkey. Guard Haight was found dying about 1 o'clock in the morning. Latimore having gone an hour before that time. Haight died at 3 a. m. R. Irving Latimer brutally murdered his own mother at Jackson, on the night of January 24, 1889. His trial lasted twenty days and was very sensational. He was sentenced to life imprisonment. Latimer's father died under suspicious circumstances a year previous to the murder. He was heavily insured in favor of the wife and son, and it is believed that the son poisoned him.

Warden Davis has issued a circular offering a reward of $500 for Latimer, dead or alive.

A thousand officers are looking for him. All the roads about the city are guarded. Many believe Latimer is in the city, having been secreted by one of three aunts who reside there. Their houses are watched. Warden Davis has sent 10,000 circular letters and 100 telegrams to officers.

ATE THE CAT.

The Extremities to Which a Bark's Crew Were Driven.

The steamship Alcides of the Donaldson Line, has arrived at Portland, Maine, from Glasgow. She brings the news that the bark Louise is now either a derelict or at the bottom of the ocean. The Alcides left Glascow on March 11. On Sunday, March 19, a hurricane was encountered. This lasted until the afternoon of the next day, when the bark Louise was sighted flying signals of distress. The bark was in a sinking condition, and the crew on deck waving signals for help. This was in north latitude 43 degrees 14 minutes, and west longitude 52 degrees 53 minutes, about twenty-five miles east of the banks of Newfoundland. A life-boat was launched from the Alcides and the crew of ten men rescued. Captain Semb, of the wrecked bark, said that on March 18 a terrific gale was encountered. A hole was stove in the bark's port bow and the hatches floated off into the sea. At 5 o'clock the decks began to split, and the bark went over on her beam ends. The Captain ordered the crew to cut away the masts. The signals of distress were hoisted on the pook-deck, where the crew had assembled. The provisions, consisting of three pounds of canned corned beef, had been consumed, and the cook was ordered to put upon the spit the ship's cat for food. The cat was therefore eaten. The crew will be sent back to Norway.

KING ASSAULTED.

A Stone Thrown at Italy's Monarch in Rome.

Rome special: The city is in a state of great excitement over an assault that was made on King Humbert. The King was returning from the villa Broghese, where he had been spending a portion of the day, when a person having the general appearance of an Italian working man threw a stone at the King, the missile almost striking him. There was a considerable number of people in the streets at the time, and several persons rushed upon the assailant and seized him before he had a chance to make another attempt at violence. The assailant was promptly taken in hand by the police and conveyed to prison. Otherwise he would probably have been killed by the angry multitude. An immense crowd assembled and cheered the king with frantic enthusiasm and all the way to the palace the scene was like a triumphal progress. King Humbert gracefully acknowledged the ovation and was evidently deeply moved by the evidence of loyalty on the part of his subjects.

STATE PRISON FIRE.

Southern Indiana Penitentiary at Jeffersonville Damaged to the Extent of $75,000.

Louisville special: Fire broke out in the shop of the Claggett Saddle-Tree Company in the east wing of the Prison South at Jeffersonville, Ind., and that portion of the prison was soon in ruins. The fire then spread to the tailor-shop and dining-room and was soon beyond the control of the Jeffersonville Fire Department. Engines were sent from this city and the flames were confined to the east wing. The loss is $75,000, $25,000 to the State and $50,000 to the Claggett company, which carried $25,000 insurance. The convicts made no attempt to create a panic and escape, all of them assisting the firemen by the use of buckets.

Warden Patton put on an extra force of guards, who, with pistols in their hands, marched up and down outside of the ruined walls, ready to shoot down any convict who made a break for liberty. The prisoners will be placed in the two cell houses, which were not touched by the fire.

The contract for the sale of the New York Times has been drawn up and agreed to. The chief spirit in the buying syndicate is Charles R. Flint, and the price $950,000. It is understood that among the chief stockholders are James T. Woodward, President of the Hanover National Bank; John A. McCall, President of the New York Life Insurance Company; Henry B. Hyde, President of the Equitable Insurance Company; Gov. Flower, Jacob H. Shiff, and Walter H. Webb. The present editor of the Times, Charles R. Miller, and the managing editor, George F. Spinney, are also interested as proprietors in the company, and are to be continued in their present places.

Indians Dancing.

Kansas City special: Dispatches from two points in the Eastern part of Indian Territory indicate an Indian uprising imminent among the Kiowas, Otoes, and Missouris. They have been dancing for a week and are performing old time superstitious cruelties. The chief of the Kiowas has arrived at Tahlequah for help. He is not in sympathy with the uprising and cannot control his tribe. The Missouris and Otoes have been running wild in blankets for weeks declaring against further invasion by whites. Chief Kirwin of the Kiowas, who is at Tahlequah, says that assistance must come at once or the whites will be massacred.

Liberty Bell Will Ring at the World's Fair.

Philadelphia special: It has been decided that the Liberty bell, the ringing of which proclaimed the independence of the thirteen States, shall be taken to Chicago, the date of the departure from this city being fixed for April 28. The bell will be transported in a special car and four policemen will go along as its special custodian and never lose sight of their charge. A number of city officials will go to Chicago at the time the bell is taken there. On the way to the fair stops will be made in all the large cities so their citizens may have an opportunity of seeing the bell.

Important Appointments.

The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate:

A Volcano Breaks Out.

City of Mexico special: The volcano of San Martin is now in a state of eruption, after having been extinct for more than a century. The volcano is situated in the midst of a populous agricultural district whose inhabitants have fled to a place of safety. The eruption occurred at night and the scene was one of magnificent grandeur. The flames rose straight up from the crater to a height of 1,000 feet and the lava poured down on the sides of the mountain in streams, doing great damage.

New Gold Field.

Denver special: Telegrams from Canon City and Salida report a big gold excitement at Echo on the Rio Grande road at the west end of the Grand Canon of the Arkansas. Fifty men are on the ground staking out claims and many more are on their way. Prospecting has been going on in that vicinity for several years, but it was only recently that ore was struck that was said to be high grade and plenty of it. The new camp is about thirty miles southwest of Cripple Creek.

Explosion of Turpentine.

An explosion of turpentine in the building at 154 to 160 West Lake street, Chicago, owned by the Weisberg Wagon Company, occurred recently. The fire spread rapidly and the building was entirely destroyed. It was occupied by the J. C. Grant Company, manufacturers of baking powders, and sixty-five men and girls employed by them escaped without injury. It is reported that two men were injured by falling walls. The loss will probably reach $150,000.

$100,000 Worth of Horses Burned Up.

The stables containing Kirk Bros.' racing string at Mason City, Iowa, was burned to the ground. In the stables were Storm, 2:8 1-4, Brown John, full brother to Storm, Storm Bird, Red Clay, and several other valuable horses. The entire string was valued at $100,000. The cause of the fire is not known.

EXHIBITS BY THE TON.

DISPLAYS ARE DAILY INCREASING IN VOLUME.

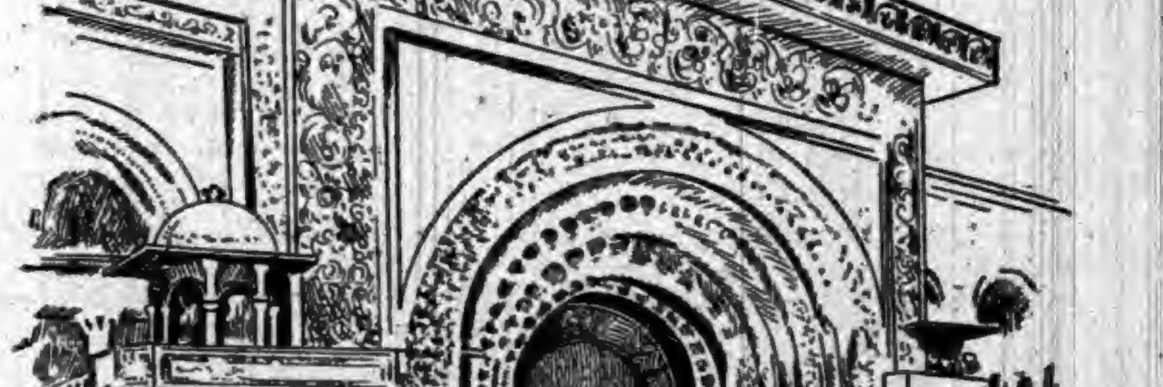
Installation Outclasses in Importance All Other Work Remaining to Be Done at the World's Fair Grounds—Big Job of House Cleaning.

Ready for the Big Rush.

Chicago correspondence:

Installation of exhibits outclasses in importance all other work remaining to be done at the World's Fair grounds. The great rush has commenced, and the displays are arriving in daily increasing volume. Rush orders have been sent out to all intending exhibitors. The department of transportation is thoroughly equipped and ready to handle ten times the daily bulk that has yet been received on the grounds.

Preliminary estimates give 30,000 car loads as the probable amount of exhibits that must be received, unpacked, and installed before May 1. Up to date only 2,400 car loads have been received. If, from now on, 500 car loads of exhibits should be received each day the last exhibit would not be installed by May 1. It is highly important that the transportation department should not be overcrowded at the last moment, and that is why exhibitors have been asked to come early and avoid the rush.

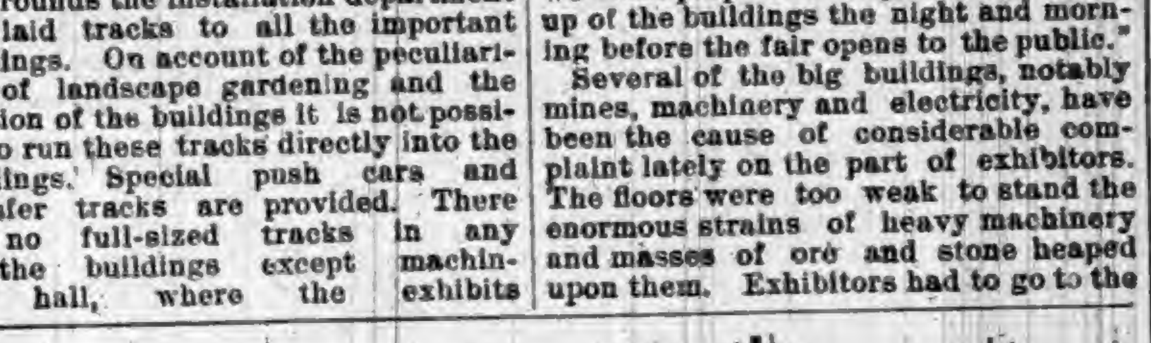


THE GOLDEN ENTRANCE TO TRANSPORTATION BUILDING.

Chief Holcomb's department has already handled some unique exhibits. It has taken the trunk of one of California's mammoth trees into the grounds on ordinary flat cars, removed it with skids and rollers inside the United States government building, where it is now erected in the tall dome. The department has landed a United States postal car on the track inside the government building and swung it to its allotted place with special cranes and jacks. In the mines and mining building an exhibit of the Pottstown Iron company, consisting of a steel plate 150 feet long, 20 inches wide, and half an inch thick, has been put in place. In the same building the department has landed two pieces of red sandstone from Wisconsin each about twenty-two feet long and about three and one-half feet square, also six more cubes of the same material, measuring five feet on each side.

Methods of Installation.

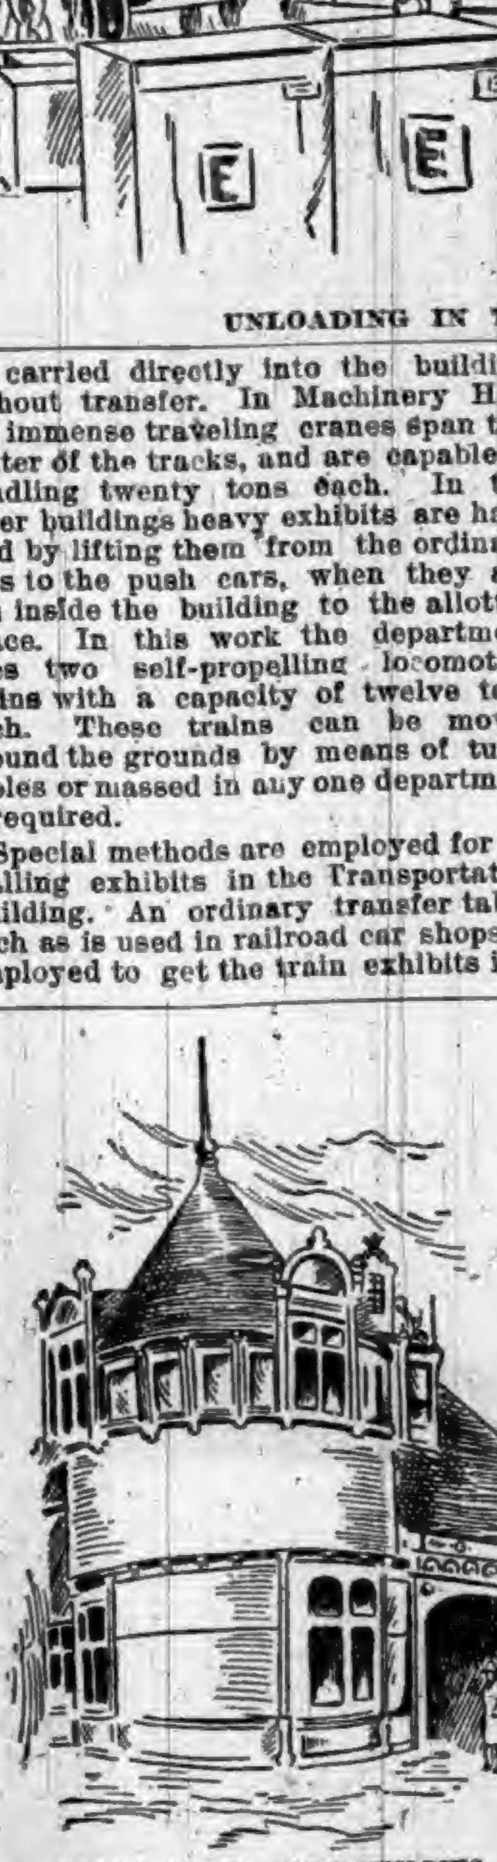
The methods of installation are simple and yet so flexible as to be able to cope with any emergency. All exhibits arriving by train come in over the Baltimore and Ohio or Illinois Central tracks. From the railroad entrance to the grounds the installation department has laid tracks to all the important buildings. On account of the peculiarities of landscape gardening and the location of the buildings it is not possible to run these tracks directly into the buildings. Special push cars and transfer tracks are provided. There are no full-sized tracks in any of the buildings except machinery hall, where the exhibits are carried directly into the building without transfer. In Machinery Hall the immense traveling cranes span the center of the tracks, and are capable of handling twenty tons each. In the other buildings heavy exhibits are handled by lifting them from the ordinary cars to the push cars, when they are run inside the building to the allotted space. In this work the department uses two self-propelling locomotive trains with a capacity of twelve tons each. These trains can be moved around the grounds by means of turntables or massed in any one department if required.



UNLOADING IN THE MINES BUILDING.

Special methods are employed for installing exhibits in the Transportation Building. An ordinary transfer table, such as is used in railroad car shops, is employed to get the train exhibits into place. This table is so constructed that eighty-foot cars can be placed on it and shunted to the track for which they are designed. This transfer table sustains a weight of 200,000 pounds, and its lateral movement is directed by electric power.

The Krupp gun exhibit is nearly all in Jackson Park. There is one monster gun yet to arrive. The installation of the Krupp exhibit is one of the interesting sights at the park. The exhibitors do their own unloading, and have a track laid right up to the site on the lake front. They have some derricks which will lift 260,000 pounds as if the load were a feather.



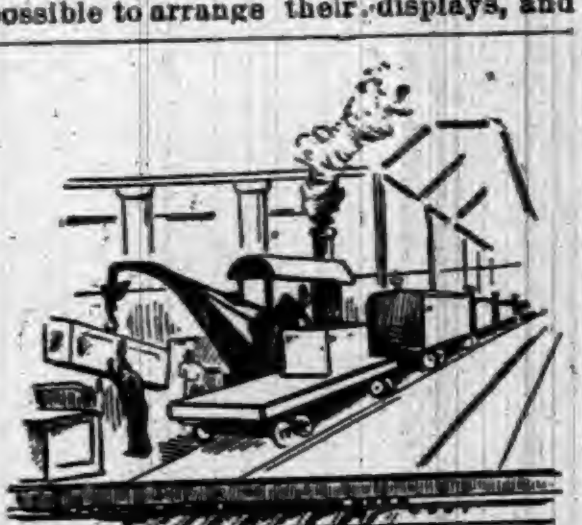
DETAIL OF THE IOWA BUILDING.

Big Job of House Cleaning.

The buildings and grounds are scattered with debris and all of it must be removed before the gates are opened, about ten weeks hence. Director General Davis climbed into a wagon the other day and rode all over the grounds. He went through the buildings, tramped over the grounds, sized up great mounds of wrecked staff material and molds, and pried around among piles of building material. When he came back he said: "It will take 5,000 men a month to clear away this rubbish. We have the biggest job of house cleaning on hand that has ever been undertaken."

Comparatively little cleaning up was done last fall for the dedication exercises. The boulevards leading from several entrances to Manufactures Hall, where the speeches were made, were cleared of rubbish to allow carriages to roll along without jolting their occupants out, but that was all. Other parts of the grounds were strewn with rubbish. All of it must be carted away and the parks swept as clean as a lady's boudoir before the gates are opened. The park will probably be swept a dozen times before opening day. There are nearly 700 acres to put in shape, more than 150 of which are under roof. After the buildings have been thoroughly cleaned exhibitors will scatter rubbish from one end to the other in unpacking their exhibits and putting them in place in the pavilions. Then the army of scavengers will have the work to do over again.

"They will be sweeping rubbish out of every building on the grounds an hour before President Cleveland starts the machinery," said Colonel Massey. "The exhibitors will take all the time possible to arrange their displays, and we must prepare for a general cleaning up of the buildings the night and morning before the fair opens to the public."



UNLOADING EXHIBITS IN THE TRANSPORTATION BUILDING.

Several of the big buildings, notably mines, machinery and electricity, have been the cause of considerable complaint lately on the part of exhibitors. The floors were too weak to stand the enormous strains of heavy machinery and masses of ore and stone heaped upon them. Exhibitors had to go to the expense of tearing out the floors and putting foundations of stone and brick under their exhibits. Some of them, especially foreign governments and State boards with scant appropriations, protested against the expense, but they were not allowed to bring their displays in until the foundations had been strengthened.

Trio Go to Prison.

The second of the series of Panama Canal trials came to an end Tuesday. Charles de Lesseps, accused of corrupting ex-Minister of Public Works Baihut to support the Panama lottery bonds bill, was found guilty. Baihut, who confessed his guilt in open court, was also found guilty, and Blondin, who acted as go-between in the bribery of Baihut, was also found guilty. All the other defendants are acquitted.

THE PATH OF THE STORM

AWFUL WORK OF THE SOUTHERN CYCLONE.

The Property Loss in the Mississippi Valley Roughly Estimated at Two Millions of Dollars—Details of the Disasters at Many Points.

Twenty-three Killed.

The damage done by the cyclone in the Mississippi Valley is enormous. While the loss of life is not as great as at first reported, the damage to property will reach $2,000,000. The telegraph wires are still demoralized, and reports are coming in slowly from the storm districts, and it will be several days before the full extent of the disaster will be known. The death list so far as known foots up twenty-three, while the list of injured will run up into the hundreds.

The first heard of the cyclone was in North Louisiana and Southern Arkansas. It crossed the Mississippi a few miles above Greenville, devastating plantations, wrecking farmhouses and uprooting giant forest trees. The path of the storm was about half a mile wide, and nothing was left standing in its track. The first fatality occurred near Shaw's Station, Miss., where the house of Drury Sumrall, a prosperous and industrious colored farmer, was leveled to the ground, killing the entire family of nine persons. The cyclone passed through the suburbs of Shaw's and demolished several residences and small stores, but no one was killed. The hurricane then changed its course slightly and traveled the right of way of the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad until it entered Cleveland, Miss., where the public school building and several stores and residences were razed to the ground. Leaving Cleveland, the cyclone passed within a mile of Clarksdale, a town of 2,000 inhabitants, and next struck Tunica, the county seat of Tunica County. Nearly every building in the place was wrecked. The colored school building was wrecked, and over thirty children maimed and crippled, some of them being fatally injured. As the cyclone left Tunica it divided, one portion traveling in a northeasterly direction, while the other took a northwesterly course and again crossed the Mississippi River through Arkansas, where it spread ruin through three counties. The towns of Crawfordsville and Vincent were nearly wiped off the face of the earth, and the storm then took a northeasterly course, reaching Kelly, Miss. Here the greatest damage was done. Six people were killed outright and scores injured. Not a building was left standing, the fragments being strewn over the country for miles. After leaving Kelly the cyclone passed into Tennessee, the next place to fall in its path being Spring Creek, where several people were injured.

The storm did great damage at Bowling Green, Ky., and the surrounding country. The loss to the Louisville and Nashville Railroad on the building and locomotives is $75,000 to $100,000. The town of Rowlins was almost destroyed. The postoffice building, owned by Frank Cordice, was swept entirely away, together with all the mail, some of which was found two miles off. Mr. Cordice's loss is $41,000. The storehouse, occupied by Stephens & Knox, was demolished, and their stock, valued at $5,000, ruined by the rain which followed the storm. At Murray, Ky., twenty residences and fifty stables and barns were demolished. Only one person, Miss Aline Stubblefield, was seriously injured. A dozen were slightly hurt. The loss will reach $25,000. Much timber, fencing, etc., was also destroyed. Late information concerning the effects of the storm in Southern Indiana indicates that the damage will be very great. A number of persons are known to have been seriously injured, but as yet no fatalities have been reported. The country for miles around was devastated. Dwellings and barns were lifted from their foundations and many are wrecks. Trees, fences, and smaller building at various places were laid low. The Center Methodist Episcopal Church of Evansville was completely demolished, only its foundation remaining. At the Southern Hospital for the Insane a frightful panic prevailed for nearly an hour. The end of the east wing of the institution was blown in, causing between $3,000 and $4,000 damages.

IMPORTANT PENSION RULING.

It Reverses a Decision Under Which $2,000,000 Has Been Paid to Claimants.

It has been discovered that one of the most important rulings ever made in the pension office has remained unpromulgated, so far as the public knows, for more than five months. It is learned that Sept. 28 last, Assistant Secretary Bussey made a pension decision which radically changed the practice of the department as to the disposition of accrued pensions in certain cases and established a new and important rule as to reimbursement of "expenses, last sickness, and burial" under Sec. 4718, Revised Statutes. The Assistant Secretary holds that accrued pensions can be fully paid to grandchildren, but as to reimbursement for "last sickness and burial," the Assistant Secretary concludes that while only the widow or minor child of the deceased soldier can take the accrued pension, the only person for whom the expenses of the last sickness and burial can be allowed is the soldier himself. From the date and under the authority of an opinion by Solicitor General Phillips rendered Aug. 10, 1876, until now, last sickness and burial expenses have been allowed in all cases where the deceased was an impecunious pensioner or entitled to a pension, whether soldier, minor children, grandchildren, or dependent parents. It is stated that fully $2,000,000 has been wrongfully paid to claimants under the Phillips opinion as reimbursements for last sickness and burial expenses, for which Sec. 4718, Revised Statutes, did not provide.

DOWN at Delphi the other night they held a hugging matinee for the benefit of the church. A certain citizen paid 25 cents to hug one of the pretty creatures on exhibition and after he had been at the job for some fifteen minutes he discovered that he had been squeezing his own wife. He kicked up such a row that the management had to refund him his money.

W. W. WALTERS, the venturesome young man who travels over the gas belt shooting gas wells with nitro-glycerine had a frightful experience in Muncie recently, and several people had close calls for their lives. It resulted from a pair of runaway horses. Walters travels in a spring wagon in which he transports the deadly explosive. He was approaching a gas well on Henry Martin's property, and a large crowd was there to see Miss Rose Martin drop the "go devil," which she did. The horses pulling the dangerous stuff got frightened, and started to run off. Walters stayed with them, and pulled his revolver to shoot them if they could not be stopped any othey way. Fortunately the neck-yoke on the tongue came loose, letting the tongue down, and stopped the team. The wagon was loaded with 100 quarts of explosive at the time, and the result of an explosion would have made a catastrophe.

SEVERAL persons are searching the country near Yountsville hunting for an aerolite which is supposed to have fallen the other night. As Mr. Carmichael of Chicago, agent for the Deering binder, in company with William Sheets, were returning from Alamo during the heavy rain, they were blinded by a sudden light which they described as being similar in brilliancy to that of a flash of light. There shot over them a huge ball of white fire in a terrific rush. From this large ball smaller balls continually broke off and exploded with loud noise. The main ball was descending toward the earth at an angle of forty-five degrees, and they claim that it struck the earth in a field. Then followed an explosion like the sound of a cannon, and all was instant darkness. The entire affair lasted not over three seconds, and was succeeded by volumes of smoke that enwrapped them. The men tell a very straightforward story, and an attempt is being made to solve the affair.

ED KAISER, an inmate of the White County Poor Farm, aged about thirty-five, was killed by the south-bound train on the Monon, about five miles north of Monticello. He was deaf, and it is supposed did not hear the approach of the cars.

A MAN by the name of John Rouse, was killed at the O. & M. round house in North Vernon. He was run over by an engine that was backing into the round house. He had been asleep on a pile of ashes and cinders and unconsciously rolled off on the track. He lived only a few moments after the accident.

THE coal operators have received word not to ship any more coal for the present over the Chicago and Eastern Railway, because the tracks between Momence and Chicago are blocked with coal. This causes embarrassment in some of the mining communities. Nearly one thousand men are thrown out of employment in Vermillion County. Nearly every mine in Clay County is at a standstill now, and the indications are favorable for another long strike.

WHILE Sylvester Teany, a Big Four brakeman, was making a coupling, at Columbus, he was caught between a car and a platform and crushed to death. This is the second person killed there in that manner within a year.

HIS FIRST CASE AND LAST.

The Story of a Young Barrister, Written for This Paper.

BY SYDNEY GRUNDY.

CHAPTER I.

In becoming a member of the bar, Victor D'Aubry's only idea was to continue the dignity of the family. Why should he think of ever getting down to the drudgery of the profession? His father, one of the most honored magistrates of Caen, had left him a large fortune; he was an only child and upon his marriage with Marcelline du Chauvannes, of whom he was the accepted suitor, more gold would pour in upon him, for the Count, her father, was one of the wealthiest landholders of Calvados. More from an æsthetic standpoint, therefore, than from one of utility, Victor had caused to be fitted up in his mother's home a suite of working apartments—outer office, library, and consultation-room. The first client to be shown into the office of the young lawyer gave little promise of a large fee. He was a man of 50, ill-clad and travel-stained. He halted at the doorway, took off a tattered hat and having mopped the perspiration from his brow, deposited his stick in the nearest corner. Victor motioned to him to be seated, but the man's eye had fallen upon a carafe of water standing on a small table and in a low voice, almost a whisper, he asked to be permitted to slake his thirst.

The lawyer nodded acquiescence.

"And now, my friend," said Victor, "tell me what brings you here?"

"I come to you, sir," the man began, "for justice. I am not a peasant about to ask you to plead against a neighbor. I'm a discharged convict. I have just left a prison where I have spent nearly twenty years for a crime committed by another."

The young lawyer gave a start. Was his first case to be one that would attack the majesty of the law, prove it to be capable of committing a crime itself? Bah! Do not all criminals profess to be innocent and accuse the judges who sentence them?

"The day which I have been waiting for, for the last twenty years," resumed the stranger, solemnly, "has come at last. I shall be able to prove my innocence if you, sir, will assist me, but I'm penniless—at least for the present. In the end, however, you shall be paid, for, when you have established my innocence, the hard-hearted will relent toward me. I shall have friends. I shall have money.

"Who are you?" asked Victor, breaking in upon the man's appeal.

"I belong to a respectable family," replied the man, "my father's name was Joseph Gouillard."

"Then you are Michel Gouillard, the murderer of Vicount de Varville!" exclaimed Victor, springing up and making a gesture of horror.

"Yes, Monsieur D'Aubry," answered Gouillard, "so your high courts of justice decreed, but they condemned an innocent man. They have robbed me of twenty of the best years of my life. You were too young to remember the particulars of the trial. Shall I——"

"No, no," came quickly from the lawyer's lips. "You may spare yourself the trouble. I've lately gone over all the evidence. It's a celebrated case—that Varville murder case. The body was found in a ditch close to a spot called the 'Cat's Hole,' dressed in shirt and trousers, one foot bare, the shoe on the other with its laces untied. One of the trousers pockets contained a small book bound in blue. The Viscount had been shot in the forehead, the bullet belonging to the old-fashioned smooth-bore rifle. There could be no question of suicide, for the young Viscount had everything to make a man satisfied with life. It was evident that he had been shot at the very moment of his crossing the ditch—that he was flying for his life. You were Count de Chauvannes' gamekeeper. You had a young and pretty wife. It was shown in the trial that the Viscount had often made excuses to visit your house—that you were inflamed with jealousy against him. And further, that a mysterious ailment had seized your wife, Huguette, the very day after the murder. Her symptoms indicated poisoning, and after her death the post-mortem confirmed the opinion of the physicians. Upon searching your house a short carbine was found secreted in a cupboard. The bullet fitted it exactly."

In giving this outline of the celebrated Varville murder case, the young lawyer had been surprised at his own vehemence, his excellent emphasis and intonation. He was quite proud of himself and waited breathlessly to hear what reply Michel Gouillard would make to it.

"But sir," began the discharged convict almost in a whisper, "in all this there is no proof of my guilt. It was preposterous to charge me with being suspicious of Huguette; she was the best and most honest of women. As for the carbine secreted in my house, it may have been put there by the arm that killed the viscount, but where was the proof that the shot was fired by me? They filled the court with the low-lived villains brought in to swear my life away. Before God and man I protested my innocence of poisoning my beloved Huguette. I helped to nurse her. All the world knew how I loved her. The wretches, they told everything except the truth. They perjured their souls to fix the crime on me, although Count de Chauvannes swore that I had always been a steady and honest man."

"Ay, so he did!" exclaimed Victor, "but so terribly overwhelming was the burden of proof against you that you were even led to confess your own guilt."

"You are right, sir, I did confess," replied Michel Gouillard, lowering his voice and taking a step nearer to the young lawyer, "but that confession was wrung from me when I was no longer a calm and reasoning being. For six months I was plagued and harassed by a committing magistrate till my brain reeled. I should have been a raving maniac had I not got rid of that persecutor, that sleuth hound of the law, forever at my heels——"

All of a sudden the ex-convict ceased speaking, a death-like pallor overspread his countenance, and then a yell of hatred burst from his throat as he stretched forth his clenched fist toward a portrait hanging on the wall. He seemed overcome by some terrible emotion.

"Ah, there he is! There is the wretch who tortured me, disgraced me, ruined my life, and for all I know has killed my daughter."

"Silence, you villain!" shouted Victor D'Aubry, springing upon Gouillard, as if to strike him down. "That honest man was my father!"

The ex-convict staggered back a step or two at these words.

"Your father?" he whispered hoarsely, passing his hand in front of his face as if trying to brush away the film that twenty years of prison gloom had laid upon his eyes. "And so he is dead? Better so. Now I can understand your repulsion, your harshness towards me. You are just as cruel as he was. May my curse light upon both of you!"

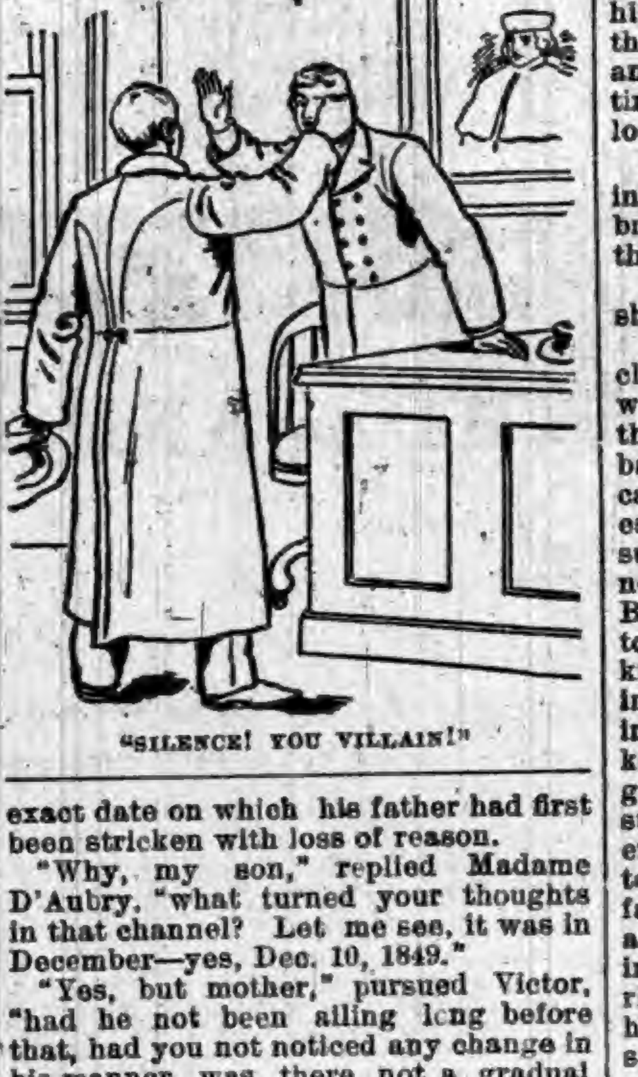
CHAPTER II.

Madame D'Aubry was alarmed at the condition of her son when he entered the apartment the next morning. He confessed to having passed a sleepless night, and it needed only a glance at his flushed face to see that he was laboring under some extraordinary excitement. The moment the servant had left the breakfast-room he turned abruptly to his mother and inquired the exact date on which his father had first been stricken with loss of reason.



"SILENCE! YOU VILLAIN!"

"Why, my son," replied Madame D'Aubry, "what turned your thoughts in that channel? Let me see, it was in December—yes, Dec. 10, 1849."

"Yes, but mother," pursued Victor, "had he not been ailing long before that, had you not noticed any change in his manner, was there not a gradual failing of his mental powers?"

"Alas, yes," said Madame D'Aubry, with a sigh, "it was the terrible anxiety the long continued strain caused by the examinations which he conducted in a celebrated murder case, the shooting of Viscount de Varville by Michel Gouillard, a gamekeeper in the employment of Marcelline's father. I'm confident he overworked himself. He seemed possessed of the idea that unless he could extort a confession from the murderer that his reputation as a committing magistrate would be gone, that disgrace, in fact, would come upon his name. Time and again during the examination he returned home in a half-dazed condition, his face the color of crimson, his nerves unstrung. At such times even the ticking of the clock disturbed him so that it would be necessary to stop it. And once on leaving the house he said, 'Wife, get me my gown. That wretch Gouillard doesn't seem to know who I am, but when he sees me in my gown he'll begin to tremble and tell everything.'"

These words confirmed the terrible suspicions that had tortured Victor's mind since the ex-convict had turned away from him with a curse on his lips for both father and son.

"Mother," he cried out, "how do we know that in the year 1847, the year of Gouillard's trial, father may not already have been affected by the terrible malady which terminated his life in so painful and horrible a manner? How do we know that he was not under the influence of that morbid excitement, that he was not suffering for what might be called a mania for persecution, and that this man Gouillard was really one of his victims and that the so-called confession was extorted from the wretch?"

"Oh, not so loud, my son!" whispered Madame D'Aubry; "it's all past and gone now. It would do no good to drag the matter to light now. The man was certainly guilty of the murder, confession or no confession."

Victor made a gesture of dissent.

"But, my son," continued Madame D'Aubry, "there's something we may do. We may rescue Gouillard's daughter Esther from a life of shame. I'm informed that she is plying the calling of beggar hereabouts; everybody recoils from her; she is known as the murderer's child. The people throw her a crust and then set the dogs on her if she loiters about the house."

"Mother," exclaimed Victor, joyfully, "will you cause search to be made for the girl this very day, will you take her in your employment, speak a kind word to her, hold out a helping hand to her so she may not be driven to her ruin from sheer despair?"

"I will, I will, my dear son," cried Madame D'Aubry. "I know where to find her. Give yourself no further anxiety. From this day forward she shall be properly cared for and kindly treated."

As the young lawyer closed his library door behind him he murmured to himself, "Thank heaven!"

"That is a beginning, and now for the next step, for if the law has committed a wrong, that wrong must be righted even if it disturbs the sacred repose of the dead. Gouillard's innocence must be proven before he dies. The fact that he fell a victim to the mad persecution of the father makes it more incumbent upon the son to undo the grievous error."

Victor D'Aubry was a young man, and while he felt he had the necessary moral courage and strength of character to begin this battle for Gouillard, to charge the courts of law, of which his father was an honored member, with having been willful as well as blind, yet he was only too conscious of his inexperience to proceed without a sage counselor at his side. And who could probably be better qualified to fill that difficulty than Monsieur Moreau, who had made a strong but ineffectual struggle to save the man?

Moreau had lately returned from Algiers, whither he had been transported for a political offense. He was now an old man broken in health. He had sacrificed his future and his talents to his opinion, but his welcome to his youthful colleague was cordial and hearty. After having listened to Victor's glowing avowal to begin his professional life by securing justice for Michel Gouillard, the aged lawyer replied:

"This is a good and noble thought of yours, monsieur. You are doing your duty. Your father cruelly harassed the man and his disgrace is mainly owing to your father. To me, this magistrate's conduct seemed at the time nothing short of infamous, and I was consoled afterwards to learn that within two years of the affair your father died in a mad house. Here," continued the aged lawyer, "are my notes of the case, but before I say anything more I should like to hear whether the principal actors in the drama are still alive."

"As I have told you, I have seen Gouillard, but I am not at all certain as to what has become of the other witnesses with the exception of the woman called 'The Hag.'"

"Oh, indeed," remarked Moreau, "this is an unfortunate witness. And the Count de Chauvannes, is he alive also?"

"Yes," said Victor, "and what is more, I am going to marry Marcelline de Chauvannes shortly."

Moreau gave a start, and fixed his gaze intently upon the young barrister. A deep silence ensued. Moreau was the first to break it.

"Monsieur D'Aubry," began the aged lawyer in a voice broken with emotion, "you have come to me for counsel, for guidance. I am sorry to be honest with you regarding the consequences. I am going to tell you all I know."

Victor bowed his head.

"You will recollect," he continued, "that a small blue book was found in the murdered Varville's pocket. It was an odd volume of Balzac. One day I took it up to pass an idle half-hour. Imagine my feeling upon discovering that on the page I was reading certain letters had small, almost invisible, black spots set underneath them. By some curious impulse I set to work putting these letters together. I found that they could be made up into words, and that these words were burning utterances of love—deep and passionate love felt by two beings for each other—first his, then hers in reply." Saying which, the aged lawyer read off these utterances in slow and measured tones, setting the emphasis exactly where it belonged.

"Great God!" whispered Victor, springing up and pressing his hand to his brow. "Monsieur Varville the lover of the Countess Chauvannes?"

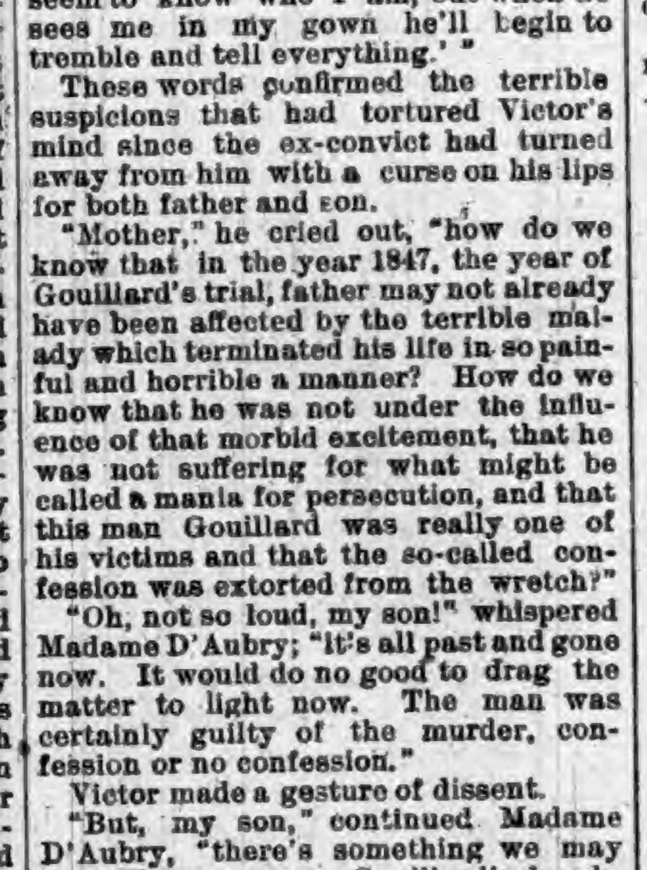
Moreau nodded assent, and after a short pause went on:

"Now, my young friend, you see clearly, do you not? Viscount Varville went to the appointment offered him by the Countess de Chauvannes. The husband, who probably had his suspicions, came upon them unawares. Varville escaped half undressed. He was pursued and killed by Count de Chauvannes or by one of his trusty servants. But the honor of the real criminal had to be shielded. Your father must have known the facts. He lent himself to the infamous business. The story of a love intrigue between Varville and the gamekeeper's wife was trumped up. Huguette often guarded the lover against surprise. Varville had been noticed several times at the lodge. But mark what took place after the murder. Huguette falls ill, stricken down with a violent attack of fever. It is certain that during that night she witnessed some terrible scene, and the affair took such a hold on her mind that fever was the result, but still there is a chance of recovery. The moment may come when the delirium will end, and she will be able to speak to save her husband—to point out the real criminal. She must be gotten rid of at all costs, and before her reason returns, too. Can you guess who had an interest in her death? Two days after the murder of Varville, and several days before the death of Huguette, the Countess de Chauvannes started for Nice, where for two years she struggled against the weight of grief and despair which overwhelmed her, until death mercifully came to her rescue. She died among strangers, abandoned by every one, after having given birth to a daughter—Mademoiselle de Chauvannes, your intended wife."

Victor sat there with a dazed and piteous look upon his face. Moreau turned away to give the young man time to collect his thoughts.

"Merciful heaven," murmured D'Aubry to himself. "Can this all be possible? Is my beloved Marcelline the daughter of a murderer?"

"My dear young colleague," said Moreau, "take courage. Halt where you are. There is no need of pushing this matter any further. It pays to be a hero, but not a martyr! Don't sacrifice your own happiness and this young girl's through a sentimental notion of duty. Let some one else champion Gouillard's cause. Make their lives pleasant and happy; befriend him and his daughter; in this way undo the wrong done by your father."



"CAN THIS BE POSSIBLE?"

"Never!" exclaimed Victor, springing up, "never! You have said yourself that it is my duty to befriend the man if he is innocent, and to get a revision of his sentence. I love Mademoiselle de Chauvannes, and my marriage with her will realize the dream of my life; but, sir, I shall be able, I must be able to reconcile my love with my duty!"

Mr. Gotham—So you sent your son to New York to earn his living.

Farmer Hayseed—You see, it was this way. He says: "Paw, I like th' city, and I'll go into the city and sell what you raise on the ole farm," says he: "You ship me all your truck, and I'll sell it on commission," says he.

Mr. Gotham—Ah, he became a commission merchant then.

Farmer Hayseed—In a small way, yes. You see, he doesn't get any goods to sell but mine. I farm, and he sells.

Mr. Gotham—I, see. Well, how has he got along?

Farmer Hayseed—Fairly well, I should say. I'm still workin' th' farm, but he's got a mortgage on it. —Good News.

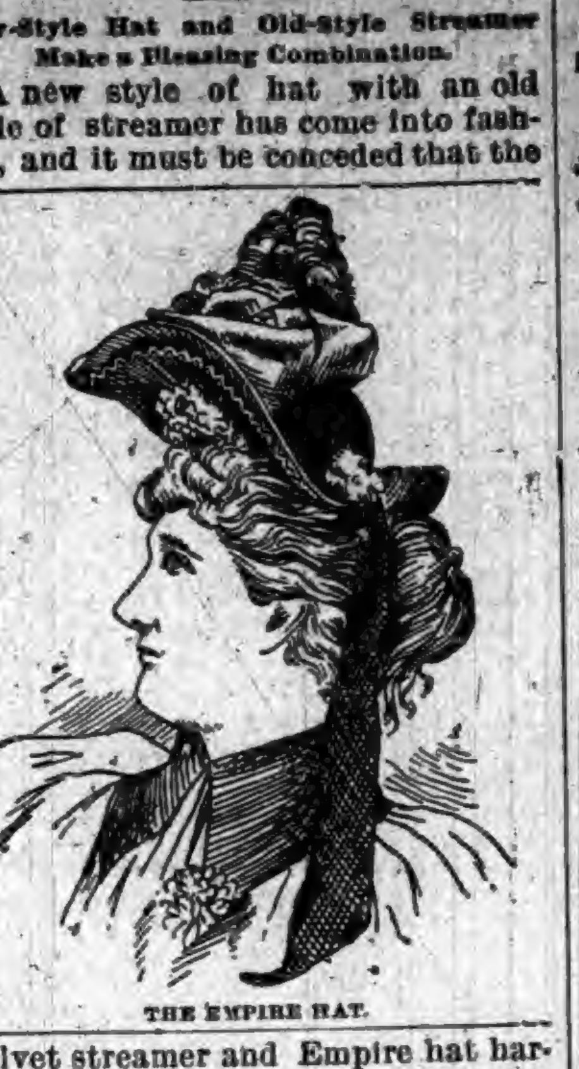
Drinking Coffee to Excess.

Coffee-drinking to excess is getting more and more common in New York, says a waiter. Hundreds of customers come in five or six times a day, drink off a cup of coffee and go off without eating anything. Coffee is evidently used by these as meat as well as a beverage, for, from the frequency of their visits, it is very evident they do not get a meal between breakfast and supper, which it is presumed they eat at home. The habit is evidently a very injurious one, for not one of the habitual coffee-drinkers is healthy, nearly all being nervous and sickly. Some of them carry the habit so far that they even go to two or three restaurants in the course of their rounds.

THE EMPIRE HAT.

New-Style Hat and Old-Style Streamer Make a Pleasing Combination.

A new style of hat with an old style of streamer has come into fashion, and it must be conceded that the velvet streamer and Empire hat harmonize. The Empire hat, shown in our illustration, is made of yellow Etruscan straw, with the crown and edge of black chip. The inside of the flaring brim is covered with black straw lace, which shows a suggestion of yellow beneath. The edge of this brim is finished with yellow Etruscan straw in a fancy pattern. Shaded roses in ombre tints nestle against the brim and rest their petals on the hair. Toward the front is a large Alsatian bow of many loops, composed of wide ombre ribbon, which reveals blended shades of old rose, black, cream and dull blue.



THE EMPIRE HAT.

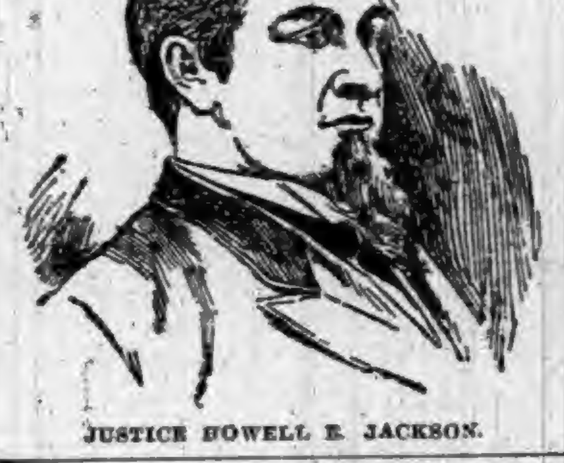
Above the loops of ribbon is a wavy coronet of black ostrich tips. The black velvet streamer starts from beneath the petals of a rose at the left side. It hangs gracefully and is caught on the dress with another rose.

JUDGE HOWELL E. JACKSON.

The Jurist Who Was Appointed to Succeed Justice Lamar.

Howell Edmunds Jackson, of Nashville, Tenn., whom President Harrison appointed to succeed the late Judge Lamar on the bench of the United States Supreme Court, is in his sixty-second year. He was born at Paris, Tenn., April 8, 1832. He lived in Jackson, Tenn., in his youth, and was graduated at the age of 16. He spent two years at the University of Virginia, and when 24 years old was graduated from the Lebanon Law School. Then he began to practice law. Three years later he moved his law library to Memphis. In 1876 he went back to Jackson to live and practice law.

He served two terms by appointment upon the Supreme Court bench of his State, and was once defeated in a nominating convention for the same position. In 1880 he was elected to the State House of Representatives on a State credit platform. His associates elected him to the United States Senate as a Democrat. He took his seat March 4, 1871. He served with Benjamin Harrison in the Senate, and the friendship formed between the two men at that time was never broken.



JUSTICE HOWELL E. JACKSON.

Swimming in Salt Lake.

The experience was not altogether a pleasant one. Having waded out far enough to do so, I scaled a bowlder and dived. As it is my custom to open my eyes under water, I did so as soon as I was fairly immersed. In an instant it seemed as if vitriol had been poured into them. Springing to an upright position as soon as possible, I tried to get the salt out of them, but the more I rubbed the more it seemed to get in. Nature relieved the smarts after awhile by pouring through the tear ducts enough of milder solution of salt to clear the irritated cornea of the fluid, and I took pains not to let the water into my eyes again. After that the bath was more enjoyable. There was a singular sensation of lightness, and it was easy to float; yet a bather who is not a swimmer will fare as badly here as anywhere, for the head, being heavier than the lower extremities, has a tendency to sink, unless one has the skill to keep it above the surface. On emerging from the lake I found that every inch of my skin sparkled with salt crystals, which were sharp enough to create discomfort and to suggest an undue intimacy with thistles. My hair was full of them, and they even adhered to my clothing, so that a vigorous shaking of raiment and a fresh-water bath were in order on reaching my hotel. When I told the people in town of my swim and the manner of it I was laughed at and informed that it was not the correct thing to swim, except at a bathing pavilion, where one has fresh water to shower away the salt.

Substantial Reward.

Physical strength is highly rated in Switzerland. In several cantons the custom still prevails of holding wrestling matches. The champions taking part in these athletic sports belong to the most diverse ranks in the social scale. Thus, at a recent festival at Grenchen, a little town in the canton of Soleure, a wealthy property owner and his tenant, a carpenter, stepped into the arena to wrestle according to the rules of the art. There were to be four rounds, or "falls;" the stake for each "fall" was one quarter's rent. After the carpenter had thrown his landlord four times the victor's prize was awarded to him, and he found himself entitled to live in his house rent free for a whole year.

Easter's Significance.

Theologically, the significance of Easter, according to Rev. Madison C. Peters, is that Christ's resurrection from the dead is the pledge of our resurrection, that by his triumph over the grave he has rolled away the stone from the tomb of human hope and painted upon the black cloud of death the rainbow of immortality. It is this triumph over death and the grave, this filling of our hearts with the blessed assurance of immortal bliss, that makes Easter pre-eminently the most joyous season of the church year. If we were created only for the cares, sins, crosses and sufferings of this life, we might well curse the day that gave us birth, go weeping through life and never smile again. Christians rejoice in the resurrection truth, because all infinitely prefer the expectation of perpetual being to the cheerless alternative of annihilation. Easter points to nature's lesson of revolution—all change, no death, and that in the deepest December of the year there is a nerve that runs forward to May, that in this perishable mass resides an imperishable spirit, that within this frail, tottering temple shines a light that will always burn, that somehow man must and will push up and on in a career worthy of a creature made in the sublime image of the Infinite One Himself.

THURSDAY.........MARCH 30, 1893.

G. W. Kirkpatrick of Richland has moved to Ashley.

H. C. PRESSLER, of Churubusco, has bought the Albion Democrat office.

NORWAY wants to become independent of Sweden, with which she has been united since 1814.

SOUVENER half dollars are all finished. Don't seem to be so great a demand for them as at first.

NEW YORK TIMES, one of the leading dalies of that City has been sold. Price $950,000. The present editors will be generally retained.

INDIANA prison south at Jeffersonville, was partly burned last week. State will lose about $25,000, and the owners of factory burned lost about $50,000.

A TERRIBLE cyclone, or rather several of them, passed over various parts of the south last Thursday. Several towns were partly destroyed and a few lives lost.

ORDER of the Red Cross have received 800 acres of land near Bedford, this state and will occupy it. It will be neutral ground, no matter what wars may arise as forty leading nations give them this pledge.

FIRST real punishment for boodling under our Australian ballot law. The boodler pays a fine of $25, goes to jail ten days and disfranchised ten years. He will probably know better next time. He was a leading republican at Rochester in Fulton county.

EDITOR MORSS of the Indianapolis Sentinel has been appointed Consul-General to Paris. It is a good place, but Mr. Morss has earned the best to be had. He is a man of more than ordinary ability and force of character, and has done grand service to the cause of democracy and purer government. We are glad to know he is remembered.

THE new salary law is fairly at work in various counties. At Lagrange, the recorder turned in $13 more than his salary at the recent session of the commissioners. But the sheriff lacked over $25 of collecting fees enough to get the quarter's salary the law would have given him. It will of course be easier for the recorder all of whose fees come in promptly, than for the sheriff, who must in many cases, wait a long time to realize the fees. In this county, the sheriff collected less than half his quarter's salary, and so must, we presume, wait for the rest till a sufficient amount is collected to pay the balance.

THE Dispatch thinks the COURIER inconsistent for saying democrats in DeKalb county will not be suited to be put into a senatorial district with Allen, and yet may be suited with the new districting of the state. But the two propositions are entirely distinct. In being districted with Allen, we will seldom have a state senator, as Allen will overshadow us. We have in the goodness of our DeKalb county hearts already given it to our weaker sister, Noble. How then shall we prevail against Allen? As to districting the state, we said, and still say it is fairer than the last districting made by republicans. So we still insist that republicans are very silly to object to the democratic gerrymander. It shows that they are ignorant of what their own party has done, or else they think others are ignorant of it.

Homes for Visitors to the World's Fair.

Is the title of a neat book containing a list of about 9,000 families who will accommodate visitors to Chicago during the time of the fair. It gives their names and addresses, and number of rooms each will have to spare; also gives a list of the leading hotels and their location; also contains twelve full-gage large scale maps, each numbered, representing a section, of the city; also a double-page key map, divided into sections, each section representing one of the large scale page maps, and being numbered to correspond. With this book intending visitors can readily decide and select the quarters of the city in which they would like to be located, and then enter into correspondence with one or more families, and thus arrange for satisfactory and comfortable accommodations at reasonable rates.

This book was compiled at great expense by a trustworthy Chicago firm, after a house to house canvass in the most desirable portions of the city. It is reliable, and great care was exercised to select reputable places. By its use people will avoid the expense and trouble incident to securing a place after arrival in the city.

The book can be obtained through the ticket agent of the Lake Shore railroad in this city by calling upon him, 13-16

Important to Taxpayers.

By an act of the legislature of 1891 the time for the annual settlement with the state was changed from June 1st to May 15th. To enable the auditor to make the settlement as required by law he must have the tax duplicates to work on immediately after the third Monday in April. It will be impossible therefore for the treasurer to extend the time or visit the towns to recieve taxes. Section 1656 R. S. forbids the treasurer under penalty taking the books from the office. Taxpayers will do us a favor by paying before the rush of the last few days.

GIVE THE HOME PRINTER A CHANCE.

The Delphi Journal sees clearly why local papers should receive the county printing and tells why in the following printed language:

In the first place the smart Aleck board of county commissioners of White county should be "everlastingly lambasted" for giving any outside printing concern a cent for work that can be done in Monticello. Home printers furnish better work than foreigners dare attempt to furnish and at from twenty-five to one hundred per cent less too. And then the home papers earn this patronoge. The average reader does not consider that the editor of a newspaper works many and many an hour, and spends many and many a dollar for which he receives no return. With the average citizen a political campaign lasts for three or four months. The newspaper is fighting the campaign year after year. The campaign never ends with the newspaper. The party's battles have to be fought and the newspaper does the work. Party men have to be defended and the newspaper does the work. In doing this employes are paid for extra time, oil is burned late into the night and supplements are frequently run and the newspaper owner foots the bill. In doing all these things the newspaper makes enemies for itself and its owner and loses patronage besides that never comes back. This is true of every county party paper. And being true the board of county commissioners that will deliberately take county printing from the paper of its own party and give to a foreigner ought to be kicked out of the court house in which they sit, and out of the county paper which they have betrayed.

The End of the World,

While writing with all the scientific knowledge of a great astronomer, Camille Flammarion in his marvelous story, "OMEGA: The End of the World," which begins in the April number of The Cosmopolitan Magazine, keeps the reader at the highest point of excitement by his vivid description of the alarm and despair excited by the approach of a comet whose collision with the earth had been declared by astronomers inevitable. The description begins at a time when the business of the world has been suspended, and at a great mass-meeting held in the Institute of France we hear the discussion of scientists as to the possibility of a second deluge, the drying up of all the surface water of the globe, or the total destruction of human life by cold, together with all the possible phases of death paralleled by the history of the moon. For scientific statement and sensational effect this characteristic production of French genius is unique, and the reader who reads this marvelous story—and if he begins it he will certainly finish it—will have assimilated without effort, a compact store of scientific knowledge. In this way, apart from its absorbing interest, this remarkable piece of fiction will have a distinct scientific value.

Poi, the National Dish of Hawaii.

Poi, the great food of the natives of Hawaii, is made from the taro plant, a vegetable similar in size and shape to a rutabaga turnip, which is grown in beds kept constantly submerged in water, a number of the beds being termed a taro "patch." Owing to the genial character of the climate the plant can be cultivated throughout the year. It is considered to be one of the most nutritious foods known, and is specially adapted for dyspeptics and persons troubled with stomach disorders.

The process of making poi from the plant is to first boil it and remove the skin, after which it is placed on large wooden trays and thoroughly pounded with pestles of stone, small quantities of water being added from time to time during the process of maceration. An hour or more of continual pounding is required, when a substance like dough results, known as paiai. In preparing it for the table, the paiai is placed in a wooden bowl, or calabash, and is allowed to stand a couple of days, until fermentation sets in, when it becomes poi, and tastes, to the unaccustomed palate, like sour flour-paste; but the taro when boiled simply as a vegetable is very palatable.

The natives eat poi sitting around a large calabash and dipping into it with their fingers. The dish is known as either one, two or three finger poi, according to its consistency. One-finger poi is the thickest form in which it is served, and sufficient of it adheres to one finger when dipped into it to admit of its being conveyed to the mouth. A thinner form of poi requires the use of two fingers for the purpose—hence two-finger poi; and yet another, still further diluted, cannot be secured from the dish without the use of three fingers, hence its name. Dyspepsia is almost unknown among the Kanakas, owing, principally, it is said, to the general use of this salutary food.—From "The Hawaiian Islands," in Demorest's Family Magazine for April.

Norway wants to become independent of Sweden, with which she has been united since 1814.

Souvener half dollars are all finished. Don't seem to be so great a demand for them as at first.

New York Times, one of the leading dailies of that City has been sold. Price $950,000. The present editors will be generally retained.

Indiana prison south at Jeffersonville, was partly burned last week. State will lose about $25,000, and the owners of factory burned lost about $50,000.

A Terrible cyclone, or rather several of them, passed over various parts of the south last Thursday. Several towns were partly destroyed and a few lives lost.

Order of the Red Cross have received 800 acres of land near Bedford, this state and will occupy it. It will be neutral ground, no matter what wars may arise as forty leading nations give them this pledge.

First real punishment for boodling under our Australian ballot law. The boodler pays a fine of $25, goes to jail ten days and disfranchised ten years. He will probably know better next time. He was a leading republican at Rochester in Fulton county.

Editor Morss of the Indianapolis Sentinel has been appointed Consul-General to Paris. It is a good place, but Mr. Morss has earned the best to be had. He is a man of more than ordinary ability and force of character, and has done grand service to the cause of democracy and purer government. We are glad to know he is remembered.

The new salary law is fairly at work in various counties. At Lagrange, the recorder turned in $13 more than his salary at the recent session of the commissioners. But the sheriff lacked over $25 of collecting fees enough to get the quarter's salary the law would have given him. It will of course be easier for the recorder all of whose fees come in promptly, than for the sheriff, who must in many cases, wait a long time to realize the fees. In this county, the sheriff collected less than half his quarter's salary, and so must, we presume, wait for the rest till a sufficient amount is collected to pay the balance.

The Dispatch thinks the Courier inconsistent for saying democrats in DeKalb county will not be suited to be put into a senatorial district with Allen, and yet may be suited with the new districting of the state. But the two propositions are entirely distinct. In being districted with Allen, we will seldom have a state senator, as Allen will overshadow us. We have in the goodness of our DeKalb county hearts already given it to our weaker sister, Noble. How then shall we prevail against Allen? As to districting the state, we said, and still say it is fairer than the last districting made by republicans. Mrs. Healy's Class.

The entertainment given at the Presbyterian church last Wednesday evening by Mrs. Healy's class of little girls, was a splendid one. They all had their work fully prepared and showed thorough training. The audience went away feeling it was one of the very best they had heard. Everything was of a high order of excellence, better than the average, and that gives their success all the greater merit. The tambourine drill was fine. The speaking by Gertie Caruth, Ethel McKay and Pearl Kelley was excellent and did them great credit. It would do credit to people much older. Maud VanAuken and Elsie Caruth spoke "Maud Muller" and "Kate Ketchem" in alternate stanzas, in a way that pleased their hearers and was very entertaining. And we might say of them and the others, that though the selections were quite long, no one had to be prompted. The class spoke a medley, also, that was quite a new feature, and very interesting. Then there was excellent singing by the class, and a splendid quartet by Dollie Husselman, Dottie Gibson, Maud VanAuken and Ethel McKay. They are our coming choir. The cutest thing was the duet, the two little Quakers, Aileen Garwood and Braddie Ralston. This captured the audience, unconditionally. It was well attended in spite of bad weather, and we believe the receipts were $25. The other members of the class are: Lizzie Otto, Katie and Georgie Cool, Maggie Ford and Gaile Riechel. All took part in the exercises, and did well. It is a bright class.

DeKalb's Latest Deer Hunt.

When we wrote, two weeks ago, about "DeKalb's Last Deer," we thought it it was the very last time a deer story would be credited to DeKalb county. But the COURIER correspondents always unearth whatever is goingon. Last Thursday, Cory Shugers called our attention to an occurrence, that was a surprise to us, and will no doubt surprise many of our readers. The day before, which would be March 22, 1893, the very latest DeKalb deer chase happened. That day, two deer were at large in Jackson township, only about two miles from Auburn. It seems that John Weaver and Lee Robbins have been keeping two deer since sometime last fall. Robbins bought his of Gertie Wilson, to whom it had been sent from Arkansas, we are told. The other was bought in Ft. Wayne, and we believe the two cost $55. They are a buck and a doe, and have been kept at Mr. Weaver's till the day in question, when it appears they in some way got out. Wandering to the railroad, a train frightened the buck, and he ran for dear life. At this point was where the chase came in. He ran across John Shugers' farm through the orchard, and over the fields in the usual gallant style of a wild deer, with Mr. Shugers and Mr. James Cool after him. They finally lost him in Mr. Cool's cranberry swamp. It is believed he and the doe will both be secured, and returned to their enclosure. We still believe we have the latest DeKalb deer story.

New Spring and Summer Millinery.

Mrs. F. A. Trumbull wishes to announce that she has just returned from the city, where she has spent the past week selecting and trimming her new spring stock. She has a fine assortment of goods of all grades and descriptions, which she will be pleased to show you. They are of the very latest and most desirable in price, style and quality. Call early and examine anything in the millinery line. We can, and will, sell as cheap as any house in the county. Store room as formerly over Lippeet's grocery Corunna, Ind,

For Town Marshal.

It gives us pleasure to say that the legislature left us an election of our own, an election for town officers in May. This will include a marshal. Mr. Pfefferl will retire, as he has other business that will fully take his attention. So we must select a new man. But one man has been mentioned to us so far; and that is a very desirable one. Eli T. Cochran is talked of for this important place, and will accept the nomination if given him. He would make an excellent marshal we believe. He is active, intelligent, a man of good character and good habits, and besides is a good mechanic, a point that should be taken into consideration. A mechanic, especially a carpenter, would be very useful in constructing crossings, seeing to sidewalks and looking to many other details. We bring the matter up this early, so all our voters can have a chance to study over the matter. We don't believe in taking a snap on anybody, but think the more they study this matter over the more Mr. Cochran will appear to fill the bill.

About 9000 Names.

MYRA CLARK GAINES left an estate worth $925,000 when she died in 1887. The lawyers have absorbed $800,000 of it in fighting over her will and hope to get away with the remainder in the new trial which they have just commenced.

IT is among the coincidences worth noting that Gen. Doubleday, the last surviving officer of the Fort Sumpter garrison, and Gen. Beauregard, who commanded the confederate forces which captured the fort, died so nearly at the same time.

A FRESNO juror appeared in the box while drunk. He was clearly guilty of contempt of court. But compared with the contempt appertaining to the inebriate, of which the court was clearly guilty shortly thereafter, the juror's effort was notably feeble.

"Catalonian Jackasses and Donkeys in Pentellaria," are subjects of recent United States Consular reports. Why does the government permit these consuls to inflict their autobiographies upon the long suffering people of this country at the public expense?

A SAN FRANCISCO youth took a pocketbook containing $47, and when apprehended some distance away explained that the episode was merely a practical joke. At this point the Judge showed remarkable self-restraint. In finding the merry jester guilty of larceny he said not a word about carrying a joke too far.

A PIECE of Kansas City property was sold last week for $4,500 a front foot and the local newspapers exultantly announce that this is a higher price than any obtained during the boom. But somehow the report suggests that the price—like the salary of the opera comique artist or the star pitcher—is for publication only.

IT knocks out all thought of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough (formerly Mrs. Hamersly) being a lone and poor widow, when we read that she is negotiating for the purchase of that glorious old estate, Aldermaston Park, which contains some 2,500 acres of the most picturesque and best-wooded land in England.

A LEGEND says that the devil gave a hermit the choice of three great vices, one of which was drunkenness. The hermit chose this as being the least sinful. He became drunk and then committed the other two. And it still remains a fact that a man is capable of any crime, however revolting under the influence of liquor. Whisky is the devil's Samson and Goliah.

ONE who has had experience says that a good street "fakir" can earn $2 per day. That is, by making a show of himself, being regarded as a swindler and being unquestionably a nuisance, he can earn about as much as the man who carries a hod. Still there will always be fakirs. A man with superlative power and agility of jaw must either be one or take to pugilism, and the latter calling is crowded now.

TENDER surgeons make foul wounds. Of the malady a man fears, he dies. Diseases are a tax upon our pleasures. He that would be healthy must wear his Winter clothes in Summer. He that sits with his back to a draught sits with his face to a coffin. A good surgeon must have an eagle's eye, a lion's heart and a lady's hand. A physician is a man who pours drugs, of which he knows little, into a body of which he knows less.

SPORTSMEN have long wondered whether the writers who fill the supplement of the Sunday papers with the accounts of the wonderful bags of big game that are made within a few hundred miles or less of this city are not overcharged with imagination, or not well qualified to distinguish a ground hog from a bear. The latter supposition finds support in an article which, describing a deer recently killed near Middletown, N. Y., says: "It was a male doe."

THE Grant Monument Committee announces that it has at last raised enough momey to complete the work and that the contracts have been let. This, it is to be understood, is not the million-dollar monument that New York promised when the dead soldier was laid in Riverside Park eight years ago, but a modest three or four hundred thousand dollar affair that the generous millionaires of the metropolis decided to be more in keeping with the simple tastes of Grant. This is doing as well as could be expected of New York.

AN Omaha paper has been printing interviews in relation to the employment of convicts. One citizen advocates making lawyers of them, so that when they shall be set free they will not compete with men who work. This is, by implication, a little rough on attorneys, but it is otherwise impracticable. How long would a burglar stay in jail after having conquered the intricacies of law? Not a minute. He would throw away his file, quit digging surreptitiously at the bricks and find a technicality big enough to knock out the whole side of the penitentiary.

TO PARIS by rail! It sounds strange, but they say it will be feasible by and by. Engineer Hutchinson has already made the surveys which show that a road via Alaska and across a bridge over Bering Strait, to connect with a Russian railroad, is feasible. Henry Clews gave the clews to the enterprise in one of his bright speeches at a dinner to some capitalists in New York two years ago; and we shall probably be able to go round to the Paris World's Fair of 1900 by way of St. Petersburg. But wont there be some grand chances for train robbers of lofty intellect along these lonely lines?

WESTERN artists who have been rejected from the doors of the World's Fair can find abundant comfort in the history of art in older countries. Rejection from the established exhibitions of France and England has often been the first sure sign of ultimate celebrity and sometimes of fortune. Instead of wasting moments of depression in vain repinings, let the rejected read the lives of the preraphaelites, the annals of the Barbizon school and the first struggle of the impressionists. The stones which the buildings rejected have often become foundations of new and splendid temples.

A NORWEGIAN gentleman has just pocketed 2,000 crowns by the simple expedient of passing under his own name, which happens to be Henrik Ibsen. He telegraphed to the owners of a public hall in Christiana to secure it for a lecture which he proposed to give on "The Submission of Woman." That hall-owner promptly announced the lecture, and on the appointed day every seat was full. The manager, arrayed in his best, awaited the sturdy, bearded, be-spectacled dramatist, and was just beginning to grow impatient, when "Mr. Henrik Ibsen" was announced—and a thin, rosy, fair-haired gentleman appeared. He was Henrik Ibsen; there was no mistake about it. He had even—being a far-seeing person—brought his certificate of birth to prove that he was surnamed Ibsen and Christian-named Henrik, and he duly mounted the platform and gave his lecture. The damage to the hall furniture was estimated at three times the receipts.

Japanese House Mats.

Japanese house mats, says Miss Bird in her work on Japan, are as neat, refined, and soft a covering for the floor as the finest Axminster carpet. They are five feet nine inches long, three feet broad, and two and a half inches thick. The frame is solidly made of coarse straw, and with very fine woven matting, as nearly white as possible, and each mat is usually bound with dark blue cloth. Temples and rooms are measured by the number of mats they contain, and rooms must be built for the mats, as they are never cut to the rooms. They are always level with the polished grooves or ledges which surround the floor. They are soft and elastic, and the finer qualities are very beautiful. They are as expensive as the best Brussels carpet, and the Japanese take great pride in them, and are much aggrieved by the way in which some thoughtless foreigners stamp over them with dirty boots.

The Change in Woman.

Charles Dudley Warner speaking of the change in woman says: "When she comes into a crowded railway station she comes with a straightforward, resolute, unassuming air, like a man. She knows exactly what she wants; she is not flurried; she does not need to go about nervously asking questions of stupid men. She has her watch and time table, and quietly takes her place and her rights. Only one thing she has not learned, and that is not to break into the head of a line waiting at the ticket office or the postoffice window. In time she will fall wholly into the ordered line of life by learning to respect the rights of others, although they may be men." Oh, no, she won't do anything of the sort. She will continue to do exactly the same as she has always done, and she will continue to get off backward from a moving car. —Omaha World-Herald.

SUGAR TRUST PROFITS.

THEY WARRANT AN INCREASE OF DIVIDENDS.

The Earnings on the Actual Capital of the American Sugar Refinery Company Amount to About 40 Per Cent.—Unholy Protection.

Profits Are Enormous.

Willett & Gray's Sugar Trade Journal says:

"At a meeting of the board of directors of the American Sugar Refining Company, held March 7, the following were unanimously adopted:

"WHEREAS, The earnings of the company during the past quarter warrant an increase of dividend on the common stock; and

"WHEREAS, Since the annual report of the treasurer to stockholders on Dec. 1, 1892, received from the corporations whose stock is held by this company (for the year ending March 1, 1893), render unnecessary for working capital the further retention of the surplus earnings of 1891 and 1892, as shown by the annual report:

"Resolved, That there be paid a quarterly dividend of 3 per cent. on the common stock, and in addition there be paid an extra dividend of 10 per cent. on the common stock from the surplus earnings of 1891 and 1892, and that a dividend of 13¾ per cent. be paid on that portion of the preferred stock of the company which is entitled to quarterly dividends, all the above dividends being payable on April 2 to stockholders of record March 13, when the tranfer books will be closed, to reopen on April 2."

In addition to the above resolution, the statement is authorized that the company, on March 1, after providing for all these dividends, has a surplus of net earnings of $5,000,000 in the treasury.

Notwithstanding that more than one-half of the $75,000,000 stock (one-half common and one-half preferred) is water, yet the holders of common stock certificates will receive on April 2 a dividend of 13 per cent. with the promise of 9 per cent. more before the close of the year, besides a share in the surplus earnings (already $5,000,000) that can, and may, increase the dividends 15 or 20 per cent. more. Deducting that part of the profits made in 1891, it is evident that this giant trust cleared, in 1892, after investing tens of millions of dollars in refineries and properties, at three times their actual value, about $15,000,000, equal to about 33 per cent. on the common and 7 per cent. on the preferred stock, or 20 per cent on the whole stock. Taking out the water, the earnings on the actual capital appear to be about 40 per cent. But common stock which gets the greater part of the profits is earning about 66 per cent. on the actual capital back of it.

The holders of original trust certificates can step into the office at the end of each year and draw out two-thirds as much as they put in, without diminishing the original investment. Isn't it splendid? and all because McKinley gave the trust free raw sugar and a duty of ½ cent per pound on refined sugar. As the trust refines over 3,000,000,000 pounds per year and collects the full half cent on every pound from the American people, this duty is worth over $15,000,000 a year to it. This was an entire gratuity from McKinley. Big refiners have stated under oath that sugar can be refined as cheaply here as anywhere. The cost of refining is about ⅛ cent per pound. During 1892 granulated sugar sold for about 1⅛ cents more per pound than raw (96 per cent. centrifugal).

If this is not legalized robbery, by what term shall it be known? It is no wonder that McKinley finds hosts of friends in and out of the Home Market Club who are ready to contribute a few thousand dollars to help him out of his present financial difficulty. They could afford to buy Central Park, build a magnificent palace in it, and donate it all to their tariff benefactor. If McKinley had made a bargain with the manufacturers (like the Hawaiian sugar barons have done in regard to sugar bounties with the Hawaiian planters) that he should receive one-half of all of the protection monopoly profits made under his bill, he would now be the wealthiest man in the world and would be the first billionaire. It was a shame that he neglected the people and made his bill in the interests of trusts; it will be scandalous if he now accepts financial assistance from any manufacturer or representative of a monopoly benefited by his tariff bill.

The Fox and the Geese.

The Philadelphia Record contains a suggestive cartoon. Two geese labeled "Silver Purchase Democrat" and "Enormous Appropriation Democrat" are carelessly approaching a fox, lying on its back as if dead. The fox is labeled "High Protection." The cartoon is entitled "The geese that think the fox is dead," and is intended as an object lesson for Democrats.

The idea is a good one and expresses a truth which may be more conspicuous to the Democrats after they have made, or tried to make, a tariff bill on the lines of the Chicago platform. But it comes with poor grace from a newspaper that advocated new duties on sugar, tea, and coffee, and the leaving of protective tariff duties an "textile fabrics of every description, products of iron and steel, earthenware, glassware, etc." (all of which articles by the way, are manufactured in Philadelphia), because "tariff beneficiaries whose interests deserve consideration" are not in favor of a "ruthless cutting of protective duties."

No, the high protection fox is not dead, and he lives at the same old quarters and does business in the same way.

Iron Ore Trust.

The reported completion of arrangements for a combination of the producers of iron ore in the lake region will not be overlooked by the revisers of the tariff in the Fifty-third Congress. The recent discovery of large bodies of fine ore that can be taken out at a small cost have led manufacturers to expect some reduction of price. The combination agreement is designed to prevent any such effect of this addition to the mining area. The revised tariff should contain no paragraph imposing a duty on iron ore.—New York Times.

Tariff Reform Methods.

The following is the second of a series of open letters now being addressed to President Cleveland by Thomas G. Shearman. The first letter simply asked permission to address a number of letters to Mr. Cleveland, with the idea that they be made public. Mr. Cleveland, in giving consent, stated that he regarded Mr. Shearman as well versed in the tariff question and capable of giving valuable suggestions. At Mr. Cleveland's suggestion the letters are given to the public at the same time they are given to him through the columns of the New York Times.

DEAR SIR: In pursuance of the plan approved by you in our recent correspondence, I beg to submit to you some preliminary considerations with regard to the general work of tariff reform, reserving questions of methods and details for subsequent letters.

The first necessity of the great work of reform, to which the American people have called you by such an impressive majority, is that it should be thorough. It may be considered that the necessities of Government revenue created by the reckless extravagance, if not actual corruption, of the last protectionist Congress, have made it impracticable at the present time to construct a new tariff upon a perfectly sound basis. It may be admitted, indeed, that an ideal revenue tariff has been made impracticable for the next four years. At all events, it is certain that the nearest approach to the standard of a tariff for revenue only which can be made at the next session of Congress must be a tariff which secures the largest public revenue with the smallest private gain.

Unless taxes are restored on sugar, tea and coffee, it seems evident that no adequate revenue can be raised without imposing a large number of duties which would have some element of so-called "protection" in them, and therefore increase the profit of some individuals at the expense of the community at large. But whatever tariff taxes have been repealed ought to remain repealed. The framers of the McKinley tariff, in their greediness for prohibitory duties for purposes of private gain, caused this nation to take a long stride toward the broadest free trade, and, believing this to be the ultimate result at which we should aim, I am not disposed to advise any step backward, simply for the sake of banishing all elements of protection from the tariff. * * *

All that is therefore practicable just now, from any point of view, is the abolition of taxes upon crude materials for manufacture and the reduction of other protective taxes to that point which will put the largest proportion of such taxes into the public purse and the smallest proportion into private purses.

The only danger to the cause of tariff reform lies in the possibility that a timid and unwise conservatism may prevent the fulfillment of those pledges upon which the people have justly relied and that some weak compromise may be adopted which will do little or no good, will disappoint the rightful expectations of the majority, and will lead the people to seek relief from oppression in disastrous experiments.

The danger of the present political situation lies in the depressed and discouraged condition of the farmers and planters of the West and South. For some years past they have not had good prices for their crops, except when, by reason of some disaster, those crops were small. Both wheat and cotton have been selling until recently at the lowest prices ever known to the present generation, and multitudes of small farmers and planters are now in a condition of poverty of which the prosperous people of the East have absolutely no conception.

Nothing is more natural or more inevitable than that, under the circumstances, millions of honest and faithful toilers, driven almost to despair, should catch at any political straw which promises relief. If the party to which the American people have now committed the charge of their Government does not devise some measure which will bring speedy relief to the farmers and planters, the people will certainly call into power some other party which will promise such relief.

But it is entirely in the power of Congress to lift this heavy burden from the agricultural classes, and to restore prosperity to them and to the whole country. There is but one way in which it can be done, and that is by a prompt and large reduction of duties upon foreign imports—so large as to strike down the Chinese wall which is now erected against importations from Europe, our best customer, and so prompt as to give admission to those goods, in large and generous measure, long before the Congressional elections of 1894 come around.

For the only way in which the prices of farmers' products can be increased without lessening their production, and therefore the only way in which the aggregate income of American farmers and planters can be increased, is by opening our doors to an immense increase of importations, every dollar's worth of which will be paid for immediately by the export of American farm products.

Let us now, while retaining all the free-trade features of the McKinley tariff, add to them free trade in raw materials and a large reduction in the duties upon manufactured goods, and we shall bring about an increase of necessary importations, which will pay for an immense increase in our exports of wheat, corn, cotton and provisions. This will enable the planters of the South to raise a larger crop than ever, and yet to secure for it the same price per pound which they are now getting for their small crop. It will raise the price of wheat 15 or 20 cents a bushel and raise the prices of all other farm products. On the other hand, it will reduce the cost of manufactured goods, and thus give to the farmers and planters the advantage of higher prices for everything which they sell and lower the prices for everything which they buy. It will solve the problem in which they are interested, and will not merely hold the vote gained in the last election, but bring in thousands of voters who have thus far held aloof from us.

Nor will such policy be attended with the least danger to the great manufacturing interests. Very likely a few concerns, which are now making an annual profit of 20 or 30 per cent. upon their capital, may have to be content with 10 per cent., but this is no cause for lamentation. The great mass of manufacturers will be greatly benefited by thorough tariff reform and reduction.

Considered from a merely political point of view, the expediency of such a course is obvious. The only persons who could even pretend to suffer any injury from it are to be found in a limited part of New England, a little district of New York, and the State of Pennsylvania. Almost without exception these persons did everything within their power to defeat you, and the cause which you represent at the recent election. No consideration which could be shown to them would have the slightest effect in gaining their votes or influence. They have carried all New England, except Connecticut, against any tariff reform whatever; they hold Pennsylvania firmly, but everywhere else they are powerless for any purpose. You have everything to gain in the West and South by a courageous and thorough reform of the tariff. You have everything to lose there if you fail to accomplish such a reform, and it is mere waste of time to attempt to conciliate the protectionist fanatics of the Northeast.

Yours very respectfully,
THOMAS G. SHEARMAN.

Unholy "Protection."

It would be hard to frame a severer indictment of the protective system than Senator George F. Hoar of Massachusetts has just drawn in a tribute to his long-time colleague, Henry L. Dawes, who retires from Congress after eighteen years of service in the House and another eighteen in the Senate. Says Mr. Hoar:

"Probably no Massachusetts interest has failed of obtaining such legislation as those concerned have desired. He (Mr. Dawes) has contented himself with securing for the interests that he represented all that they desired. In every Massachusetts factory there has been at least one man who has been accustomed to depend upon Mr. Dawes to see that his interests were cared for in national legislation, and on whose steadfast support Mr. Dawes, in his turn, could always depend when it was needed."

Mr. Hoar depicts Mr. Dawes as representing, during his long service in the Capitol, not the masses of the people in Massachusetts, but the owners of the factories; and as virtually making bargains with them by which he got them such rates of profit as they wanted through tariff legislation, while they saw that men were sent to the nominating conventions and to the Legislature who would continue him in office when his term expired. We have never seen so open an exposure of the system.—New York Evening Post.

FREEDOM to trade is as much a natural right as freedom to produce, for as the value of the thing made depends upon what the producer can get for it, any hindrance to its free exchange reduces its value, thus depriving the producer of part of the result of his labor.—St. Louis Courier

BEFORE THE FORTY-NINERS.

Deposits of Gold Known to California Priests a Century Ago.

The discovery of gold in California has recently called forth a good deal of discussion and also an especially interesting story from Captain W. H. Thomas, President of the Society of California Pioneers. Capt. Thomas, before he took up his permanent residence in Boston, spent many years in California, and is very much interested in the early history of the gold discoveries. He says:

"I am perfectly satisfied that the presence of gold in that region was known to the priests in the very earliest times. The priests, who were the first pioneers, were a pastoral people. As missionaries they gained a wonderful influence over the native Indians, and gradually flooded the country with great herds of sheep and cattle that roamed over ranges thousands of acres in extent. These herds the Indians tended, and it was, therefore, the policy of the priests to keep the Indians in subjection. Every priest had some practical trade which enabled him to utilize the labor of his converts building missions and constructing public works. Near San Bernardino there are still remains of an aqueduct that brought the water for ten miles through the hills, so that it would spout up in the public courtyard, and supplied the people of the town. That aqueduct was made of small stones, laid in a cement that is to-day as hard as granite—harder than any cement that is now known.

"The priests brought with them from Spain grape vines and orange trees, and they sought to bring peace and plenty to the new land. They were wise, long-headed men, and must have known of the existence of gold, but they also knew the avariciousness of the Spanish people. They reasoned that if the presence of the yellow metal should become known in Spain, hordes of greedy adventurers would rush in, robbing, killing and ravishing; their peaceful relations with the Indians would be broken off, the great herds would be scattered, and the supremacy of the priests themselves would be lost. This supremacy was at its highest in 1765, when from the mission at San Diego a chain of twenty-four missions was extended northward. Junipero Sera was priest-president of all the missions in California, and was an intelligent, persevering, enterprising man. He was not only instrumental in founding mission after mission, but he added to the herds thousands of sheep and cattle. I have been six times to California, and have talked with priests of all nationalities, Mexican, Spanish, Irish and American, and I am confident from what they say that Junipero Sera knew about the gold; but he was a singular character, and ruled with a hand of steel, so that gold was a word that no one dared to utter. He had the history of Peru and other countries in his mind, and he knew that an influx of gold hunters meant terror and destruction, and the failure of all his great plans."

COFFEE RAISING.

How the Popular Berry Is Cultivated on the Malay Peninsula.

The principal industry among Europeans in the Malay Peninsula is the planting of coffee. When one desires to enter into the business he secures a grant of 300 or 500 acres of jungle from the Maharajah or ruler. The forest is fired, leaving nothing behind but skeleton trees, which are hewn down and allowed to rot, thus fertilizing the coffee. When the coffee-trees are six inches high they are set out in rows four feet apart. Three years elapse from the date of planting to that of bearing. The blossom is pure white, and in fragrance like stephanotis. The trees are kept pruned so as not to exceed seven feet in height; but, if permitted, they attain the height of twenty feet without bearing fruit, while the root will destroy the other trees. When the berry is first developed it is very much like an olive, only round; when ready for picking it is red like a large cherry, having inside two stones, which are the coffee-beans. The blossom remains twenty-four hours on the tree, then it falls, and a month thereafter the berries are mature. The coffee-tree flowers twice a year, and usually produces two crops. The berries, after picking, are taken to the pulping-house, where the husk or skin is taken off, and then placed in sheds to ferment; here they remain for ten or fifteen days, being afterward taken to the peeler and washer, and dried on rattan matting, and afterward conveyed to the storage shed, where they are packed in bags for shipping.

Creede's Prosperity.

Creede, Colo., the wonderful mining town which attracted so much attention about a year ago, is by no means dead, though its remarkable boom has long since waned. The idea was pretty general that Creede burst with the boom, but that is not the case. The solid business men of the town regard the collapsing of the boom, with all its spectacular features, as a very good thing for the business interests of the place.

No form of malarial fever, from the calentura of the Pacific, and the broken bone fever of the Mississippi, to its milder types, can resist the curative action of this benignant preserver and restorer of health, a veritable boon to persons in feeble health or liable to incur disease.

A Transmogried Dispatch.

A firm on Maiden Lane received the following telegram one morning: "A mosquito ill. Mrs. A. B——." They were unable to divine why the sender of the message should have taken them into her confidence respecting this occurrence. Personally they would have been glad to know that all the mosquitoes were ill beyond hope of recovery. One of their clerks did not appear that morning, however, and his absence enabled them to put this construction on the telegram: Amos quite ill." The clerk's name was Amos. He was ill. The operator was either stupid or funny.—New York Sun.

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

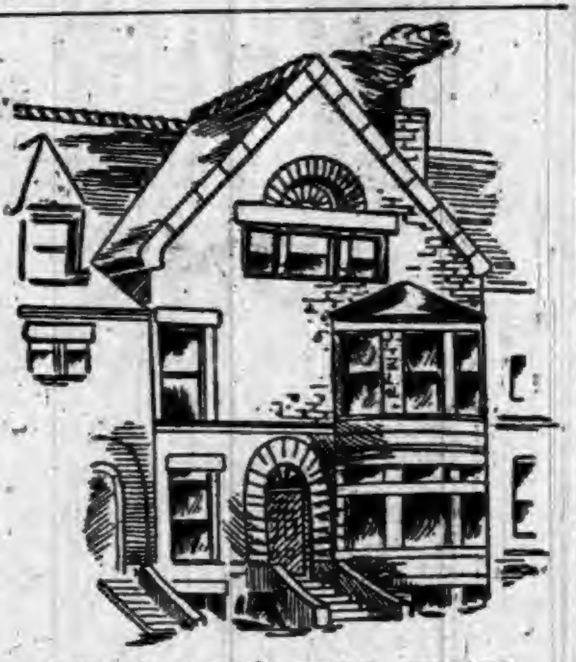
HOMES OF THE CABINET.

ABODES OF MR. CLEVELAND'S POLITICAL FAMILY.

Something of the Domestic Life of the Advisers Whom the President Has Chosen to Aid Him in Administering Public Affairs.

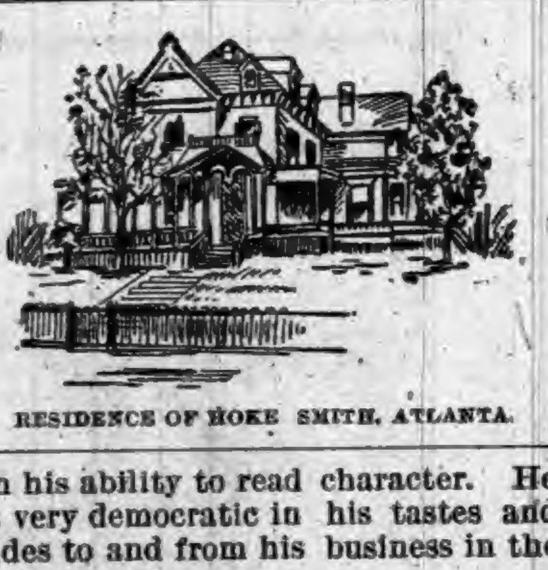
How They Live.

From the public lives of the men whom President Cleveland has appointed to his Cabinet it is interesting to turn and note their domestic habits.



JUDGE GRESHAM'S HOUSE, CHICAGO.

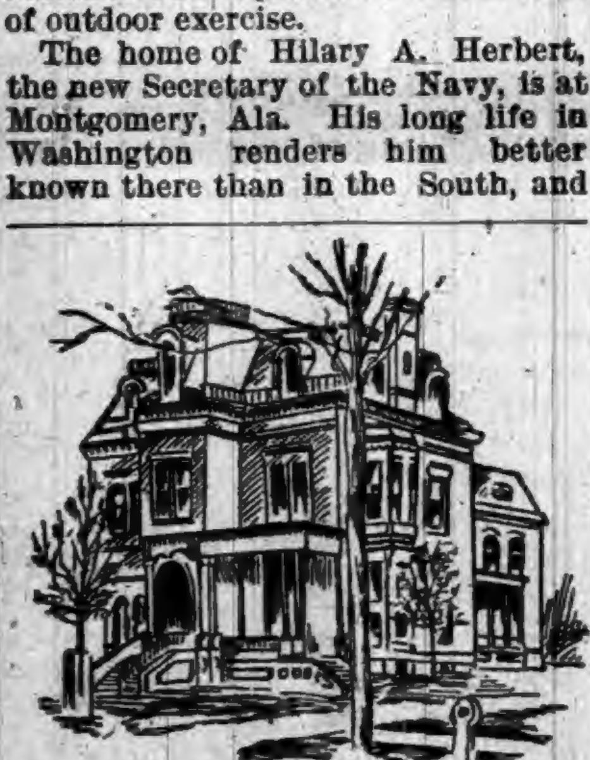
The gentleman who holds the portfolio of State, Hon. Walter Q. Gresham, finds the chief delight in life in the bosom of his family. His home is one of a series of brown stone buildings on Prairie avenue, Chicago, and here he dispenses royal hospitality to his friends. In 1858 he married Miss Matilda McGrain, of Harrison County, Ind. Judge Gresham's figure is tall and slender and his handshake warm. He prides himself on his ability to read character. He is very democratic in his tastes and rides to and from his business in the street cars.



RESIDENCE OF HOKE SMITH, ATLANTA.

The home of Hoke Smith, Secretery of the Interior, is a large but unostentatious dwelling on West Peachtree street, Atlanta, Ga. It has broad piazzas and an extensive lawn in front, and here during the long summer afternoons Mr. Smith may be seen playing with his children. There are three children, Marion, the eldest, aged 8; Mary Brent, aged 4; and Lucy, a babe of 8 months. Mr. Smith is but 38 years old and is fond of outdoor exercise.

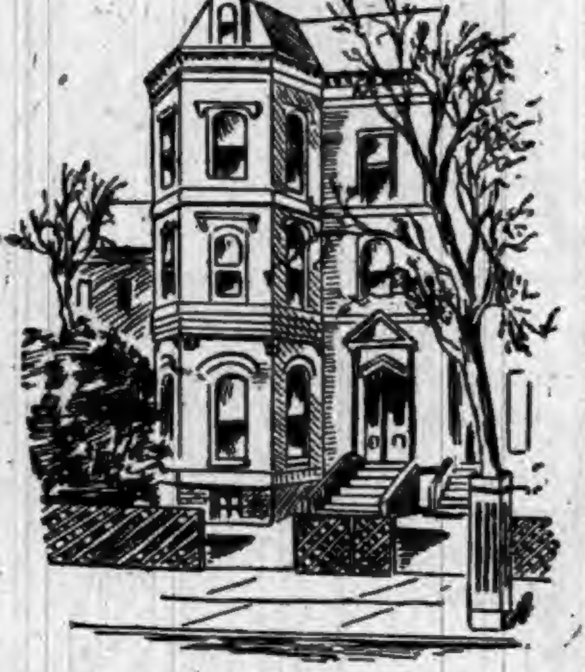
The home of Hilary A. Herbert, the new Secretary of the Navy, is at Montgomery, Ala. His long life in Washington renders him better known there than in the South, and at the capital he lives with his family at the Richmond. Mr. Herbert is a widower. He has three children, two daughters and a son.



WILSON S. BISSELL'S HOUSE, BUFFALO.

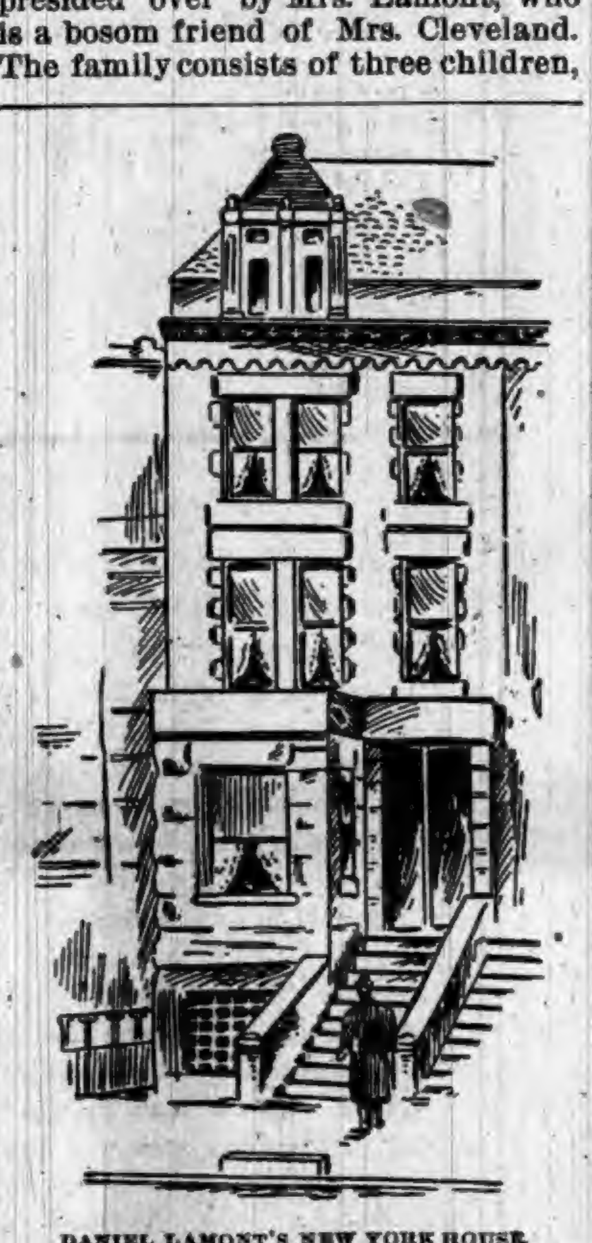
Wilson Shannon Bissell, who has been a resident of Buffalo for forty years, lives at 295 Delaware avenue. Like his former law partner, the President, he led a bachelor's life until his friends thought he would die one, but four years ago he married Miss Louise Sturgis, of Geneva, New York, and is now the father of a little girl about the age of Ruth Cleveland. Mrs. Bissell is an accomplished musician and was music teacher at the Buffalo Seminary when she married. She is a charming lady.

John Griffin Carlisle, the famous Kentucky statesman, is as democratic to-day as when in his early years he followed the plow in Kentucky. He is adored by newspaper men and is uniformly courteous and polite. He has been known to give his seat to a colored girl in the street cars with as much grace as though he were offering his place to a Senator's wife. His wife, who presides over his home in Washington, is a most gracious and accomplished lady. She is lithe as a school girl and very young in appearance, although she is the mother of two grown-up sons.



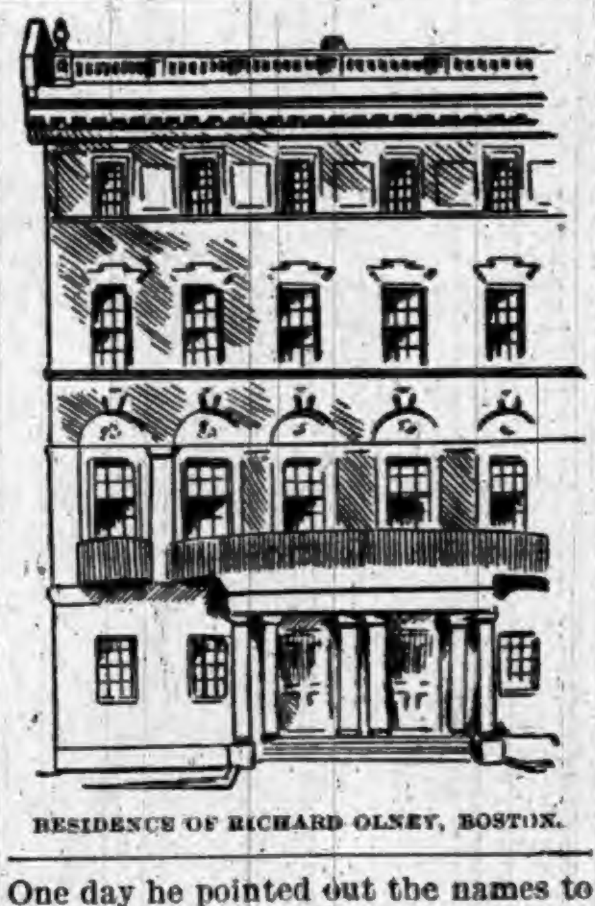
MR. CARLISLE'S HOUSE IN WASHINGTON.

With Daniel Scott Lamont the public is fairly well acquainted. He is the intimate of the President. Mr. Lamont's home in New York is on West 72d street and is gracefully presided over by Mrs. Lamont, who is a bosom friend of Mrs. Cleveland. The family consists of three children, the oldest of whom is 11 and the youngest 4.



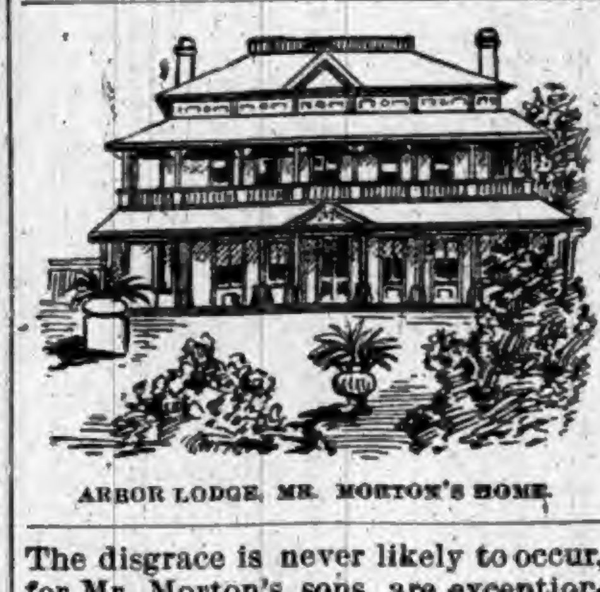
DANIEL LAMONT'S NEW YORK HOUSE.

Richard Olney, the new Attorney General, is one of the leading lawyears of New England, and for a long time has drawn a princely fortune from his legal profession. His home is on Commonwealth avenue, where he resides in winter. The summer home is at Falmouth. His wife is a daughter of the late Benjamin F. Thomas and their two daughters are married, one in Boston and the other to a physician in Berlin, Germany.



RESIDENCE OF RICHARD OLNEY, BOSTON.

Arbor Lodge is the name of the place where J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture, watched the growth of Nebraska City. He is a pioneer in Nebraska, having gone there two years ahead of the government surveyor. His home is one of the most charming places in the country. In 1881 his wife died and on the tombstone he carved his own name and those of his three sons. One day he pointed out the names to his sons, saying: "If either of you does a dishonorable thing I will have his name chiseled off that stone." The disgrace is never likely to occur, for Mr. Morton's sons are exceptionally bright young men.



ARBOR LODGE, MR. MORTON'S HOME.

EGGS FOR EASTER.

The Practice of Eating Them Has a Very Ancient Origin.

The use of eggs for Easter can be traced, says Count de Gebelin in his "Religious History of the Calendar," to the theology and philosophy of the Egyptians, Persians, Gauls, Greeks and Romans, among all of whom an egg was a symbol of the universe, the work of the Supreme Divinity. The Persians gave presents of eggs at the feast of the New Year—i. e., the feast of the vernal equinox—in honor of the renewal of all things. "The Egyptians held the egg as a sacred emblem of the renovation of mankind after the deluge. The Jews adopted it to suit the circumstances of their history, as a type of their departure from Egypt, and it was used in the feast of the Passover as part of the furniture of the table with the Paschal lamb." The early Druids used the egg in their ceremonies. In Russia one man greets another on Easter with "Jesus Christ is risen." "Yes, he is risen," reply is made, and then an egg is given. In Moscow no meeting takes place without this salutation and exchange. "The meanest pauper in the street presenting an egg and repeating the words 'Cristos Voscrees' may demand a salute even of the Empress." In some countries of Italy eggs are carried to the church to be blessed, and then taken home and set out with flowers on the table. Every visitor during Easter week is invited to eat an Easter egg, an invitation which must not be refused. Eggs in all countries are sent as tokens at this time, and enter into the sentiments and pastimes of old and young alike.

Royal Baking Powder Is Absolutely Pure

WHILE there are so many alum baking powders in the market, the use of which all physicians decide render the food unwholesome and liable to produce dyspepsia and other ailments, housekeepers should exercise the utmost care to prevent any powder but the Royal from being brought into their kitchens.

In the use of Royal there is an absolute certainty of pure and wholesome food.

The official State Chemists report: The Royal Baking Powder does not contain ammonia, alum, lime, nor any injurious ingredients. It is absolutely pure and wholesome.

In the use of any baking powder but Royal there is uncertainty if not actual danger.

It is unwise to take chances in matters of life and health.

Making Bogus Antiquities.

Dealers in bogus works of antiquity have been doing a rushing business of late. Recently the Louvre came near being swindled by a smart young man who brought in a magnificent bronze statuette, a specimen of Venetian art of the fifteenth century. The patriotic young gentleman declared that he would let the Louvre have it at a sacrifice because he would rather see it there than anywhere else. Nevertheless, if it was not purchased in twenty-four hours, he would reluctantly be obliged to sell the statuette to a foreign establishment. So he modestly fixed the price. Everybody appeared to be delighted with the beautiful work, but the director of the fine arts, M. Roujon, was absent, and the money could not be paid to the patriot until he returned. An examination proved that this magnificent ancient piece was just six weeks old.—Collector.

How a Man Cooks.

The absent-minded man is at it again. He had been reading the egg story published in these columns, and decided to try the trick. The first thing to do was to boil the egg. How many minutes? he asked himself, and going to the stove with the egg in one hand and his watch in another, he dropped the latter in hot water. Then placing the egg on the table he sat down to read till the time was up. At the end of five or six minutes he was surprised to find the egg lying there before him, but supposing that he had himself taken it from the kettle and cooled it, he proceeded to crack and peel it. The consequences may be imagined. Finally he missed his watch. The house was searched high and low, and it was not until the following morning that the cook found it in the kettle, where it had been boiling for hours.

Flies Communicate Cholera.

Flies are a very active medium of communicating cholera, according to the report of the Hamburg Medical Society. Nine flies were captured which had been in contact with infected cholera material, and were placed in flasks containing nutrient gelatine. In six of the nine vessels numerous colonies of comma bacilli were successfully cultivated—of course, from the infection conveyed by the flies. The possibility, therefore, of falling a victim to cholera in this way is by no means small.

Considers it "a household necessity." Mr. A. J. Whiting, Newton, Kansas, accentuates his opinion thus: "I have used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in my family for the last eight years and consider it a household necessity.

A Good Reason.

"Yes," assented Mrs. Smith, "she has a pretty face, but I think that it has a rather hard expression, don't you?" "That's because her complexion is enameled."—Buffalo Express.

Obituary.

John Wastler was born in Stark county, Ohio, March 17, 1827 and departed this life March 21, 1893 aged 66 years and 4 days. In September of 1850 he was married to Caroline Bechtel. To this union were born ten children four of which preceded him to the spirit land. In 1861 he came to DeKalb county, Ind. where he lived until his death. His first wife departed this life May 10, 1873, and on May 10, 1874 he was united in marriage with Martha Hockensmith. To this union were born eight children, one of which preceded him to the beyond. He leaves behind him to mourn his death a wife, seven sons, six daughters, two brothers, three sisters and a host of other friends. Mr. Washler was esteemed as a kind and affectionate husband, a good citizen and an accommodating neighbor. He formerly belonged to the German Lutheran church, but in his latter years was not a member of any church, but he maintained the faith taught him in his early life. The funeral services were conducted from the Rehoboth church, Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating. The interment took place in the Bear Creek cemetery.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

"THAT TERRIBLE DISTRESS."

Treated by Eight Physicians Without Benefit.

CURED BY LIVURA.

MR. F. B. ARCHER.

LIVURA M'F'G. CO., DEAR SIRS:—"For about 5 years I have been afflicted with Liver trouble, causing me to become very Billous. I had headache continually, my appetite was very poor, and a deathly faintness at the pit of the stomach accompanied by a terrible distress. During the past two years my Kidneys became very weak and pained me so badly I could not rest. Owing to extreme nervousness I was unable to attend to my business, and in January I came down with Nervous Prostration. Eight different Physicians have had me under their care, but I grew worse instead of better.

Learning of PITCHER'S LIVURA I began taking it and my improvement was noticeable from the first. I have taken 3 bottles and am ENTIRELY CURED, able to attend to my work, and have not felt so well for 6 years. I give all the credit to PITCHER'S LIVURA.

Respectfully, F. B. ARCHER,
830 West Concord Street, Dayton, Ohio. 34

Mothers' Recommendation.

We are acquainted with many mothers in Centerville who would not be without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy in the house for a good many times its cost, and are recommending it every day. From personal experience we can say that it has broken up bad colds for our children.—Centerville, South Dakota, Citizen. 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

The Hoosiers Want the Best.

"The people of this vicinity insist on having Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and do not want any other," says John V. Bishop, of Portland Mills, Indiana. That is right. They know it to be superior to any other for colds, and as a preventive and cure for croup, and why should they not insist upon having it? 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It is a great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn, Ind. tf

The Chicago typographical union passed resolutions on the death of Elliott F. Shepard.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Day and Pioneer Citizens.

In a lovely forest-covered valley in Pennsylvania, a party prospecting for oil boring deep, struck a gusher and before tanking could be got ready barrels and barrels of the black, odorous petroleum had gone to waste. The news spread like wild-fire, and from every quarter men singly and in company with others hastened to the spot; hitherto worthless land sold at fabulous prices; the valley was all alive with people and as well after well spouted the dark rock oil, a city was founded there with costly hotels, bank buildings, opera house and together with these a street railroad was built, a municipality was established, police were enrolled and every business flourished.

The oil yield suddenly ceased, the subterranean reservoirs, the accumulation of ages had been exhausted and what had made, failing, as speedily unmade the oil city. A year or two later and the former loneliness of nature's solitude, was intensified by the strange silence of an abandoned city, desolated fields and the numerous gibbet-like derricks that covered the oil tract. For a time, population only seemed needful to revive the past, restore its values and its activities, but soon, Time's heavy hand fell upon a modern ruin of a city created by oil and killed by its exhaustion.

Just such an experience is familiar to residents of a far west state. A gold vein that had attracted a multitude and had built a mountain city replete with all the necessaries and comforts of civilization was worked out and in the course of years, gradually there grew a painful silence in streets and business blocks and dwellings where busy thousands had homes and interests, where church bells had announced the days of begrudged rest and avarice had enslaved labor. Not all departed at once to other fields of promise, not all even yet have gone and it is said that as if in mockery of revelry in empty possession, impelled by choice or necessity, some hundreds remain to occupy at will taxless and rentless the former homes of millionaires—Eutopia materialized and communism in its sequence.

All along lines of railroads, the experience of these cities has been multiplied; hope has had fruition and its failure; and travelers glancing from car windows see time-worn, paintless and dilapidated towns and villages while a few miles away other sleeping hamlets remain unchanged and peaceful in their undisturbed repose. These are all wrecks of the railroads, that have robbed them of their trade and fortune to build up rival places. The methods have been uniform.

A road was projected, surveys were made and aid solicited upon proposed routes. The prospect of business and the certainty of its loss if the road went elsewhere, stimulated rivalry and promised help almost unstinted.

Leading men variously actuated called meetings, and the location of shops, roundhouse or making the place a division terminus, were prospective in the event of proper encouragement in site and money. We shall see how assurance and extortion on part of land owners near Auburn, lost our town an almost certain location of a division terminus in what is known as Stamets Addition and founded upon a swampy site the thriving town of Garrett.

Indifference was punished and liberality rewarded. The roads curving right or left left some places inland, or off their line, new towns sprang up, and of those upon the road, where formerly all had a share of business and an equal chance of life, since business sought the fittest points and population accompanied, some places took on new life and others fell into decay.

Such on a minor scale has been the general history of the villages and towns of DeKalb county. The Air Line railroad created Corunna, Waterloo and Butler but it killed Sedan, arrested by the growth of Auburn and Newville and made Uniontown an isolated suburb of Waterloo.

The Ft. Wayne, Jackson and Saginaw railroad boomed an already prosperous town, the business metropolis of the county and almost ruined a place which had given lavishly to secure its hoped for aid.

The Detroit & Eel River railroad restored the wavering balance to Auburn, insured its stability, stimulated its people to activity and it laid the broad foundation for Butler's well-earned and lasting prosperity.

The Baltimore & Ohio proffered Auburn a helping hand not taken, gave promise to the sometime town of Auburn Junction, created the fresh and vigorous towns of St, Joe and Garrett peopled by live business men and hospitable citizens and condemned to stinted growth the older villages of Newville and Spencerville.

Under such conditions and prospects the people of Auburn devoted their energy and means in aid of their first railroad and felt an enthusiasm and pride in contributing towards opening up connection with the great Saginaw Valley with its lumber and its salt, and with the country at large.

In February, the company officers pledged themselves to have the cars running to Auburn by July 4th, if subscribers responded promptly in paying the installments as they became due. A large and enthusiastic meeting was held and those present promised to aid by word and action to secure an early completion of the road and extended a cordial invitation to people along the line to come and celebrate their success at Auburn.

LIFE'S UPS AND DOWNS

VISITING THE GOOD PEOPLE OF THE WORLD.

Cumberland, Md., Swept by Fire—The Engineers Will Appeal Their Case—Carter Harrison Elected Mayor of Chicago—Republicans Win in Kansas and St. Louis.

SWEPT BY FIRE.

Cumberland, Md., Damaged to the Extent of $250,000.

Cumberland (Md.) special: Fire supposed to be of incendiary origin was discovered in a stable in an alley in the rear of the McKaig block on Baltimore Street, bounded by Liberty and Mehanic Streets in the very heart of the city There were a number of wooden structures in the alley-way, and as the wind was was blowing half a gale the rear of the block was soon a seething mass of flames. In quick succession the buildings on Baltimore Streets occupied by the New York Clothing Company, by Chas. White, dry goods, Thos. Coulehan, groceries, and Sterns' clothing store were gutted. Meanwhile the fire was spreading rapidly up Mechanic street and with the wind showering sparks to remote parts of the city a wholesale conflagration seemed certain. Mayor Hebb telegraphed for assistance to Washington, Pittsburh, Martinsburg, Frederic, Frostburg, Parkersburg, Myersdale, and Bedford.

After a six-hour struggle the fire was finally gotten under control with a loss of six buildings on Mechanic street and seven buildings on Baltimore street. Assistance arrived from Martinsburg and Bedford. Washington had started an engine and two reels, which were stopped at Martinsburg.

In all fifteen places of business and a boarding-house and restaurant and seven dwelling houses were completely destroyed.

While the fire was at its heighth up town another was started by the dropping of a lighted match in the southern portion of the city. Twelve buildings were completely destroyed before this second fire was subdued. As near as can be estimated, the total loss will foot up $250,000.

Will Fight the Case.

Toledo special: James Lannon, the Lake Shore engineer who was found guilty of contempt of court, according to Judge Rick's decision, has, in obedience to the instructions of his attorneys, refused to pay his fine and has been formally arrested and is in the custody of the court. His attorneys will appeal the case to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus and it will come up at Washington as soon as possible. The Brotherhood of Locomotive engineers will fight the matter to the bitter end and will not spare the expense. They realize that the final decision is of vital importance to their organization.

Collision on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

A collision occurred on the Pennsylvania railroad at Pack Saddle, Pa., between two freight trains. Samuel Snowden, a brakeman, was so badly burned that he died a few hours later. Conductor P. S. Williams of Altoona, arm broken and badly cut about the head. Conductor D. E. Anton, of Derry, arm broken and badly injured about the heac and eyes. Engineer Brantlinger of Derry, severe scalp wounds and other bruises. Fireman Mahan of Derry, head and shoulder cut. Flagman G. W. Miller of Altoona, hurt about the head. No explanation of the accident has been made.

Spring Elections.

Returns from many cities and towns throughout Kansas show that the Republicans have swept everything where party lines were drawn, which was the case in most of the principal towns.

St. Louis special: The returns show the first sweeping Republican vote for years in St. Louis. With the possible exception of Brown, for Auditor, the Democrats do not seem to be in it at all, The Republicans have bagged about everything from Walbridge, for Mayor, down by majorities of at least 2,000.

Among Icebergs.

London special: Captain Lillia, of the British ship John Cooke, which sailed from San Francisco November 1 and has reached Queenstown, reports that on the night of January 14, he saw a full rigged ship sailing among fifty icebergs. Her destruction he says, was inevitable. The John Cooke got clear of the icebergs after many hours of peril and several narrow escapes. Captain Lillia estimates the length of the largest iceberg as fifteen miles and its height as 700 feet.

A Fatal Shot.

Frank Denny, 9 years old, living with his uncle, William Jackson on a farm west of Elgin, Ill., took a rifle, and, going into the woodshed, shot his little cousin, Mildred Jackson, 7 years old. The bullet entered the child's head and the wound will prove fatal.

Arrest of a Murderer at Elkhart.

A man supposed to be the slayer of Louis Schilling, who was recently found murdered in his meat market in Kalamazoo, Mich., was arrested at Elkhart, Ind. He refuses to give any information regarding himself.

An Earthquake at the Coast.

San Francisco special: A slight earthquake of short duration was felt at Los Angles, San Bernardino, San Diego and other Southern California points recently.

Carter Harrison Wins in Chicago.

Carter H. Harrison was chosen Mayor of Chicago by a majority of 19,000, and the entire Democratic ticket elected by majorities ranging from 16,000 to 19,000.

An Old Boiler Explodes.

A terrible boiler explosion occurred near Lacona, Iowa. Four person were killed, Henry McKinness and three sons. The boiler was an old affair that had been in use many years in the saw mill owned by Henry McKinness. The explosion of the boiler completely wrecked the mill which was a very substantial building. Henry McKinness, the father of the boys, was standing close to the boiler. His body was scalded in a terrible manner. Both legs were broken in several places and death must have been instantaneous. It was over an hour after the explosion before the body of Henry McKinness the 32-year-old son, was found. It was lying far from the mill tore to pieces. One foot was buried in his skull. The other foot was found nearly twenty-five feet from the head. The clothes were torn and it was almost impossible to gather together all the fragments of the body. John, the eldest son, was alive when found, but he died in an hour afterwards. He was badly scalded. Peter, the 11-year-old boy, was found with life almost extinct. He was unable to move and died before he could be removed.

FIRE FOLLOWS EXPLOSION

And Lives Go Out in the Bowels of the Earth.

One of the most distressing disasters that ever occurred in the anthracite region followed the explosion of a lamp in the hands of a Hungarian employed in the Nelson colliery near Shamokin, Pa., recently. The colliery, which is operated by J. Langdon & Company, is one of the largest and best-known in the region, paying superior wages and furnishing work to its 1,000 employes the year around.

Fire followed the explosion and the smoke which rushed through the airshafts caught ten men who had just gone to work in a vein above the scene of the explosion and smothered them to death.

The fire started about twenty feet from the bottom of the slope, where there is an oil-house which is used by the men to change their working clothes for others before leaving the mines. A Hungarian was filling his lamp and it exploded, igniting the oil about him. He rushed from the oil-house and the flames spread with rapidity.

Attempts were made a fight the fire, but those who started to do so were compelled to flee for their lives. They succeeded in reaching the bottom of the shaft and were hauled to the surface along with some belated miners who owe their lives to the fact that they did not go to work at their usual time. The ten men who lost their lives were at work in the red ash vein, located nearly one hundred feet above where the fire broke out.

Through an airway from the lower vein in the red ash vein the smoke poured, suffocating the unfortunates like rats in a trap. Almost the entire town gathered in the vicinity of the burning mine, from the air passages of which great volumes of smoke were issuing. The scenes were most distressing. The wives and children of the imprisoned men uttered agonizing cries and implored the men in the crowd to rescue their loved ones.

TRAVELERS MAIMED!

An Excursion Train on the Rio Grande Wrecked.

By the spreading, of the rails the Rio Grande passengers train east bound was badly wrecked at Leadville, Col., and a large number of passengers injured, though none fatally. The train consisted of ten cars six of them being sleepers all crowded. The whole train except the engine and baggage car left the track and rolled down an embankment a distance of ten to fifteen feet, striking in the soft mud on their sides. The seriously injured so far as reported are:

Mrs. T. E. Haywood, Sacremento, Cal., arm, head, and hand cut; Mrs. J. B. Wilson, Austria, head cut; J. B. Dalton, badly bruised; Annie Lynch, New York, arm, head, and hip bruised; Mrs. H. Martin, Denver, head cut; J. E. Heyworth, St. Cloud, Minn., head cut and back hurt; T. Nye, New York, shoulder broken; J. T. Cahill, Los Angeles, thigh broken; C. H. Walling, Sheppard, Mich., leg broke; Mrs. E. Satler, San Francisco, head bruised; Mrs. T. A. Guthrie, body bruised; H. I. Higgins, Leadville, slightly bruised; Mrs. G. Wilson, Chicago; Mrs. F. T. Perry, St. Louis; F. E. Pyke, Chicago; Mrs. F. E. Pyke, Chicago; J. R. Wallace, Mercer, Pa.

A majority of the passengers were members of the Phillips excursion party, bound from California to Chicago and eastern points. A heavy snow storm was prevailing at the time of the accident, and there was considerable suffering among the wounded before they were removed to the hotels.

ANOTHER CRISIS IN FRANCE.

The Government Forces Defeated on a Vote.

Paris special: The Government was defeated in the vote on the liquor amendment, and regarding that as a vote of lack of confidence the ministry resigned. The M. Ribot cabinet has held sway for eleven weeks. Ever since this ministry came into power the opponents of the movement have sought an opportunity to overthrow them. The Panama scandal, it was thought, would afford the opportunity, but though more than once attacks were made none proved successful, the chamber each time voting confidence in the Government and discomfiting their enemies. The adverse majority of five votes cast by the Chamber of Deputies on the liquor amendment was more or less a surprise to the Government, and after due deliberation the ministers decided to regard it as a vote of want of confidence. As stated above, their resignations followed. No action has yet been taken towards forming another cabinet.

STRIKE AT CHICAGO.

The World's Fair Carpenters Go Out.

Chicago special: Every man of the 1,500 union carpenters employed within the World's Fair grounds struck because the fair officials refused to discharge all non-union carpenters in the employ of the exposition company and to force all contractors at work on the grounds to do the same. The exposition officials were willing to grant the advance from 35 to 40 cents an hour which the men demanded but they declined to discriminate against any American citizen in the matter of employment. This move on the part of the union carpenters has been anticipated and work on all buildings has been pushed to the utmost limit.

But half a dozen of the smaller buildings remain incomplete, and Director of Works Burham insists that enough non-union men can be secured in addition to the 300 now employed to finish every structure in time for the 1st of May.

STARVATION AND EXPOSURE.

Many Horses Die From the Severe Winter in Washington.

Colfax (Wash.) special: J. S. Buck, of this city, has just received a report from the men who have charge of his stock, 300 head of horses, in the Big Bend County, in the Northern part of the State, that 25 per cent. of the band died from exposure and starvation. The winter was the most severe known in that region for many years and the food supply was inadequate to meet the requirements of a long seige. Buck thinks he has fared well, however, considering that other stockmen in those regions lost fifty and seventy-five per cent. of their bands. One extensive cattle raiser near Columbia River even suffered the loss of every hoof. The Indians in that section, too, have lost all their horses.

Election in Cleveland.

The municipal election at Cleveland was hotly contested, the Catholics supporting the Democrats and the A. P. A. the Republicans. The former won, as Blee, Democrat, was elected by over 4,500 majority. Meyes, the independent candidate, got over 4,000 votes, which defeated Akers, the Republican candidate.

A DILATORY BLAST

Fools Three Men and Explodes Unexpectedly.

Three quarrymen named Houseman, Ryan, and Kimmell, working in Ryan & Brown's stone quarry near Aetna Station, Pa., on the Pittsburgh and Western Railroad, were blown up by an explosion of dynamite. The workmen had ignited a fuse leading to a blast and retired to a place of safety. The fuse was so slow that they concluded it had been extinguished and returned to relight it. Just as they reached the spot a terrific explosion occurred.

Houseman died from his injuries. Ryan is in an extremely critical condition and cannot recover. Kimmell was less severely hurt and will get well. Houseman leaves a large family. Ryan, who is a son of one of the owners of the quarry, is married.

The Engineers' Brotherhood Branded a Conspiracy.

Toledo special: The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is declared to be a conspiracy against the laws of the country by Judge Tafts, and the temporary injunction prayed for against Chief Arthur in the Ann Arbor boycott case is allowed. The decision was read in the United States Circuit Court by Judge Ricks at the same time that he rendered his decision in the case of the Lake Shore engineers who, obeying the laws of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, refused to handle Ann Arbor freight, as there was a strike on that road. In the latter case the court held Engineer James Lennon for contempt because he had been twice ordered to move the cars by the officials of the company and did not do so until ordered to do so by the brotherhood officers after the boycott was raised. The seven other men were discharged.

Grand Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, refused, when informed of the United States District Court, to discuss the matter. "It's all right," he said, "the engineers will get through somehow. I don't care to say what we will do next, because I have not given the subject a moment's thought."

A Railroad Relic.

One of the most interesting of the displays to be presented at the World's Fair by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is the antique locomotive "John Bull" and a train of cars attached, such as were in use on the old Camden and Amboy railroad, the route between Philadelphia and New York, in 1836. It is the original locomotive constructed in England by John Stephenson, shipped to the United States and erected by Isaac Dripps, at Bordentown, N. J., in 1831, and has been languished for a number of years in the National Museum at Washington, where it was deposited as a curiosity and for safe keeping.

Clarksville Destroyed.

A disastrous fire occurred at Clarksville, Va. The buildings on Fourth street, from Main, down both sides were consumed, except the railroad depot and Magee's warehouse. Eight stores, hotels, offices, and other houses were burned. A large quantity of leaf tobacco was destroyed. A high wind was blowing and there were no adequate means to stop the flames. Two colored men were burned to death.

A Town Surrounded by Fire.

Ogalla (Neb.) special: This city is entirely surrounded by prairie fires, and every citizen is out fighting the flames. The whole country between here and Paxton, a distance of twenty miles, is a blackened waste. The damage to houses and outbuildings already exceeds $5,000 and the damage to hay and feed will be three times as much more.

Bottsford, Not Page, Is Caught.

The report that David Paige had been captured in Brazil by Capt. C. E. Henry turns out to be incorrect. Instead of securing Paige the detective succeeded in arresting H. A. Bottsford of Cleveland, Ohio, who is wanted for the embezzlement of $20,000 from the firm of Woods, Jenks & Co. Bottsford fled from Cleveland about a year ago.

A Locomotive Boiler Explodes.

Engine No. 2 of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, hauling an east bound freight, exploded as it was leaving the boundary of Red Oak, Iowa, causing the death of four trainmen: L. P. Durnell, engineer; F. Fredericks, fireman; G. W. Martin brakeman, and Henry Landers, night hostler.

Five People Drowned.

London special: A yacht carrying 138 persons capsized in the Groucs, a short distance from Burnham. Five persons were drowned. The rest clung to the yacht until they were rescued by a boatman, who put out from the shore when the accident occurred.

Swept Into a Stream and Killed.

Bridge Watchman Joseph Fisher was swept into a turbulent stream by a locomotive and instantly killed at Dickinson, N. D.

Died of Spotted Fever.

John Byers, aged 32 years, died at Muncie, Ind., of spotted fever after forty-six hours of suffering.

WILL OPEN ON TIME.

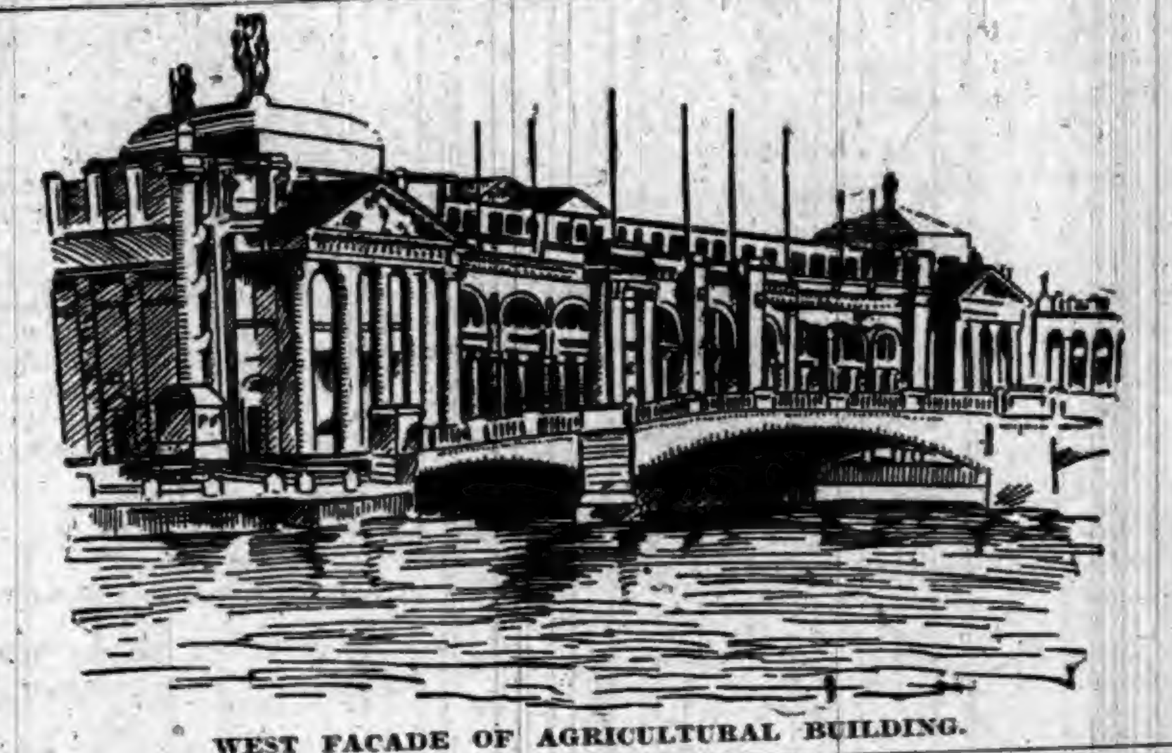
PRESIDENT CLEVELAND TO SET THE FAIR GOING.

Col. Davis and Director of Works Burnham Say the Gates Will Be Thrown Wide Open May 1—Extortinate Charges Will Not Prevail.

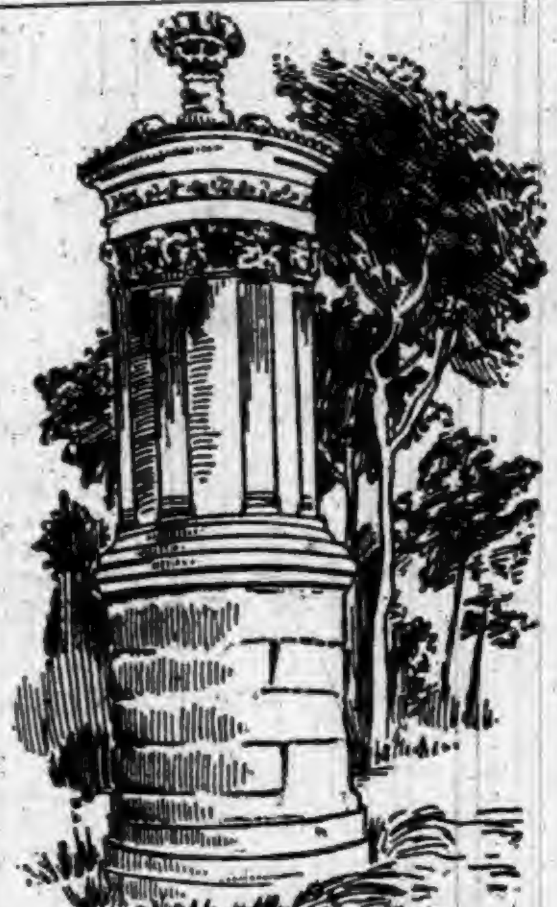
The Week at Jackson Park.

Chicago correspondence:

The World's Columbian Exposition will be ready for business May 1. President Cleveland will touch the electric button, if he lives, and the spindles will whirl, and the great wheels revolve, and every door in every department will swing open so that all the world through its representatives may enter and behold the acres of exhibits which will be in place on that day. The cannon will boom across the inland sea; the flags of all countries will float in the air of a Chicago spring; the bands will play; the electric boats will dart along the lagoons, and the gondolas will move dreamily over the waters and loiter in the shadows of the great buildings. One country will vie with another in exhibits which will at that time be displayed in the most attractive manner by men of the world who have made effective beauty a study. The natives of the various States of the Union will go to their State buildings and renew their allegiance in such manner as may seem best to them, and then turn to gaze with wonder at the work which has been done in Jackson Park for over a year and a half. So it will be with those whose mother countries are under other flags. The buildings of most of the countries of the East and South which will exhibit will be ready for the reception of their children. Even Midway Plaisance, that strip about which people outside of Chicago know so little, will be ready. In one day the visitor may wander or ride, as he may be prepared, along this great highway and see how the people of countries which the tourist seldom visits live and dress.

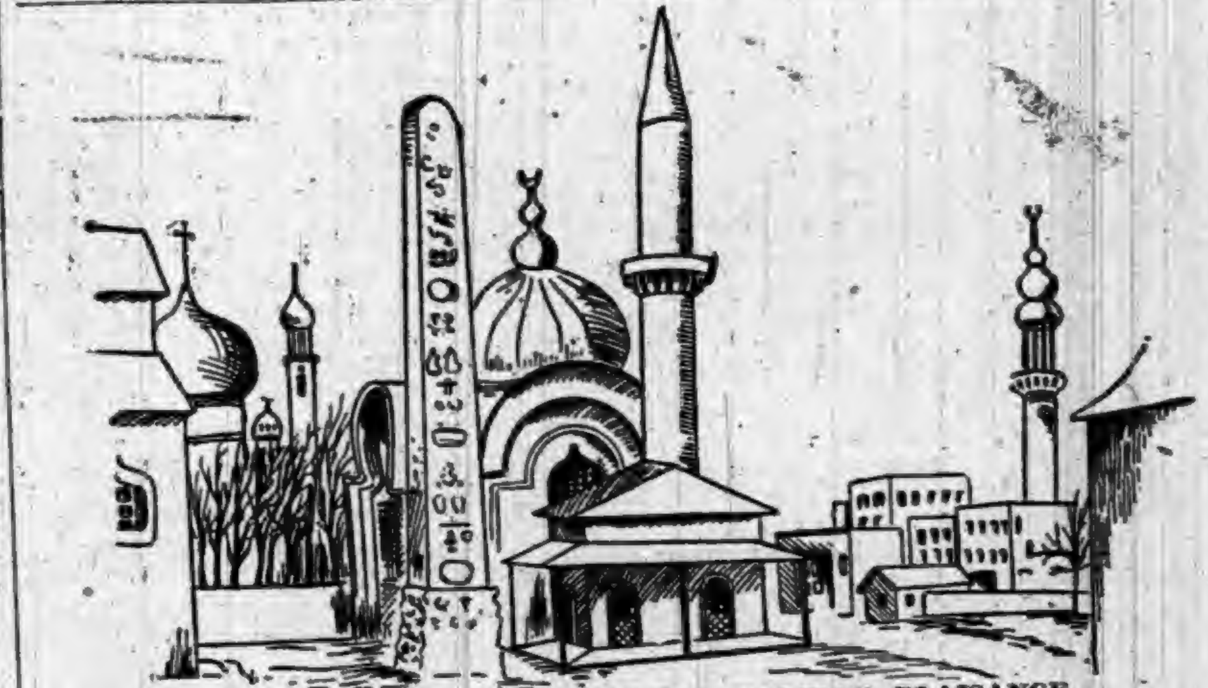


WEST FACADE OF AGRICULTURAL BUILDING.



CHORAGIC MONUMENT.

So much has been written and said about this Columbian Exposition that those who are under its walls scarce realize that the time is almost at hand for the penetralia of its wonders to open. On the eve of the opening of the gates at Jackson Park a thousand benedictions will fall, and from the altars of the world there will ascend the incense of thanksgiving that the work about which the nations of the earth will assemble in confraternity is completed, for the day before the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition will be Sunday.



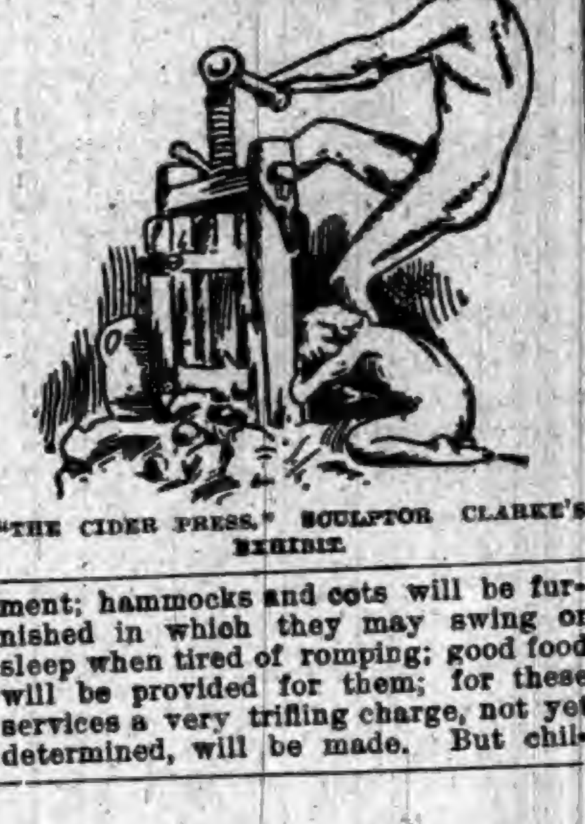
SOME TOWERS AND MINARETS, MIDWAY PLAISANCE.

The Plain Truth.

An impression seems to prevail in some quarters that the Columbian Exposition is to be cut up in some way into sections, and that the fifty cent entrance fee will hardly do more than admit the visitor to the vestiblue. The truth is, on the contrary, that that one entrance fee will give the visitor free access to every building erected by the Exposition Company, and to all the State and foreign buildings, including all their exhibits. Every exhibit proper may be seen without any further entrance fee. The false impression in question is due to the fact that there will be some side shows, some of them in Jackson Park, some in Midway Plaisance, and some elsewhere. Those in Jackson Park and Midway Plaisance are under the supervision of the exposition management, and a certain per cent. of their receipts will go to the management. Of course the World's Fair Company has no control of what may be erected and maintained outside of their own grounds. If some circus company should establish a tent alongside the Manitoba Building, and there is plenty of vacant space for it, the World's Fair would none the less be open in full on the payment of fifty cents. The best of the side-shows will be of very small importance as compared with what will be shown in any one of the regular Exposition buildings.

Not only will every requisite of health and comfort be provided without cost to the visitor, but the management has gone so far as to sterilize the drinking water, a sanitary precaution of great importance to the health of visitors.

Again, the women of Chicago have organized a creche, where mothers may leave their infants in charge of competent nurses while they explore the treasures and curiosities of the buildings. The youngsters will be provided with toys and games for their amusement; hammocks and cots will be furnished in which they may swing or sleep when tired of romping; good food will be provided for them; for these services a very trifling charge, not yet determined, will be made. But children accidentally separated from their parents and temporarily lost on the grounds will be conveyed to the creche and cared for and fed without charge until claimed.



"THE CIDER PRESS," SCULPTOR CLARKE'S EXHIBIT.

As to charges outside of the grounds, let it be clearly understood that the best hotels have said plainly that they will not charge more than their usual prices, and the hotels of lesser magnitude will be compelled to do likewise. Chicago is full of enterprising people, and really enterprising people know that extortion ruins enterprise. There will be millions of visitors to Chicago during the exposition season, and for that very reason there will be fierce competition for their custom. There are now hundreds of restaurants in this city at which a satisfying meal can be purchased for from 15 to 25 cents, and the number of such places will be greatly increased during the year. The scramble for the patronage of visitors of moderate means will be furious. It is quite possible that the prices of the restaurants that cater for the people of small incomes will be reduced by reason of excessive competition, and it is certain that they will not be increased.

In short, it will be very easy for a rich visitor to spend $25 or $50 per day, and it will be quite as easy for an economist to find a room at the rate of $2.50 per week and to feed himself for 75 cents per day. The great Exposition is for the delectation of the people of the world, but specially for those of the United States, therefore attendance upon it will be made to be within the reach of all. The rich can enjoy all the luxuries that money can buy, the person of slender means can live well at slight cost. Everybody is invited to come. Everybody will be welcome. Nobody shall be imposed upon. This is Chicago's pledge to the nation and to the whole world.

Admission Tickets.

Three hundred and seventy-five thousand tickets of admission to the Exposition have arrived and have been placed on sale down town. As already published the engraved entrance cards will be handled in the principal hotels, at the Randolph street and Van Buren street stations of the Illinois Central and at the Exposition Treasurer's office, in the Rand-McNally building. Fifty cents is the price of a ticket, and the installment just received will be good at any time from the date of purchase until the close of the Fair. A good many Chicago merchants have placed advance orders for tickets with Horace Tucker, superintendent of admissions, who is sanguine enough to estimate a revenue of more than $1,000,000 from tickets before the gates open. His estimate is re-enforced by a surprisingly large number of inquiries from souvenir collectors who wish to purchase specimen tickets of every series issued by the admissions bureau.

CHARLES BICKEL, aged 19, was fatally burned in Kelly Brothers' foundry, Goshen. He was carrying a ladle of molton iron from the furnace to a flask, when he slipped and fell, the heated iron running over his left side, which was literally cooked.

NORTH MANCHESTER, in Wabash County, is to have a system of water works with sixty-four fire hydrants, five miles of mains, the largest being twelve inches, a standpipe 110 feet high and engines with a pumping capacity of 750,000 gallons per day of twenty-four hours.

HENRY PIERSON, a 9-year-old school boy, caught on behind a carriage on Second Street, Vincennes. The boy's foot ran in the wheel and the leg was ground entirely off before the driver could realize the situation. The foot and ankle was picked up several feet away. The boy cannot live.

A COMMITTEE of La Porte citizens visited the surrounding country for the purpose of examining the condition of the growing wheat, and after making careful and thorough inspection reported that there will be half a crop, the plant being badly winter killed, especially in high and exposed places, where the snow did not lay on the ground.

HENRY STUMP, a well-known farmer living eight miles from Goshen, was terribly injured by falling on a drag wood saw which was propelled by steam. One side of his face was stripped, a heavy incision made in the skull at the back of the head, and several severe fracture of bones and other bruises were sustained. His recovery is doubtful.

IF there had before been any doubt of the justice of the claim of the Lowman family of Wabash County, to a share of the immense estate left by Henry Yesler, the dead millionaire of Seattle, Wash., that doubt has been dispelled. Prosecuting Attorney A. H. Plummer, employed by the Wabash heirs, went to Seattle two weeks ago to look after the interests of his clients, recently a letter was received from him stating that it was now conceded that Mr. Yesler left no will, that the conspiracy to convict Mrs. Yesler of having destroyed the will had failed and that the property, which it will require two years to convert, will be distributed according to the law of descent among the relatives of Mr. Yesler. Mr. Plummer says that the Wabash people—six in number, will have at least $200,000 to divide among them, with the probability of their share largely exceeding this sum.

THE Coroner has caused the arrest of Joseph Pigg of Terre Haute, on the charge of murder. Recently the 4-months-old child of his step-mother was found dead in bed. The mother and the elder Pigg had lived apart several times and the father and son had been known to say they doubted the paternity of the child. The son had also made threats. The night before the death of the child young Pigg prepared a dose of some mixture and gave it to the baby. He threatened other children who saw him to keep them from telling what they had seen. The body of the child will be exhumed and an autopsy held.

THOMAS COLLINS of Shelbyville, went to bed as well as usual the other night, but awakened vomiting about midnight. He was very sick, and displayed signs of poisoning. HIS FIRST CASE AND LAST.

The Story of a Young Barrister, Written for This Paper.

BY SYDNEY GRUNDY.

CHAPTER III.

Victor D'Aubry got rapidly over the few miles between Caen and the Count de Chauvannes' estate. The faithful animal knew that road well, and knew moreover that his master was always in a hurry when he went in that direction.

When the servant opened the door of the drawing-room to him Victor stood for a moment on the threshold, undecided, racked with terrible anguish. His legs seemed to give way under him, and he felt as if he would drop senseless. Near the window sat Count de Chauvannes. He raised his head and looked at Victor with a listless air.

"Tell mademoiselle that Monsieur D'Aubry is here," said he, beckoning to the servant. Victor held up his hand for the servant to stop. "There is no necessity to disturb mademoiselle," he said. "I must even ask you not to tell her that I am here. I wish to speak to you alone, monsier."

The Count looked at the young man in surprise, but Victor pretended not to notice it. "Monsieur," he began, "the matter that brings me here to-day is very serious. I have resolved to apply for a new trial for a man who was convicted twenty years ago, and who maintains that he is innocent. You know the man—you gave him a character at the trial."

"What was the individual's name?" asked the Count, listlessly examining his finger tips.

"Michel Gouillard!"

Victor had sat down with his back to the light, so as to let the last rays of the sinking sun fall upon the Count's face. He looked at him intently as he pronounced the man's name.

The Count did not budge, not a muscle of his face moved. "Oh, yes," he said, "I remember. It is a very old story indeed, my dear D'Aubry, and assuredly the poor devil was guilty."

"Then you really do believe in the man's guilt?"

"Why, he admitted it himself," urged the Count. "And come to think, it was your father who wrung the confession from him. I recommend you to let that sad matter rest. There is no chance of reversing the verdict."

"I do not think so," replied Victor, in a grave tone of voice. "Gouillard insists that he has proof of his innocence. But I am not particularly anxious to take up the affair, and if you really think there is no chance of a favorable issue I will tell the man to go and see one of my colleagues."

The Count fixed his cold and piercing glance on Victor's mind as if trying to read his inmost thoughts. That, at any rate, was the young barrister's interpretation of the swift, hurried glance.

"Look here," said De Chauvannes at last, "send Gouillard to me. I will question him and turn him inside out, and after that I am sure he will not dare to maintain his innocence. Besides, I happen to know certain details of the affair which——" The Count stopped short and relapsed into silence.

"And I, too, Monsieur," began Victor, "happen to know certain details which make Gouillard's innocence as plain as daylight to me. It was said that he killed Viscount de Varville because the latter was the lover of his wife. I know that is false. The woman whom Viscount de Varville was in love with was not Huguette Gouillard."

The Count started from his chair as if moved by a violent galvanic shock. "And what of that?" he burst out. "What of that, and what more do you know? Speak out! Who was the mistress of the Viscount de Varville?"

Victor hesitated for a moment, and then rising and meeting the Count's terrible look without flinching, he said calmly, "It was the Countess De Chauvannes, Monsieur?" Count De Chauvannes received the blow without drawing a muscle, but a deep pallor overspread his face.

"I will say all that I came to say, Monsieur," continued Victor, solemnly. "I have in my possession a letter from the Countess to Monsieur de Varville. This letter has been the flash of lightning whereby I read the innocence of that unfortunate wretch, Gouillard.

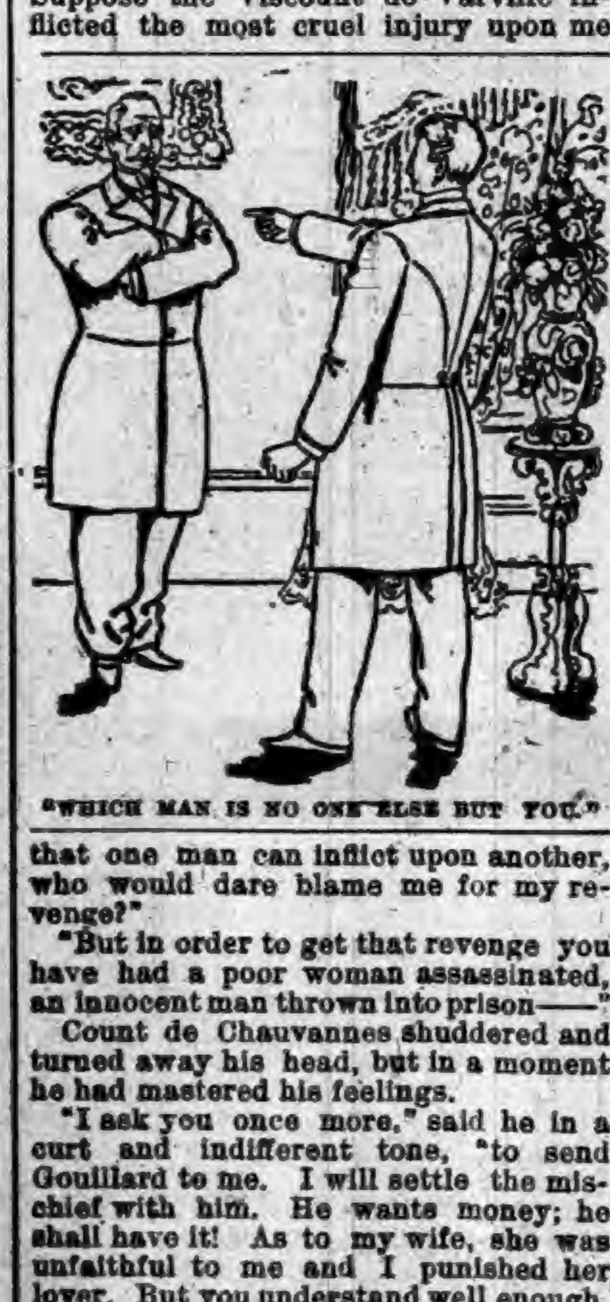
"After that I began to cast about for the probable author of the Viscount's murder, of Huguette Gouillard's death by poison, and the evidence pointed clearly to one and the same man, which man is no one else but you, Monsieur de Chauvannes."

"Oh, indeed! You came to that conclusion, Monsieur," said Chauvannes in a voice filled with anger, ready to burst like a thunderclap.

"Do you agree with me now that I had better give up this case and confide the documents to another barrister?" asked Victor.

The Count's face turned somewhat more livid still. Suddenly facing D'Aubry he blurted out:

"Well, suppose it were so, Monsieur? Suppose the Viscount de Varville inflicted the most cruel injury upon me that one man can inflict upon another, who would dare blame me for my revenge?"



"WHICH MAN IS NO ONE ELSE BUT YOU."

"But in order to get that revenge you have had a poor woman assassinated, an innocent man thrown into prison——"

Count de Chauvannes shuddered and turned away his head, but in a moment he had mastered his feelings.

"I ask you once more," said he in a curt and indifferent tone, "to send Gouillard to me. I will settle the mischief with him. He wants money; he shall have it! As to my wife, she was unfaithful to me and I punished her lover. But you understand well enough, Monsieur D'Aubry, that at the very moment you are about to marry my daughter, it is your duty to destroy every trace of that sad story. Give me that letter!"

"You evidently misunderstand me, Monsieur," said Victor. "Michel Gouillard does not ask money. He wants his name cleared from dishonor, the ignomy of the convict prison wiped from his brow! I intend to help him; I will not be your accomplice. If necessary, I will be your accuser. True, I love your daughter, so much so that I would prefer death to giving her up. But there is a voice that speaks louder than even my love. It is the voice of conscience. Monsieur, to an extent I share the responsibility of this terrible crime with you, for my father, smitten with a brain disorder, in his senseless zeal tortured this poor wretch into a confession of a crime he never committed. Now you will understand that I have a duty to perform, and I swear to you that I will not fail to do so. I will give you till to-morrow to determine what course you intend to pursue."

CHAPTER IV.

It was still very early when, on the following morning, a servant came to announce to Victor that somebody wished to see him, and to the questioning glance of the young barrister, the man said, in a low voice: "It is Mademoiselle de Chauvannes."

"Marcelline!" exclaimed Victor, turning very pale and rushing to the door of the back stair-case, on which his room opened.

A lady closely veiled entered the room quietly, evidently much exhausted, for she dropped into the first chair within her reach. Victor flung himself on his knees before her. He did not dare guess the truth, and still he knew why Marcelline, pale and trembling, had come to him at such an hour. He felt that the Count wanted to play his last trump, and that he had been base enough to enlist in his defense this pure, chaste soul.

Marcelline made an effort to master the emotion that shook her whole frame. She flung her arms around Victor's neck, and with a voice broken with sobs, murmured: "Oh, Victor, Victor! I know everything."

"What!" he exclaimed, "your father has told you——"

"Everything," replied Marcelline, "everything."

"But it can't be," said Victor, revolting at the idea.

"I tell you he has been absolutely pitiless; my dearest recollections, my most cherished affections, my modesty as a young girl, he trampled everything under feet. You may well pride yourself on what you have done. You have killed me." And she dropped her head on her breast with a gesture of harrowing despair, while her sobs welled forth again as they did during the whole of the night.

Victor stood like one petrified, dumb-stricken, finding no word of comfort for her. But gradually the storm that was sweeping over Marcelline soon subsided, and Victor made haste to console and comfort her with the assurance of his love and devotion.

"You are kind," she murmured, "to try and soothe the terrible pain he caused me; now be kind to the end and give up this fatal idea of involving my father in this trial."

"But, Marcelline, you know that one innocent man has been convicted in his stead."

"Oh, if you love me," she murmured, "would you fling my life, my future, in the scale against the interests of a stranger, whom the merest accident brought to your door?"

"I see, Marcelline," replied Victor gravely, "that your father has not told you everything."

And then he told her of the part his own father had executed in the drama. He pointed out to her that he would be the basest of men and unworthy of her affections if he refused to aid the poor wretch who had come to ask him for it.

"Besides, can you not see that it is in your and my father's interests that I must undertake this case? If I refuse he will consult another lawyer, who will assuredly not have the same motives in conducting the case cautiously. Your mother's name——"

"Stop! stop! Victor, say no more! My poor mother," sobbed the young girl.

"You see, therefore, that we must avoid such a scandal at any cost," said Victor gently, but firmly. "And, in order to do this, he who is most guilty must sacrifice himself."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean this, Marcelline," exclaimed Victor solemnly, "your father had an accomplice; you know her at least by sight—Jeannette, 'The Hag' they call her. The creature is devoted to him, body and soul. The brunt of the charge will probably recoil on her—I mean the poisoning of Huguette. Your father will only have to answer for the death of Viscount de Varville, and the extenuation of the deed will be found in his wrath at the injury done him. We will find a barrister who will conduct the defense in that sense, and who will keep your mother's name as much as possible out of the case. Tell him all this, tell him instead of laying the blame at my door, he ought to thank Heaven that the case fell into my hands."

"But the sacrifice you named?"

"Is that the Count de Chauvannes shall instantly quit France."

"And that the Count de Chauvannes will never do!" exclaimed that gentleman pushing open the door where he had been listening, and striding into the room.

"Father!" gasped Marcelline, turning whiter than the gown that she wore.

"Yes, your father," blurted out the Count, "come to accompany you home. And as for you, sir," he continued, facing Victor with flashing eye, "from this day forward everything is at an end between you and this young lady. From this day forward, you will not set eyes on her again. If you make the slightest attempt to speak to her, if you attempt to enter my park or my house, I will shoot you like a common thief."

"I know that the idea of a murder does not frighten you, Monsieur," sneered Victor, "but allow me to tell you that your threat does not frighten me in the least. This lady is my affianced wife before God. I swear to you that she shall be my wife before the world and that the obstacles which you may place between us will only have the effect of increasing our mutual affection."

"My authority over my daughter is nothing to you, I suppose?" yelled the Count, coming closer to Victor and assuming a threatening attitude.

"The law fixes a limit to the authority of parents over their children," replied Victor, in a calm but ironical tone, "and that limit will soon be reached."

"The law, the law," hissed De Chauvannes, contemptuously. "I have never known any other laws than my own will. For whom do you take me? If I had ever given you the hope of being united to my daughter—though such a marriage might be considered as a mesalliance—it is because I took you to be a man of honor, who would not suffer all those lawyers to molest me for a lot of old and forgotten stories; but instead of defending me you have become my accuser! Henceforth we are strangers, enemies if you like it better. I have warned you. You will have to give up Marcelline or that ridiculous lawsuit."

"Neither the one nor the other," said Victor, calmly. "Mademoiselle de Chauvannes will be my wife, and Michel Gouillard's name will be reinstated in public opinion. And now, monsieur, as you entered my house to play the spy and the eavesdropper, I order you to leave it instantly. This interview is at an end. Go, Marcelline; trust me and fear nothing."

"You cannot insult me, plebeian!" growled the Count, as he turned away, leading his daughter by the hand.

Victor had built upon the Count accepting his terms, and now that they had been rejected with a show of righteous indignation, the young lawyer saw that he must change his plan of attack. To save Marcelline, he must not make public the damning intrigue between her mother and De Varville. He must ask for a revision of Gouillard's trial upon other evidence. What should it be? Shutting himself up in his workroom, he deliberated for several hours upon a new problem of acting, and while so occupied his servant announced that a client desired to see him.

It was Michel Gouillard—not the wretched-looking vagabond who a short week ago had crept like a felon, which he had just ceased to be, into Victor's office, but a clean and soberly clad man of 50, pale but calm and self-possessed. In well-chosen language he spoke his heart-felt thanks for that devotion to his cause which had not only rescued his daughter from a life of shame, but had procured employment for him, and in the meantime supplied his most pressing wants.

The young lawyer smiled and motioned Michel to be seated.

"Do you not think," he queried, "that 'The Hag' played an important part in this business?"

"I am thoroughly convinced she did, monsieur," answered Gouillard. "She was always playing the spy about my place. And she it must have been who took from the cupboard the little carbine which I had not used for the last three years, and which was found after the crime; and she it was who poisoned my dear wife. I'm certain of it."

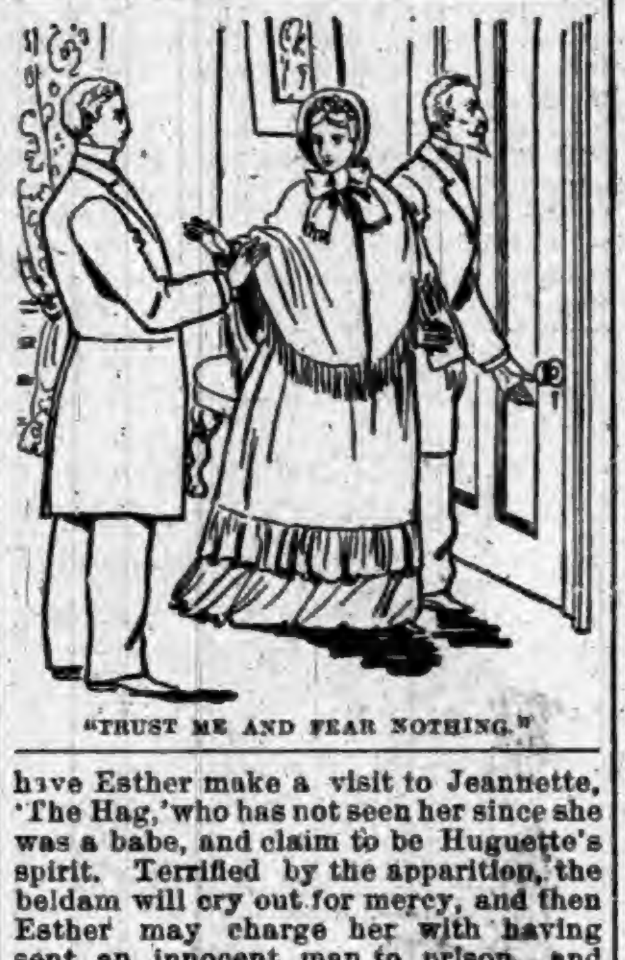
"We must make her confess," said the lawyer, in an undertone.

"Ah, if we only could; but how?" asked Michel.

"Did you not tell me," continued Victor, "that your daughter Esther is marvelously like her mother?"

"As like as it is possible for two human beings to be."

"Good!" said Victor; "to-night we'll have Esther make a visit to Jeannette, 'The Hag,' who has not seen her since she was a babe, and claim to be Huguette's spirit. Terrified by the apparition, the beldam will cry out for mercy, and then Esther may charge her with having sent an innocent man to prison, and call upon her to make full confession, if she would save her immortal soul from gehenna."



"TRUST ME AND FEAR NOTHING."

The plan succeeded admirably, and when Esther exclaimed in a threatening voice, "If you try to hide a single thing, if you endeavor to tell a single lie, I will come back to you. Do you hear? Do you hear? I will come back," "The Hag," beside herself with fear, uttered a stifled yell and sank to the ground.

The trial of Jeannette, "The Hag," was rushed through with a haste hardly in keeping with judicial dignity. The authorities suddenly admitted their error in having consigned Michel Gouillard to a felon's cell for twenty long years for a crime he never committed.

With a devotion bordering upon religious zeal "The Hag" took upon herself the double crime for which Michel Gouillard had been convicted, and the Count de Chauvannes in his testimony, with no quiver upon his lips and no tremor in his voice, spoke of the woman's "fanatical devotion to him," and besought the mercy of the jury for this old family servant.

A few days after, after entering upon her term of ten years solitary confinement, "The Hag" was found dead in her bed.

True to his threat, the Count now resolved to put as many barriers as possible between his daughter and Victor D'Aubry, the first being to leave France for Southern Europe, taking his daughter with him, in hopes that new scenes and new acquaintances and the glitter of court life might lead her to forget the plain country gentleman.

But a year later, by a fall from his horse while hunting, his leg was broken, and amputation became necessary. The Count survived the amputation but a fortnight, and Marcelline returned to France and shut herself up in the old chateau with no other companion than an aged relative for whom she had sent.

She never went beyond the entrances of the park, her longest walks being to the game-keeper's lodge, where, at her express wish, Michel Gouillard and his daughter had taken up their quarters.

Victor and his mother paid her constant visits. The past was never mentioned, all their thoughts dwelt upon the future.

Finally, at the expiration of a twelvemonth, the fair chatelaine and the magistrate soon were united in matrimony by the village priest in the family chapel.

The marriage took place at midnight, before the altar flooded with light and smothered with flowers, the witnesses being Jules Dupin, a schoolmate, and Michel Gouillard, the whilom convict in name only, who was Victor's first and last client.

Household Hints.

When sponge cake gets dry it is very nice cut in thin slices and toasted.

To purify the air of a newly painted room put several tubs of water in it, and it will absorb much of the odor.

The best way when hot grease has been spilled on a floor is to dash cold water over it, so as to harden it quickly and prevent its striking into the boards.

Ingenuity is always busy with little devices to ornament the dinner table. The latest novelty is a corrugated paper collar to cover the burned edges of pudding dishes. It will fit any size, and make pretty for the table the dish that comes hot from the oven.

TOGS FOR LITTLE TOTS.

HOW CHILDREN'S GARMENTS CAN BE MADE.

By Utilizing Old Materials Which Are Worn or Soiled in Parts the Little Folks Can Be Clothed Tastefully and Economically.

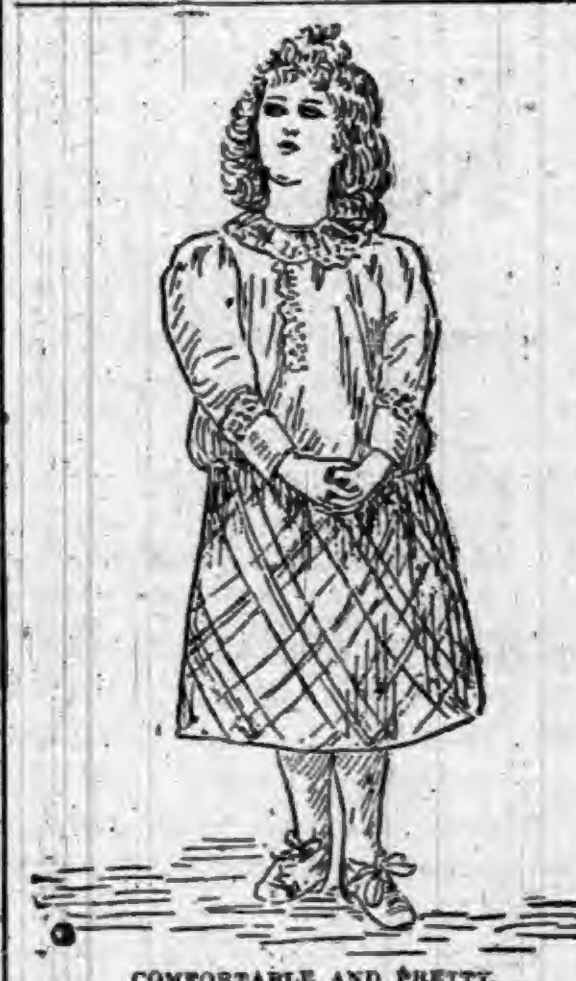
Experience of an Expert.

New York correspondence:

SOME women who realize the possibilities the dyeing and cleaning processes afford, will indulge in the richest and most delicate fabrics, and know that they are not only the better dressed therefor, but that they are actually economical. When they do buy a new gown it will be of a light color, and usually of some novelty goods of the best quality.

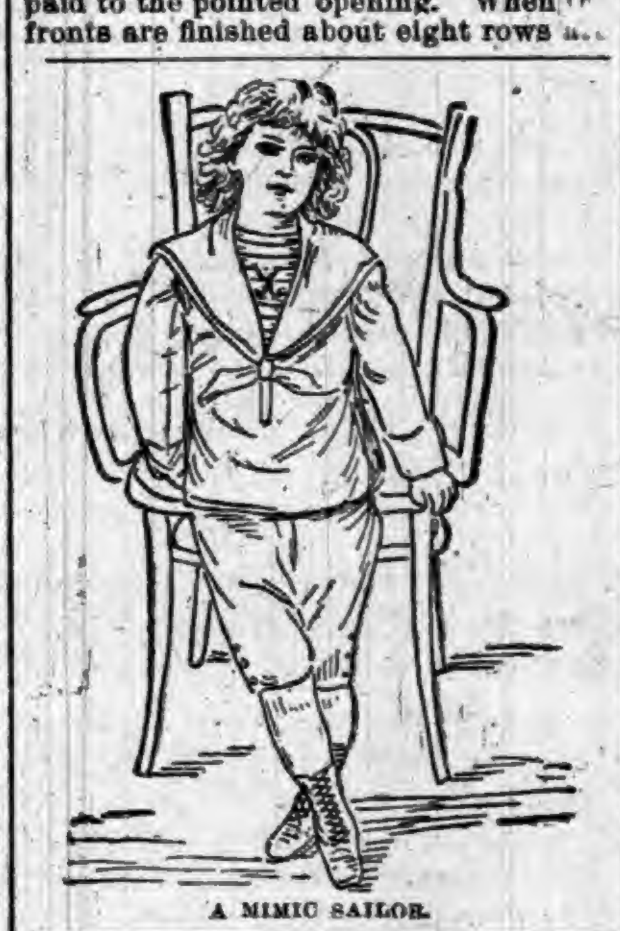
Light undress leather shoes that have served their summer or evening use go into the black bag, and in course of time come out black. And this woman smiles when she is called extravagant for having such fine shoes and so many of them. As a matter of fact, she almost as seldom buys a new pair as she throws an old one away. This woman never runs to cheap passementeries and embroidery. Now and then she appears with a piece of really beautiful embroidery or genuine metal bead work. Well, you see, that sort of thing will clean; cheap stuff won't, and it isn't so very expensive when you consider, perhaps, that it costs a few cents a yard, and is the only expense for her "new dress," except the making. All the rest came out of that trunk that is still left full of bundles and boxes, each labeled and full of possibilities.

This same woman keeps a book. She has so many different things of various lengths, colors and materials that she might forget her own resources. The book is full of plans for costumes. For instance, she writes: Empire gown, yellow foundation skirt, pale yellow and rose-pink, striped crepe over, bolero jacket of strawberry velvet, lined with cream silk, bertha of cream crepe, and sleeves of same caught up with yellow and rose-pink, narrow ribbon to match stripes. The ribbon was all that had to be gotten for that dress, and the combination was a new one, the different materials coming from as many previous uses.



COMFORTABLE AND PRETTY.

Another time-worn expedient for utilizing old materials which are worn or soiled in parts is to make them over for children's garments. Some of my readers may infer from these illustrations that I am leading up to that method, but the garments are described so that each can be made at home, and the maker can suit her own taste and purse with most of them in the source of her materials. The pretty crocheted jacket which the babe of the initial wears is made of white zephyr wool and trimmed with a pink border. The jacket is begun at the bottom of the back above the colored border by foundation loops of the required length, and then crocheted back and forth, one single crochet and one loop. The single crochets are put in every second foundation loop, then in every loop. At the top each part is crocheted alone, but attention must be paid to the pointed opening. When the fronts are finished about eight rows are crocheted to the neck, which forms the foundation for the sailor collar. In every loop must be put two single crochets, and this must be continued to the outer edge of the collar, which is crocheted in one with the jacket. From there the fronts and back are continued in addition to the collar. The border is composed of five rows of pink and six of white zephyr. Careful attention must be given to the corners where the stitches are gained. When the back and fronts are done they are joined, commencing four inches from the bottom, but sufficient space should be left for the sleeve. The latter is crocheted around and around into this opening, and the border is the same as that on the jacket. The last row of the white is made of picots, and the same edge is put all around the jacket. It is tied with a string and tassels of pink zephyr. The string is made of chain stitches and is twelve and a half inches in length.

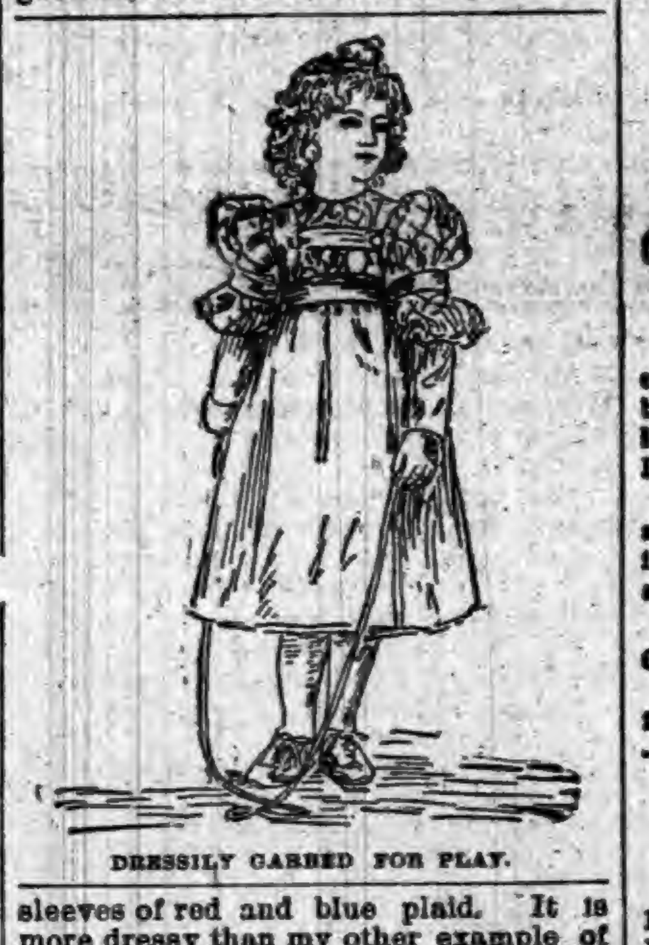


A MIMIC SAILOR.

A dress for a little girl of four or five, having a blouse at once easy to make and comfortable to the wearer, is to be seen in the next sketch. It is of tartan cloth in red and blue with straw-colored stripes. The blouse is red cloth embroidered with straw-colored twist. It is particularly suitable for school wear.

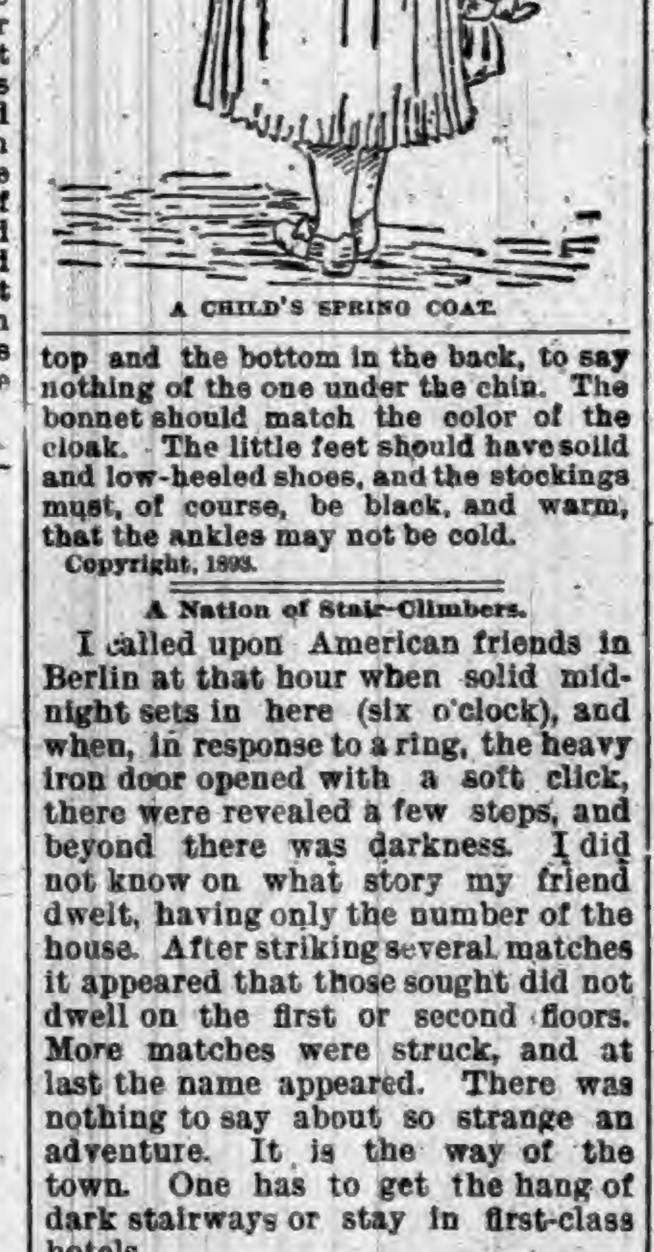
Sailors' suits are so often selected for small boys that there is little of novelty in them, but they always have a dressy look, while appearing as they are, entirely serviceable. It must be this fact that leads so many mothers, who would almost faint at the thought of having their sons upon the water, to make imitation Jack Tars of their dear little fellows. The blouse of the one shown has seams only under the arms, and is put on over the head and gathered at the wrist with an elastic. As will be seen from the illustration, the blouse has a slit below the collar, which is buttoned invisibly, and prevents its being torn in putting on. The collar is loose and can be buttoned to the neck band; the plastron is loose also and fastens to the blouse with tiny buttons underneath the collar. This arrangement affords a chance to have a variety of collars and plastrons. The trousers are trimmed with gold buttons.

There is a dress for a little girl from four to eight years old in the fourth picture, and blue woolen stuff would be a good material for it, with the yoke and sleeves of red and blue plaid. It is more dressy than my other example of the mixture of tartan and plain material, being a little more elaborate, but not much more difficult to make. It would be equally as pretty if velvet took the place of the plaid in the yoke and sleeves, but the velvet should be black or several shades darker than the woolen goods.



DRESSILY GARBED FOR PLAY.

The length of her skirt is ever to be the dear little maid's woe. The tot of today is as particular that her Greenaway shall sweep the ground as the child a little older is that her skirts shall be well above her ankles. A little later she will want them longer again, then she will begin to plan misery for herself and want long dresses, and when she gets them and has to stay in them she will beseech the powers of fashion to relieve her from her thralldom. But what does the tot know about that. For the little maid who rebels against a Greenaway, a dear little cloak is made for just this season. The broad-waisted bodice fits smoothly and is a little short-waisted. The skirt of the cloak falls full from it to just below the knees. The sleeves are full and loose and end at the wrist in a round cuff. Any soft cashmere in bright red or clear green is the proper goods. The bodice is embroidered stiff, with close black braiding. The skirt and sleeves are accordion pleated, and the cuffs are braided to match the bodice. The latter is lined with a bright, contrasting silk, if green has been chosen for the coat, or with black, if red is the color. With the cloak the dearest little bonnet, just like the old-fashioned pictures, can be worn; one that fits close about the face and that has a couple of quaint bows at the top and the bottom in the back, to say nothing of the one under the chin. The bonnet should match the color of the cloak. The little feet should have solid and low-heeled shoes, and the stockings must, of course, be black, and warm, that the ankles may not be cold.



A CHILD'S SPRING COAT.

A Nation of Stair-Climbers.

I called upon American friends in Berlin at that hour when solid midnight sets in here (six o'clock), and when, in response to a ring, the heavy iron door opened with a soft click, there were revealed a few steps, and beyond there was darkness. I did not know on what story my friend dwelt, having only the number of the house. After striking several matches it appeared that those sought did not dwell on the first or second floors. More matches were struck, and at last the name appeared. There was nothing to say about so strange an adventure. It is the way of the town. One has to get the hang of dark stairways or stay in first-class hotels.

A residence is not a house, but a series of apartments, connected and separate from other. There is a common stairway, and it is guarded by a porter, who watches the one front door, behind which, at various elevations, are half a dozen well-established families. There are probably four floors, with room for a family, perhaps two of them, on each floor. You come to an iron and glass door, say fifteen feet high, and ring a bell. You are at once under inspection from the lodge of the invisible porter and if he regards you as eligible he pulls a lever or turns a crank and the spring latch is withdrawn. Then you ascend to the floor where your friends are at home and ring another bell and you can enter a private hall, though often on this hall there are several parties who merely know each other as neighbors. This is the way to concentrate population and encourage architecture. I know a young man who has not been in Berlin long, and has a fancy for counting the steps he climbs to see his friends. The number of steps ranges from fifty-three to one hundred and eleven. The average height of eligible apartments is about seventy steps. There are fine accommodations in abundance at the height of one hundred and twenty-five steps.

Homes for Visitors to the World's Fair.

Is the title of a neat book containing a list of about 9,000 families who will accommodate visitors to Chicago during the time of the fair. It gives their names and addresses, and number of rooms each will have to spare; also gives a list of the leading hotels and their location; also contains twelve full-page large scale maps, each numbered, representing a section, of the city; also a double-page key map, divided into sections, each section representing one of the large scale page maps, and being numbered to correspond. With this book, intending visitors can readily decide and select the quarters of the city in which they would like to be locate , and then enter into correspondence with one or more families, and thus arrange for satisfactory and comfortable accommodations at reasonable rates.

This book was compiled at great expense by a trustworthy Chicago firm, after a house to house canvass in the most desirable portions of the city. It is reliable, and great care was exercised to select reputable places. By its use people will avoid the expense and trouble incident to securing a place after arrival in the city. The book can be obtained through the ticket agent of the Lake Shore railroad in this city by calling upon him. 13-16

REMARKABLE CURES OF AUBURN AND VICINITY.

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnose and wonderful cures border on that of the miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him and to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It cost nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free. A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine. He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided.

One of Auburn's most respected citizens Mr. M. N. Ward of Auburn, on the corner of Second and Jackson street, says: "I came to see Doctor Townsand four weeks ago I could hardly walk to the doctor's room without help. I have had heart disease and weak lungs and catrrah in my head for 20 years and was given up b the best physicans. I had rheumatism so my joints was so stiff I could not walk and my head hurt me so I could not rest or sleep. I was nearly deaf in right ear, but now can hear as well as I ever could. My neighbors all know how I have suffered. I can hear the clock tick in both ears, I thank God I feel well. Doctor Townsend has cured me. I have not been able to work for over one year, doctoring and taking patent medicines. I feel I am able to do two men's work now, have gained in flesh. I advise all to call on Doctor Townsend and be cured. I am willing to see any one and tell how bad I was, and let them see how well I am now,

Another respected lady of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson who has had a complication of diseases stomach, kidney, heart and lung disease and neuralgia pains all over, her limbs swollen so she could not step on them. She now feels nearly well, her pains have left her and her heart is well and she feels better every way.

Mr. Ward says his eye sight was so bad he could hardly see. He now feels that he could dispense with his glasses. The Doctor performed over twenty cures on his last visit. He will forfeit $5 00 for any case of cataarh he cannot cure. An eye witness to a lady who was helped to the doctor's room four weeks ago, is now doing her own work.

The entire paper showed sixty pages and 396 columns of matter. It was an immense affair.

THOMAS F. BAYARD who was secretary of state in Cleveland's first administration has been made minister to Great Britain. As Great Britain is one of the foremost nations it is very proper we should send them a statesman of national reputation and known ability. The English government has promoted its minister to this country from "minister" to "ambassador," and we have for the first time given our man the same title, Bayard being we believe the first to hold the office under that name.

Two men were on the sixteen-story Great Northern Hotel in Chicago. The great height brought on a fit of insanity to which one of the men was subject, and he tried to throw the other over on the pavement below. It was a fearful struggle, and the maniac would have succeeded, but the other asked to be allowed a minute to pray. This the madman granted. The other fell on his knees began to pray, watched his chance, and sprang for the hole that led down into the building and thus escaped. It takes a good deal to make a Chicago man pray, but it seems they will, if cornered.

Shorthand and Typewriting.

Miss Lizzie Rummel wishes to organize a class in shorthand, or two classes if needed, beginners and a full course. She teaches the improved Pitman method, a standard method. This will give a chance to learn at much less expense than to go away to school, and at least as thoroughly. Address her through the postoffice at Auburn.

The Rail Fence Problem.

MR. EDITOR.—Sir: In regard to that land problem that was in a recent issue of THE COURIER would say that each side of the square must be 6,400 rods. The field would contain 256,000 acres. It requires 10 rails per rod. There are 25,600 rods; and 10 times 25,600 are 256,000. This would be one rail for each acre. This would make a real nice cornfield, as the rows would be 20 miles long. Making no allowance for fences, and by placing the rows 3 feet apart, there would be 35,200 rows each way. A man plowing them and making one round to each row, would travel 2,816,000 miles, or more than 117 times the distance around the earth. There would be 1,239,040,000 hills in the field; and allowing 50 hills per bushel, there would be 24,780,800 bushels. If a man would husk 100 bushels per day, it would take him 247,808 days to husk it. This would be equal to about 791 years of 313 days each.

H. A. WINSLOW.

HUDSON, IND., March 28, 1893.

MR. BARNS.—Sir: In reply to the problem containing a tract of land of an equal square to be enclosed by a rail fence so each rod contains 10 rails, stated in Franklin tp. items. This contains 256,000 acres or 6,400 rods square. Requires 256,000 rails to enclose it. The beef problem I have overlooked. I must look it up. Yours Resp.,

Obituary.

Margaret Barr was born July 27th, 1855, died April 1st, 1893, aged 37 years, 8 months and 4 days. She united with the M. E. church at the early age of 13. She was united in marriage to James D. Freeman February 2, 1880. To them were born two sons and one daughter. The daughter preceded her in death. She was a faithful wife and a kind and loving mother. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn her loss. As the end drew near, she called the family and friends to her bedside and entreated them to live better and meet her in heaven. She was willing to go and passed quietly away. The funeral was April 3, conducted by Rev. W. L. Meese, at Cedar Chapel, where she was laid to rest.

Election Notice.

I, Ulysses S. Raut, Clerk of the incorporated town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, do hereby certify that at a corporation election to be held on Monday, May 1, 1893,

the following officers are to be elected:
One Marshal,
One Clerk,
One Treasurer,
each for the term of one year;
One Trustee in Second (2d) Ward,
One trustee in Fifth (5th) Ward,
each for the term of two years.

In testimony of which I have set my hand and affixed the seal of said town, this third day of April, 1893.

(SEAL.) U. S. RAUT, Town Clerk,

City Candidates.

MARSHAL.

TREASURER.

For treasurer, on the democratic ticket, Chas. H. G. Jones.

Our Candidates.

We begin to-day a column of announcements for candidates for office on the democratic ticket this spring. We are satisfied that none but good men will apply for these positions. Surely we hope only good men will ask these important places. We want every department of our city government economically and prudently administered We have a plenty of good timber for the places. Let us select only the best, and then elect them by good round majorities, set them at work and keep our town and its interests at the front. Let us have all square, fair work between the candidates, so there will be no cause to complain, and then the man who gets the nomination will have a united support. Don't let us have any foolishness about this election. The COURIER wants to help elect the men nominated. Let us unite and do it. Look over our list. We have none but good men so far.

Election Law Changes.

Everything in regard to el ections remains as before, except that the tickets are not published in the newspapers. But any changes in precinct boundaries must be published as heretofore in two papers of opposite politics and whose parties polled the highest vote at the last election. There must be also four posters put up in each precinct as before defining the precinct lines where any change has been made. Also sample ballots must be put up on election day as usual. Of course the tickets are in the same form and the nominations of candidates, and the voting on election day will be as before. The only change, as already stated is in not publishing the tickets in the papers. As the election for town officers will be May 1, it is well for the proper authorities to keep the matter in view.

Don't Let It go Without You.

The boys and even the older "Isaak Waltons" are catching a good many fish in Cedar Creek. Councilman Potter put the rest to shame last week by hauling out a black sucker weighing two pounds, seven ounces. Now, we are ready to record the next one, if it is a bigger fish than the one he caught.

Hudson World: The last spike on the Wabash extension was driven on the 17th at Tolleston. The 110 miles of track between Hammond and Montpelier are now ready for ballasting, and three trains are at work hauling gravel. It is not believed the line will be ready to operate before May 15, or possibly June 1.

W. H. Palmer called up to see us Monday bringing along the subscription of his father, E. H. Palmer who resides at Larwill. This makes us think of an important omission of the Courier. We should have reported W. H. and wife, as the owners of a nice new boy, since last Sunday week. Better late than never and we wish them well over their good fortune.

A report comes to town that three or four dead horses have been dragged out into the creek bottom north of town. The parties should bury them or dispose of them in some proper way, as they are liable to prosecution for leaving them as they are. The creek runs right down through town and thus endangers the health and comfort of all. We hope before next week we shall hear that these old, worn out animals have had a decent burial.

Miss Amy Bailey, of Jackson, and her friend Mrs. Bishop of this place, called in last Thursday. They reported a sad death, on Tuesday of Miss Dora Bilkey. She was sick only about a day, but realizing that she must die, she called her young friends and others about her, and while she still had strength enough to stand she got up and took each by the hand, bade them farewell and gave directions as to pall bearers, etc., and within a few hours died. The funeral was on Thursday, the interment being in Woodlawn.

Fred. Rogers, of Reading, was here over Sunday, the guest of George Lanning and other friends. He is editor of the "Hustler," one of the two excellent papers published at that thriving village The other is the "Telephone," of which Frank Kline is foreman. Both are doing well, with a large circulation and other patronage. Reading is still a manufacturing town. It will be remembered that a few years ago, it had the largest establishment in the world for tanning buffalo robes. When that industry suddenly stopped, as the last buffalo was killed, the establishment closed of course. But lately it has been revived, for they find that certain of the Galway cattle, and the Polled Angus furnish fairly good robes at this season of the year, and they are doing an immense business now in that line.

"A Night in Greece" will be given April 26 in the Presbyterian church by the young ladies of the Y. P. S. C. E Preparation is being made for a very interesting entertainment, consisting of a Greek drill, Greek plays. including pantomimic action, songs and other features.

The ladies of the Lutheran church gave an excellent supper at the social Saturday evening, and the proof that it was highly appreciated was shown by the great attendance. The receipts were over $31. The ladies of Auburn are sound on business questions as well as in their christianity.

While we are cleaning up let us urge the board of commissioners or whoever has it in charge, to "slick up" the east half of the public square. It looks worse than a barnyard in springtime. Piles of dirt, rubbish, old pieces of material of all kinds left over from the extensive repairs that were made last fall and winter. It has the look of a nightmare generally. It will not take much to put it in shape, and it should be done early.

Fred Shaffer has been taken into partnership in the furniture business with his father, C. C. Shaffer. The style of the new firm name will be "C. C. Shaffer & Co." The change in firm makes it necessary for Mr. Shaffer to get all of his old accounts settled. He appreciates the liberal patronage which he has received in past years and he respectfully solicits favors for the new firm All who are indebted to C. C Shaffer are requested to call and settle their accounts either by note or cash.

Mr. Coe, principal of the High School is pretty well posted on natural philosophy, and especially as to the effect of direct and resultant forces. He can in short, prove by experience that "when an irresistible force comes into contact with an immovable body" then "the stars appear in the firmament." The apparatus for the trial was not furnished by the school board however. It may be briefly summoned up as "An untried bicycle in unskilled hands opposed by several substantial shade trees" Result: Banged eye, peeled tree, with nose ditto.

G. W. Coats and his wife were here Monday, calling on friends and attending to some business. Mr. Coats is still in the employ of the King Bridge Co., the firm that has made so many of our iron bridges. He has spent the winter in Kentucky and at distant points, overseeing the construction of their bridges. He reports that the company has constructed about 500 since New Years, or have them under contract for the summer which is at the rate of more than one bridge a day. Mrs Coats will be well remembered here at her former home, as Miss Alice McKay, daughter of A J. McKay, who is now in the west She has many friends among the old neighbors.

Mrs Sherman Dickinson had quite an accident while driving along the street last Saturday. She had her stepdaughter Pearl, and her little child, Hazel, in the buggy with her, when they met another buggy in which were Mrs, Quince and Mrs. Rainier. The two ladies were looking the other way and did not see Mrs. Dickinson, and the latter to avoid a collision tried to turn out, but the teams were going so fast that before she could avoid it they came together. Mrs. Dickinson and Hazel were thrown out, and the child was considerably bruised especially about the face, though no bones were broken. She took the child to Casebeer & Matheny's office where its injuries were treated, when it was taken home. We have not heard later, but hope it was not seriously hurt. At the time of the accident Mrs. Dickinson lost a large brown veil she had just bought. It was done up, and she would be pleased to have the finder return it.

Their Annual.

The popular L. L. C. annual on Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Willis was largely attended, for invitations to their charming social reunions are always appreciated. On this evening the spacious rooms were full, not less than 140 being present. It was the judgment of the ladies, that the usual literary exercises be omitted this once, and though these have always been of a high order and very enjoyable, the social features of this meeting were no less pleasant. A superb lunch was served, such as one never sees except from the hands of skilled and intelligent ladies like those who constitute the membership of the club. Speaking from a man's standpoint, one finds it a much easier task to enjoy and appreciate such a treat, than to give a very intelligent description of it. If the ladies could have heard the compliments bestowed on this particular feature, they would have felt but lightly the burdens of the labor and thought bestowed on its preparation. Again, if we knew how, we would like to say something about the lovely dresses worn by the ladies and their guests. They were, we think, the loveliest and tastiest ever seen, even on one of these bright annuals. The members themselves wore yellow roses, which with the green foliage combined to constitute the colors of the club, recently adopted. This was also seen in the decorations of the tables, and and the various rooms. The club showed again, that they were masters of the art of entertaining. In this, we especially mention the President Mrs. A. Lewis, the vice-president, Mrs. J. E. Rose, as well as Mrs. M. B. Willis, who was the hostess of the evening, they being the committee selected for this duty. Mr. and Mrs. Willis deserve thanks for their hearty and charming style of hospitality. Mention should also be made of the lovely dwarf spireas sent by Mrs. Ensley at Indianapolis, and the orange blossoms from Mrs. A. S. Leas in California, which attracted a good deal of attention.

We are now able to state definitely the date of the reunion of the 30th. It is April 20, at Monroeville, Ind., east of Ft. Wayne on the Pittsburg road. As often happens, the DeKalb boys get a full share of the honors. James Johnson of Garrett is on the committee for locating the next reunion. J. A. Provines, J. W. McKay and Phil Noel are down for speeches. They have a good program, and we think will have a good meeting.

THE growth of the mileage of electric street railways from fifty to 6,000 mile during the last five years shows the tremendous strides that this system of transportation is making. SEATTLE has a manufacturing future before it second to none on the Pacific Coast. It has natural mineral resources in its vicinity that promise to equal those of the great iron region of Pennsylvania with proper development; it has an available timber supply that is as near inexhaustible as any on the continent; cheap fuel is furnished by the numerous coal deposits within easy reach; her harbor affords safe and ample accommodations for shipping, and her rail transportation facilities are great and increasing. In a short time another and most important factor will be added to these advantages. A project is now on foot to utilize the enormous power of the Snoqualmie Falls, located about twenty-two miles from the city. It is estimated that by converting this natural force into electricity and conveying it to Seattle hundreds of thousands of horse-power will be made available at much less than 50 per cent. of the present cost. The projectors claim that they will be able to furnish power for all the street railroads and machinery now operated in Seattle and have a reserve force that can be brought into service to an almost unlimited extent. As cheap power is the prime factor in making manufacturing profitable, Seattle's industrial future is undoubtedly a bright one. That her citizens have the necessary enterprise has already been amply demonstrated in her remarkable recovery from, and progress after, the conflagration of a few years ago.

Took Possession at Once.

A new condition is a new test of character. When a rich man suddenly becomes poor, those who live with him have a chance to see of what stuff he is made; and the same is true when a poor man suddenly finds himself rich.

An old gentleman was present at the reading of the will of a distant relative, says the London Spectator. He had hardly expected to find himself remembered in it, but pretty soon a clause was read in which a certain field was willed to him. That was good. But the document went on to bequeath the old gray mare in the said field to some one else, a man with whom the old gentleman was not on friendly terms.

That was too much for his equanimity, and he interrupted the solemn proceedings and brought a smile to the faces of the company, by exclaiming:

"Then she's eating my grass!"

Must Have Been a Chicago Boy.

"Talk about business enterprise," said Frank L. Perley. "Away back in '85 we had a young fellow with us who was getting $15 and his board. The night Jumbo was killed in St. Thomas this boy developed himself. We were all sympathizing with poor old Jumbo and wondering how we could replace him. The youngster was thinking of something else. You know the tail of an elephant has at the very tip a bunch of thick hair, very much like a brush. This boy got under the fence and had pulled every hair out of Jumbo's tail. His business at the circus was to sell balloons to children. Well, there were seventy-six of those thick hairs, and at the show the next afternoon he was selling them for $1 apiece as relics of the great giant. He sold seventy-five of them and practically found $75. The other one he kept for himself and still wears it as his mascot."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

LETTER TO CLEVELAND

TARIFF REFORM DISCUSSED BY MR. SHEARMAN.

Specific Duties Are a Device of Manufacturers to Obtain Increasing Protection—They Oppress the Poor and Are Tools of Corruption.

Ad Valorem Duties Sound in Theory.

By mutual agreement Mr. Thomas G. Shearman is addressing, through the New York Times, a series of letters to President Cleveland on the subject of tariff reform. Former letters dealt with the necessity for radical reduction of duties in accordance with the Chicago platform; the great benefits to the producers of cotton, grains, and meats of lower duties on what must be imported in exchange for these products; the present extraordinary expenditures due to new pension legislation; the connection between excessive duties and a demand for cheap money; the reasons, political and moral, why sugar, coffee, and tea should not be taxed; and the necessity for the removal of old rather than the imposition of any new duties.

Mr. Shearman is one of the oldest students of the subject of taxation, and because of his long experience as a customs attorney, his exceptional ability, and his sympathy with the tax-burdened masses, his opinions have come to have great weight with all earnest thinking men. His sixth letter deals with the kind of duties that should be levied. It contains perhaps the most concise statement in favor of ad valorem duties ever made. His position is absolutely impregnable. The subject is so little understood and of such vital importance that we reproduce below the entire letter:

DEAR SIR—One of the most important questions to be decided in framing a tariff—probably the most important question of mere method—is: Shall duties be specific or ad valorem, or a little of both? In other words, shall taxes on goods be proportioned to their value or to their weight and measure?

The answers of all tax-eaters to this question are practically unanimous. Public officials whose duty it is to collect taxes prefer specific duties, because it is vastly easier to weigh goods and charge so much a pound than it is to ascertain their true value and assess them in proportion to that. Protected manufacturers prefer specific duties, because it is easy, in this manner, to tax the people 100 per cent. for private gain in cases where 50 per cent. openly levied on values would not be tolerated. They prefer such duties because, as we shall presently show, these duties have a self-acting power of constantly-increasing taxation, until, after the lapse of a few years, such duties become prohibitory and secure to the domestic manufacturer a monopoly, so that, in multitudes of cases, that which was intended as a proper revenue duty, and was such when enacted, soon produces no revenue to the public, while it extorts enormous tribute from the masses for the benefit of a small class of capitalists.

They prefer specific duties, for the very reason which should make such duties a crime—because they fall more heavily upon articles used by the poor than upon those used by the rich. Not that these gentlemen have any animosity toward the poor or any desire to increase the amount which the poor shall pay to the Government. They have no such unbusiness-like motives. But experience has taught them that the poorer classes afford a market vastly more valuable, taken altogether, than which can be found among the rich, whose number is so small as to make their consuming power, as a class, unimportant to most manufacturers. Specific duties, under which the poor man's coat and hat are taxed precisely as much as those of the rich man, worth five times as much, inevitably prohibit importations of goods suitable for the poor, and thus give to the home manufacturers a monopoly of their supply. No wonder that these manufacturers are enthusiastic advocates of specific duties.

Many importers, however, are advocates of the same system for different reasons. It is, undoubtedly, difficult to ascertain the precise values of many articles, and, therefore, honest and conscientious importers often find that, under a system of heavy ad valorem duties, their dishonest rivals, by making a few false oaths as to value, pay less tax upon the same kind of articles, and so can undersell them. Severe penalties are imposed for such offenses, but so long as the reward of crime is great such risks will be taken.

None of these reasons, however, suffices to justify specific duties. The ease and convenience of public servants are not to be considered for a moment against the demands of justice and equal rights. The reasons why protected manufacturers prefer such duties are the very reasons why such duties should not be tolerated. There is no respectable argument in favor of specific duties, except that which is assigned by importers—the danger of undervaluation and the consequent advantage of dishonest competition in trade.

Let us begin, then, with this argument. We are practical men, and therefore proceed to a practical test. The first and all-sufficient answer to the argument for specific duties, as a necessity to prevent fraud, is that the experience of eighty years of effort in this direction proves that it is impossible to prevent such frauds by such means. For more than sixty of the last eighty years, the National Government has been in the hands of men who have taxed their ingenuity to devise specific duties, as a means of preventing fraud, and the only result has been a continual increase in the clamor about fraud, and a development of new frauds under specific duties themselves.

Moreover, at the end of all this incessant effort to make duties specific, when twenty different Congresses have sought with intense zeal to abolish all ad valorem duties, so far as they dared to do it, what do we find? Far more than one-third of all the revenue collected from ad valorem duties, and more than half of all enumerated articles admitted under ad valorem rates! The tariff of 1883 was the culminating effort of the specific fanatics; and yet 38 per cent. of all the revenue under that act was collected on ad valorems, while only 590 articles were subjected to purely specific rates, against 789 which were dutiable ad valorem in whole or in part. A clear majority was taxed upon a purely ad valorem basis.

Such an example of dead failure affords an excellent instance for the application of the old rule: "That which never was never ought to be."

Let us now consider the reasons for a uniform ad valorem system.

In the first place, it has existed once, and therefore it can exist again. It was in force from 1846 to 1861, and it worked better than any other system ever put into practice.

It is universally conceded to be sound in theory and absolutely just in principle. If all values were correctly stated, taxation upon that basis would be ideally perfect. No one proposes for a moment to tax every house alike, or to tax land by the square foot instead of the market value. Every intelligent man knows that assessors make gross errors in valuation of real estate, but no human being proposes to interfere with the ad valorem principle in local taxation. The idea of taxing the poor man's acre in Kansas, worth $20, as much as the rich man's acre in New York City, worth $2,000,000, would be so monstrous that no one would venture to mention it. Yet the principle is precisely the same with that which taxes a yard of cloth worth 50 cents as much as another yard worth $5.

Specific duties always and inevitably bear very heavily upon the poor and very lightly upon the rich. This is their conclusive condemnation. No matter what may be the loss of the Government by evasions of taxes—no matter what may be the loss of honest importers by the frauds of their rivals—nothing can justify the wholesale robbery of the poorer classes, which is inherent in every system of tax by mere weight or measure.

So powerful is this consideration that even the unscrupulous Congress of 1890 did not dare entirely to disregard it. They did as all previous Congresses have done—they combined all the iniquities of both the specific and the ad valorem systems. They piled up heavy taxes per pound or yard to make the burden of the poor greater than that of the rich; and then, to balance this monstrous wrong, they added heavy ad valorem duties, so as to give dishonest importers all the advantage over their honest rivals which an exclusive ad valorem system could give them.

Then, to rectify the frauds, which were certain to multiply under such a tariff, they prescribed a schedule of oaths or statements so complicated and inconsistent that it is utterly impossible for the majority of importers to carry on business at all without telling lies with every invoice. Importers are regularly compelled to make positive statements as to matters concerning which they have not, and cannot have, any knowledge, information, or belief. Finally, judges are appointed to pass upon this evidence, who threw it all out of the window, and proceed to decide each case upon backstairs whisperings or their own infallible consciousness.

Among the devices by which the present tariff seeks to avoid the gross injustice of specific duties is the increase of such duties according to increase of value in the article taxed. Thus, in many articles of iron and steel, as well as in wools and woolens, the specific duty rises with the cost of the goods. Stockings of cotton, which are valued at 60 cents a dozen, are taxed 32 cents; but, if they are worth 61 cents, they are taxed 68 cents. Those which are worth $2 are taxed $1.10; if worth $2.05, they are taxed $1.57. Similar provisions appear as to cutlery, steel ingots, bars, etc., and many other articles. The enormous temptation offered by such laws to undervaluation is manifest at a glance. By swearing down the price 2 cents a tax of 38 cents in one case or 47 cents in another may be evaded. No purely ad valorem tariff offers one-tenth of the inducement to false invoices which is offered by such laws as these.

Moreover, such regulations put a premium upon the degradation of goods on the border line. By lowering the quality of a pair of stockings from 17 cents to 16, they can be honestly sold in our market at a price 5 cents lower. Accordingly, it is notorious that the quality of these articles has been greatly degraded since the new tariff took effect.

Specific duties on manufactured goods have a self-acting tendency to increase the burdens of the people and the power of extortion by home manufacturers. Manufacturing processes are continually improving, and the cost of production continually grows less. But the specific duty remains the same. Thus, when the duty of $28 was imposed upon steel rails in 1870, it was, and was intended to be, only the equivalent of the ad valorem duty of 45 per cent. ad valorem. But constant improvements in manufacturing methods reduced the cost in Europe so much that in less than five years this duty became a tax of nearly 100 per cent. ad valorem, and was absolutely prohibitory. The same thing has happened in equal or little less degree in hundreds of other instances.

Thus duties, which at first were laid purely for revenue purposes, become first highly protective and finally prohibitory. They are gradually perverted, by automatic action, from fulfilling their only justifiable purpose, that of providing revenue for the public good, into forced contributions for private profit, and finally into mere engines of monopoly and extortion.

Since, then, specific duties in most cases are impossible; since they are in all cases unjust, unequal, and oppressive; since they increase the burdens of poverty and lessen the burdens of wealth; since they offer even greater temptations to fraud than other duties, and since they insidiously increase the burdens of taxation and stealthily diminish the public revenue to increase the tribute levied by individuals upon the masses, they should not be tolerated in any case except one. The one exception is where articles are imported which, if produced here, would be subject to a specific internal revenue tax. Such articles must, of course, be taxed upon the same footing with similar domestic articles. Spirits and malt liquors should therefore pay the internal revenue tax, in addition to such ad valorem duty as will produce the most revenue. This, however, is not a real exception to the rule as to the tariff, because these articles are governed by the internal revenue system, concerning which we have nothing at present to do. Opium should pay the internal revenue tax, and nothing else. The internal tax upon wines and tobacco is so small that it can easily be allowed for in ad valorem rates.

An ad valorem tariff is the only one which is sound in theory; and long experience has proved that it is, after all allowance is made for its faults, the fairest and most honest in practice. It has grave faults, it is true; but those faults are inherent and unavoidable in every tariff. All taxes upon merchandise or production, whether domestic or foreign, are inevitably vicious, unequal, unjust, and corrupting. Under an ad valorem tariff some few hundred business men suffer inconvenience and loss. Under a specific tariff the same classes suffer half as much inconvenience, while millions of our people suffer enormous losses. Bad as smuggling is, it is far better to endure some smuggling by undervaluations than it is to deprive millions of the comforts, or even luxuries, of life through the stealthy and snaky oppressions of specific duties. Yours very respectfully, THOMAS G. SHEARMAN.

The Hon. Grover Cleveland.

Blessings of Commerce.

The inhabitants of the various sections of the world produce for each other. The temperate zones, for instance, exchange the commodities they can produce most easily and cheaply for the product that can be best produced in a warmer climate. This exchange of products, or commerce, not only gives employment to thousands upon thousand of hands, but brings it about that the people of the various sections can better satisfy their wants by being enabled to procure what they themselves cannot produce at all, or could produce only at the expense of a great deal of time and labor. This great expenditure of time and labor would, of course, make the desired products not only dearer, but in many cases, such as, for instance, tropical fruits and vegetables that had to be grown in hot houses, so dear that only the very rich would be able to enjoy them.

But commerce, in order to be efficient, has need of means of communication and transportation. Where such facilities are entirely lacking, no commerce can exist. Where they are very efficient, commerce will be facilitated, and products of all kinds and of every clime will not only be abundant but even cheap, so that they can come within the reach of everybody. Improved means of communication and transportation, because they bring the various sections of the globe closer together by shortening distances, have cheapened production and brought about the lowering of rents of all natural agents as land and mines in the more thickly settled old countries, where no so-called protective system prevented the free importation of the products of other hands. The superior advantages of transportation during the past half century have brought the old and new countries so close together that the virtual monopoly in the soil and its products, by land owners has been broken, and landlords, etc., in those old countries are compelled to accept much lower rents than when the facilities for intercourse were much inferior, and the cost of transportation consequently much higher. And who have been benefited by it? The inhabitants of the old countries. For the cheaper agricultural rents are, the less product goes to the landlord, and the more to the laborer. This is plainly to be seen in Great Britain, where, it is said, about forty years ago, the landlord received as rent for his land more than one-half of what it produced, while at present, owing to the removal of protective duties, and the efficient, quick and cheap means of transportation, he hardly averages one-fourth of its product in the shape of rent. The landowners have lost, but the British people have gained immensely.

It may be well here to recall that international commerce is nothing but barter upon a grand scale, and that the products which one section buys of another section are paid for in commodities and very seldom in money. People do not produce for the sake of getting money, but only to obtain commodities to satisfy their wants. As money, however, is the payment, in most instances, for work done, it must be plain that the more productive a country is, the more money it will possess and the more money its laborers will receive as wages. High money wages, therefore, can never cause high prices of commodities, and low money wages are never conducive to cheapening the prices of commodities. Low money wages are a consequence of small productiveness, or high rents, or both combined. High money wages can only be paid where there is a large product and little of it goes to non-producers. For those reasons the high-paid English workman has nothing to fear from the competition of his low-priced confreres on the continent of Europe, and for the same reasons the American workmen need have no fear that free trade will bring down the American wages to the level of English wages.—Dingman Versteeg, in Tariff Reform.

EXPENSES OF CARRYING ON THE GOVERNMENT.

One Hundred Million Dollars Will Be Paid Yearly to the New Democratic Officers—Comparative Statement of Wealth in the United States.

Where the Money Goes.

Washington correspondence:

After all it is not so remarkable that there is something of a demand for the offices. The salaries paid to Government employes amount in round numbers to $100,000,000 a year, and in the four years' term which is ahead of the Democracy, will foot up the handsome total of $400,000,000, or thereabouts. Possibly the figure may not reach quite this amount at the present, but the chances are that it will overrun it before the four years' term ends, for with the growth of the country there is no getting away from the growth in the number of offices and the amount that must be paid in salaries. The talk of a reduction in offices and the salaries of those who occupy them is "moonshine." It can not be done without neglecting the business of the Government, and as there are 66,000,000 people to pay for having it done, and well done, there is no occasion for a niggardly economy which would prove disastrous in a business way. Probably few of the people who are scrambling for places realize that the total amount of salaries paid to Government employes foots up so large a sum as a hundred million dollars a year. Yet this is only a dollar and a half apiece all around, now that our population is 66,000,000 people. And this only makes the average salary of the 200,000 people who hold office under the Government about five hundred dollars per annum each.

Something of the details of where this money goes may be of interest. The diplomatic service is not so expensive a luxury as would be supposed probable. The salary of Ministers amounts to only $340,000 per annum; Secretaries of Legation $40,000 per annum, and Consuls $500,000, while there is also an additional allowance of about $100,000 for clerks and consulates. The salaries in the offices of the Secretary of the Treasury amount to about a half million dollars a year, but this does not include the various divisions in which the salaries run from a few thousand up to more than a half million dollars per annum. The salaries for the office of Secretary of War amount to over one hundred thousand dollars, and those of the Record and Pension divisions of the War Department foot up over one million dollars per annum. The pay of the officers of the line in the army is $2,800,000, and there is added to that $90,000 for pay of officers for length of service. The pay of the enlisted men of the army is $4,100,000; officers on the retired list, $1,122,000. The pay table of the navy is about half as much as that of the War Department, and the total salaries of the Treasury Department, including over two millions in the Internal Revenue Service alone, is about twelve millions of dollars. The Interior Department spends about five million dollars a year for salaries, the Agricultural Department a little over a million, and the Department of Justice about the same.

The Postoffice Department, however, is the one which piles up the total of salaries. Even in the Postoffice Department in Washington the salaries amount to nearly a million dollars a year, and when you branch out into the postal service all over the country it becomes appalling. The appropriations for the fiscal year just about to end allotted $15,250,000 for postmasters and $10,764,000 for the free delivery service. There should be added to this $5,000,000 for carrying the mails by star routes, most of which is for salaries; mail-messenger service over a million dollars, and railway postoffice clerks $6,631,000. Even Congress is a somewhat expensive luxury. The pay of Senators amounts to about half a million dollars a year and that of Representatives about $2,000,000 a year, to say nothing of the amounts paid for the employes, clerks, stenographers, and messengers who assist them in their duties.

Nothing better and more happily illustrates the growth of this country and prosperity of the people than a comparison of the conditions at this time with those which existed when Mr. Cleveland came into office eight years ago. That the country has been prosperous under the two administrations which are represented in those eight years is evident. Then there were 7,750 banks, now there are 10,000. Their capital stock then was $750,000,000, now it is over a billion. The people then had $2,700,000,000 laid away in the banks "for a rainy day," now they have $4,700,000,000 so deposited in the banks. Our national wealth, which then was $48,000,000,000, is now $69,000,000,000. The average per capita of wealth in the United States, including property and money, then was $850 for each individual, while to-day it is in round numbers $1,000.

LIKE RATS IN A TRAP.

Ten Lives Go Out in the Bowels of the Earth.

One of the most distressing disasters that ever occurred in the anthracite region followed the explosion of a lamp in the hands of a Hungarian employed in the Nelson colliery near Shamokin, Pa. The colliery, which is operated by J. Langdon & Co., is one of the largest and best known in the region, paying superior wages and furnishing work to its thousand employes the year around. Fire followed the explosion, and the smoke which rushed through the air shafts caught ten men who had gone to work in a vein above the scene of the explosion and smothered them to death.

The day being a holiday there were not so many men at work as usual. Others for the same reason were late in reaching the mine, and it is owing to these fortunate facts that the death list is not very much larger.

The fire started about twenty feet from the bottom of the slope, where there is an oil-house, which is used by the men to change their working clothes for others before leaving the mines. About 6:50 in the morning a Hungarian was filling his lamp and it exploded, igniting the oil about him. He rushed from the oil-house and the flames spread with rapidity.

Attempts were made to fight the fire, but those who started to do so were compelled to flee for their lives. They succeeded in reaching the bottom of the shaft and were hauled to the surface along with some belated miners who owe their lives to the fact that they did not go to work at their usual time. The ten men who lost their lives were at work in the red ash vein, located nearly 100 feet above where the fire broke out.

Through an airway from the lower vein to the red ash vein the smoke poured, suffocating the unfortunates like rats in a trap. Almost the entire town gathered in the vicinity of the burning mine, from the air passages of which great volumes of smoke were issuing. The scenes were most distressing. The wives and children of the imprisoned men uttered agonizing cries and implored the men in the crowd to rescue their loved ones.

Although the hardest kind of work was done, it was impossible for the volunteer force to extinguish the flames.

Later orders were given to turn Carbon Run Creek into the mine. This will take a month, and many more months will follow before the mine will be in condition to resume operations.

FIVE BURNED TO DEATH.

Fatal Fire in a Hotel at Bradford, Pa.—"Crow's Nest" Destroyed.

Five lives were lost and twenty-two people injured by the burning of the Higgins House, Sunday morning, at Bradford, Pa. The dead are: Miss Georgia Bond, Bradford; Thomas Cullen, Bradford; F. Havelin, Sanberry; George Parks, Bradford; Baby Tucker, aged 3, drowned in the creek. The previous night 125 persons went to sleep in the Higgins Hotel, a frame structure three stories high on the bank of the Tuna, a small creek. At 4:30 a vigorous ringing of the big bell on the hill aroused the whole town. A brisk wind was blowing at the time, and it fanned the flames in the hotel and gave them strength and vigor. When the firemen reached the scene the whole hotel was enveloped in fire. It was of wood and burned like a vast heap of straw. There was an awful panic in the hotel when the guests were aroused. The men and women rushed from their rooms into the hallways, filled already with smoke and flame, and jumped from the windows. The jump was a bad one to take. From the upper story it was thirty feet on the west side, with a plank bottom to strike on. On the east side was the creek and the distance was forty feet, but several persons made the leap for life into the stream and were rescued.

At Buzzard's Bay, Mass., Joe Jefferson's beautiful villa, Crow's Nest, was destroyed by fire which started in the cellar, caused by a gas explosion. So rapidly did the flames progress that it was with much difficulty that Mrs. Jefferson and the family made their escape. Several of the servants were severely burned, and the cook, Helen McGrath, lost her life, being suffocated in the basement. The house cost $30,000, and the pictures, furniture and bric-a-brac represented an outlay of over $100,000, though prized far more for their associations.

WOMEN CRUSADERS INJURED.

They Forced Their Way Into a Saloon and Received Rough Treatment.

Six of the leading ladies of Rolla, N. D., are lying wounded and bruised in their beds as the result of a remarkable fight Sunday afternoon with saloon men. A crusade was made against the blind pigs of Rolla under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Sunday was the day set for the securing of evidence upon which to base prosecutions. A committee was appointed to make the circuit of the joints, and it marched bravely up the street followed by two-thirds of the female population of the town.

The first pig they came to was presided over by Lin Bush. He attempted to prevent the entrance of the females, but they were not to be stopped by trifles. Bush was tossed to one side, and for the first time women stood within the precincts of a North Dakota prohibition dive. An inventory of stock was begun, and several bottles of "hop tea" and several of "XXX porter" were seized. While in the midst of their explorations Landlord Bush returned with assistance and soon the air was full of animated femininity. When the women gathered themselves up out of the street several were bleeding from brutal blows and all were disfigured. They threaten dire vengeance.

Tomatoes Do Not Cause Cancer.

In a late issue of the London Times appeared a letter to the editor containing the following: "There is a very prevalent idea that eating tomatoes is an exciting cause of cancer, and for the last two years we have been so inundated with letters on this subject that the medical committee of the Cancer Hospital would be greatly obliged by your publishing in the Times their opinion—viz., that tomatoes neither predispose to nor excite cancer formation, and that they are not injurious to those suffering from this disease, but are, on the contrary, a very wholesome article of diet, if properly cooked. We shall also be greatly obliged by other papers making this generally known."

If You Want The Best

ALTHOUGH you may have had good luck with but few failures in making cake and biscuit in the old-fashioned way with soda and sour milk, or soda and cream of tartar, you will have better luck and (following directions) no failures with the Royal Baking Powder.

The truth of this must be evident when you remember that in the leading hotels and restaurants, and in the homes of our city cousins, where the latest and best methods are invariably employed, and where the most beautiful and dainty food is always set out for the guests, the Royal Baking Powder is exclusively used for all quickly risen food.

Royal Baking Powder never disappoints; never makes sour, soggy or husky food; never spoils good materials; never leaves lumps of alkali in the biscuit or cake; while all these things do happen with the best of cooks who cling to the old-fashioned methods, or who use other Baking Powders.

If you want the best food, Royal Baking Powder is indispensable.

His Courtroom Thunder Stolen.

A member of the Massachusetts bar used to get verdicts by touching appeals to tender feelings of jurymen, especially if his client was poor and the defendant was a rich corporation. He became famous for getting verdicts in such cases. One day he met his match. The counsel for a corporation which he had sued undertook to head him off. He had an opportunity to study his opponent's methods, and gave special attention to his style in the delivery of pathetic passages. Having the right to make the opening plea he told the jury what to expect, described the attitude, tones, and manner of his brother lawyer, and did it so thoroughly and faithfully that he not only discounted the effects of his plea, but so embarrassed him that he could not do justice to himself or his client, who lost his case.—Boston Globe.

The Date of Chist's Birth.

The consensus of critical opinion of the last century is that Christ was born at some time during the year of Rome 750, or about four years before the beginning of the Christian era. The date of the month is not known, nor can it be fixed. Christmas day was fixed simply because the Romans had a heathen festival in December, the Saturnalia, which the Christians merely adapted to their own beliefs. The date of the year is fixed with a good deal of certainty, because we know that Herod the Great died before the Passover in April, 750, and Mary came up to the Passover, and to the registration enforced by Quirinius, Legate of Syria, in the same year. A recent book on the subject is Zumpt's "Geburtsjahr Christi," in German, published some twenty-four years ago.

Transplanting Trees.

Any tree may be transplanted if proper precautions are observed. When it becomes desirable to transplant a large tree a trench should be dug round it early in the autumn, but before the ground is frozen, and the leading roots should be severed at a distance of six to ten feet from the trunk, according to the size of the tree. When the ground is frozen the tree with its roots can be raised in one solid mass, placed in a wagon such as is commonly used for transporting large blocks of stone, and moved to its destination. Very early in the spring, before the sap begins to run, the tree should be topped, and if the roots have not been cut too closely the tree will grow just as if nothing had happened to it.

Make Haste to Defend Yourself

If you live in a locality where malaria is prevalent, with a preventive that experience indicates as the most reliable of medical safeguards—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Entirely free from the objections—and they are valid ones—which attach to the mineral alkaloid quinine, it is far more effective, and its effects are not evanescent, but lasting, unlike those of the drug. There are portions of our land—and none more beautiful and more fertile—which at no season of the year are entirely exempt from the malarial scourge. In such regions Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has undergone a continuous test for the past forty years, with results which have established its reputation beyond all cavil as a special defense against every form of malarial disease. For biliousness, also, it is an acknowledged specific, and it is a potent remedy for constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism and an impoverished condition of the blood.

Excuse Accepted.

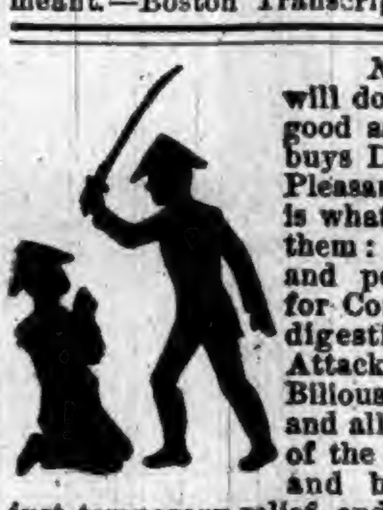
"It's a pity, uncle, you visited us today when we've only got pork for dinner. Now if you were here to-morrow I could give you a fine dish of hare or venison."

"All right, my dear; I'll prolong my visit until day after to-morrow."—Fliegende Blatter.

His Slang.

Mrs. Brown—I asked you to shake the furnace this morning, John, and you didn't touch it.

Mr. B.—That's right. I shook it altogether. Thought that was what you meant.—Boston Transcript.



NO QUARTER will do you as much good as the one that buys Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. This is what you get with them: An absolute and permanent cure for Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick and Bilious Headaches, and all derangements of the liver, stomach, and bowels. Not just temporary relief, and then a worse condition afterward—but help that lasts.

Pleasant help, too. These sugar-coated little pellets are the smallest, the easiest to take, and the easiest in the way they act. No griping, no violence, no disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation.

They come in sealed vials, which keeps them always fresh and reliable; a convenient and perfect vest-pocket remedy. They're the cheapest pills you can buy.

Cures Consumption, Coughs, Croup, Sore Throat. Sold by all Druggists on a Guarantee. For a Lame Side, Back or Chest Shiloh's Porous Plaster will give great satisfaction.—25 cents.

Snakes in India.

Probably not fewer than 50,000 people are killed by snakes in India every year. They are one of the chief causes of mortality in that country. Great efforts have been made by the British Government to destroy them, but with very little success. Unfortunately, the natives regard them as sacred. They consider the cobra in particular as embodying some sort of divinity, and it is customery for them to keep these frightful creatures as pets on their premises. Offers of bountiet for serpents' heads have been discouraged by the discovery of the practice pursued by many low-caste Hindoos of breeding snakes artificially to supply the official demand.

Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, etc., quickly relieved by Brown's Bronchial Troches. They surpass all other preparations in removing hoarseness and as a cough remedy are pre-eminently the best.

"So am I. Everybody will say that you bought me."—Life.

The Doctor.—"One layer of paper is bad enough, you have three here. Baby may recover but cannot thrive."

EVERYBODY knows that wall paper, with its vegetable paste and its colorings in animal glue, is unsanitary, and that to apply repeated layers of such is a very "nasty practice," as well as dangerous. Kalsomine is temporary, rots, rubs off and scales; paint stops "wall respiration" needed to purify walls. Send to us for a paper from Michigan State Board of Health report on this subject, recommending Church's Alabastine and plastico only for walls of dwellings. Alabastine forms pure, permanent and porous coatings, and does not require to be taken off to renew from time to time; is a dry powder, ready for use by adding water (the latest make is used in COLD water and is never sold in bulk); can be easily brushed on by any one; made in white and twelve fashionable tints, and in three shades, from which decorators make the balance of forty shades shown on their card.

N. B.—It is not claimed that all who live within papered walls die much before their time, but they will enjoy better health with wall coatings (PPPP) Pure, Permanent, Porous and Pretty.

Drs. Townsend Coming.

APRIL 18th.

Among many testimonials we find these: I had spinal curvature that doctors told me was incurable and I am now well. Another said: I was given up by fourteen doctors, who told me I had Bright's disease of the kidneys, but thanks to Drs. Townsend I am a well man. Another: I was bedriden for over ten years with a complication of female diseases. Some of the most eminent specialists, including three professors in medical colleges, and they all told me I could not get well. Four years ago I placed my case in the hands of the Drs. Townsend, and in 5 months and 4 days from the time I commenced treatment I dressed myself and walked across the room, and in another month I felt as well as I ever did in my life and have remained in excellent health ever since. Another says: I had epilepsy for fifteen years and was cured. Another: My whole nervous system was broken down and I was practically an old man at 31. I could not sleep, my hands trembled, I would get dizzy and forgetful and became so bad that I had to give up business. I consulted many doctors, the best I thought, in the country, and finally went to Europe, and spent over $9,000 and three years' time and was no better, but gradually got worse. I returned home to die and closed up all my business affairs. At last a friend, who had been cured, advised me to go to the Drs. Townsend. Without any faith, but to please him, I went, and to my great surprise they told me they could cure me, and they made good their their word, for from the first dose of medicine I commence to improve, and in twelve months I was completely cured. A lady says My case was pronounced to be tubercular consumption by seven of our best physicians, and under whose treatment I got worse all the time. The Drs. Townsend cured me in just four months. One says: I had catarrh that affected my head so I was almost crazy. It went into my ears, and oh! such a roaring, I was almost wild: it had gone down also upon my lungs and the doctor said it was the bronchitis. Thanks to the Drs. Townsend I am entirely well. Another says: I was cured of a bad cancer. A lady of great refinement, who had received serious injuries during a confinement. was cured after other specialists utterly failed. Thousands a cases similar to the above might be cited.

Examination by letter or in person free and sacredly confidential. If unable to see the doctors write full peticulars: Thousands treated by correspondence. Address, with stamp:

WATERLOO.

The paper hangers are all busy.

Many persons in town have made their gardens, and many have theirs partly made.

Mr. Harmes we understand wishes to sell his residence, in anticipation of moving elsewhere.

Mrs. Davis of Markley, Ind., spent a little time here a few days ago, calling upon her old neighbors.

Gertrude and Raymond Willis, Edson Beard and Homer Zigler spent their Easter vacation at home.

The gentleman who has engaged Wm. Patterson's store building, will soon open a clothing store in it.

Seth Rigby has moved his family to Elkhart. His married son has sold his house and also moved to the same place.

A Mr. Calkins from Corunna has moved his family within a few days into Mr. Abbey's building on the corner of Franklin and Railroad streets.

Ella Phillips has been for some time in Mrs. Johnson's store in the millinery department, but she goes this week to Hicksville, where she has been before, and has now a position as trimmer.

Easter was observed in some way in most of the churches, if only in the Sunday schools, by the teachers impressing upon the minds of their scholars the deep meaning the day holds and the presentation of lovely decorated and colored eggs.

Mr. Keep has moved into the Blattner property vacated by Mr. Locke. Mrs. Scott Lotzenhiser has moved into the house owned by Eli Williamson, and Scott Campbell is moving into Miss Matson's house heretofore occupied by Mrs. Lotzenhiser.

The Methodist church a week ago Sunday evening was packed to listen to Rev. W. R. Suman's last sermon of this conference year. It took the form of an address to young women, and was generally spoken of in high terms. He spoke under very disadvantageous circumstances, since he was suffering intensely from indisposition.

Mrs. E. Braun went Saturday to Ft. Wayne, to be absent ten days or so. Mrs. B goes every year at this period in order to see the churches in their lovely and appropriate Easter dress, to listen to the beautiful service suited to the occasion, and the sweet, sweet music, the chant "The Lord is risen." To one accustomed to it all the very thought of that chant alone is enough to move to tears, rejoicing tears, when all the world should be glad. At this time too, the business places are made as lovely as possible, and everything is at its best.

A young man named Baker is in town looking up a building, suitable for a baker. He professes to thoroughly understand his business, not only the substantial part, but the fine art department as well. He can no doubt do well, and as every business should have some competition for the good of the public he would probably furnish the competition needed. Many of the Waterloo ladies have expressed their opinion in very decided terms, that cigars and tobacco should not be sold and used in the same room where bread, rusk, buns, cakes, pies and similar things are kept that necessarily they become impregnated with tobacco smoke, and besides it is not appetizing to go into a room where tobacco juice is spit over the floor and in receptacles set here and there for it.

The Johnson opening took place last week Friday and Saturday. All the life seemed centered in and around their store for most of the town were attracted there during some part of one of the two days. The display was very fine indeed. Goods of all varieties in their line and of the best quality and beautiful beyond description. Each article seemed to lend a charm to the one near it, and the whole was so artistically and so tastily arranged as to form indeed a bower of beauty. As if feasting the eyes was not sufficient, Mr. Johnson being wise in his generation, and knowing the pockets of the stronger and sterner sex could be most surely reached through their stomachs, had provided a banquet for the gentlemen, not only dainty and elegantly arranged, but with substantials enough to satisfy the appetite It was something worth seeing, the long continuous file marching in and out for so long a time. We hope each left a card, that Mr. Johnson might know the number he feasted.

Spencerville W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Ellen Denny of Vincennes, has just closed a week's work in the temperance cause in Spencerville, and we feel greatly benefited by her being with us and can heartily reccommend her to all temperance unions. She is a pleasant speaker and brings the truth home to the hearts and consciences of her hearers. As a result of her labors here the union has gained seven new members and twenty-seven others have signed the pledge. God speed the day when the saloon curse is banished from our land.

The Skittish Doctor.

Doctor S—— was noted among his professional brethren for his power of concentration. When once he bent his mind to a problem he became totally oblivious of everything about him.

The doctor had a horse that was almost as famous as himself. Among her peculiarities was the habit of shying. She would not shy at things which most horses consider fit subjects for that sort of digression. She would pay no attention whatever to a newspaper blowing about the streets, but was mortally afraid of a covered wagon. At the sight of one of New Haven's suburban stages she would run over the curb-stone and threaten not only the doctor's life, but that of the chance passer Of this habit she could not be broken. It seemed as though she could smell a stage long before it came in sight, so that the doctor would go half a dozen blocks out of his way rather than meet one. Early one morning he received a telephone call to the effect that one of his patients had become alarmingly worse. Without waiting for his carriage, he started to walk, the distance being about a mile. His mind became at once absorbed in the case, but not so much so that he did not remember that the course of the Seymour stage lay right in his path. He looked at his watch and saw that he would be sure to meet it if he went the shortest way. He was in a hurry to get to his patient, but there was no help for it. He uttered a malediction over the circumstance, and turned off at the first corner. This obliged him to nearly double the distance, and the day was warm. He walked as he never walked before, and failed to recognize a couple of intimate friends whom he nearly ran over. It was not until he had spent two hours with his patient, and came out to look for his horse, that he began to realize that he had walked a mile out of his way so that he need not shy at the Seymour stage!—Frederick H. Cogswell, in the Editor's Drawer, of Harper's Magazine for April.

Cemetery Report.

Pursuant to notice previously given, the lot owners of the Evergreen cemetery held their annual meeting in Gandy's Hall, March 11, 1893. After the treasurer's and secretary's report were read, R McDougal, a lot owner, then read the following preamble and resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Whereas: The reports of the trustees of the Evergreen Cemetery show that the proper care and management of the cemetery can be sustained at the rates and for the amounts levied per lot, when all is promptly collected from all lot owners, therefore,

Resolved, by the lot owners present, that the thanks of all interested in said cemetery are due and tendered to the trustees and sexton for their efficient and very satisfactory management for the past year for the amount of work done in beautifying lots and walks. And

Resolved further, That to the end that this good work may be sustained and extended and that the burdens and expense of the same may be equally borne by all lot owners, we demand of the trustees a prompt collection of assessed dues from each and all lot owners alike.

The treasurer then made a motion which was seconded by the secretary, that the books be turned over to an auditing committee, which was sustained. The following is their report:

To the Trustees of Evergreen Cemetery, Auburn, Ind,

Your committee, appointed to audit books of secretary and treasurer of said cemetery board, having duly examined said books and papers, beg leave to submit the following report:

HONDURAS LETTER.

Port Burchard, Honduras,
March 12, '93.

Editor Courier:

I have been so very busy the past month that I have not found time to write you, but I feel it my duty to delay no longer to give to your readers some facts that may serve some of them a good purpose. I wish to describe to you some of the delights of this portion of America, for I think that the day is near at hand when thousands from your wintry cold and overcrowded land will flock to these shores of sunshine and showers, gay birds and flowers, to spend the winter. Already every vessel is bringing them in, they come from California to Main from Florida to North Dakota, all coming to escape the rigors of your northern clime, nearly all buy land here soon after coming, after seeing the advantages of our wonderous fertile soil and a climate not equaled anywhere in America, not even the boasted California can compare with the north coast of Honduras. Here we have the smallest range of temperature known in America, seldom rising above 85, seldom falling below 75. For the extremes since I first come here 15 months ago have been from 64 to 94, but those extremes were reached but once. The rainfall is a little greater for the year than in Indiana, but fails mostly after night, the days are almost invaribly clear and breezy. The trade winds blow almost constantly from the northeast. There is very little sickness of every kind except a very mild type of ague, no diptheria, no grip, no colds, no catarrah, scarcely ever rheumatism. Taking all in all I think this to be the healthiest spot I have yet found. The productions are innumerable, every thing that grows in the tropics will flourish here in its perfection. The soil is a rich clay loam. The face of the country level or slightly undulating with the most beautiful inland waterways to be found in the world, and our waters teem with myriads of the choicest fish, and our forests are filled with a great variety of game. That this will be a winter resort of great importance, I have not the slightest doubt.

Land here is rapidly rising in price, this coast is covered with concessions, it belonging to the Burchard Honduras Fruit Co., covering all lands to the mountains on the south. No land can be had here now for less than $10 per acre, the company will not sell at less than twentyfive dollars per acre after May 1st, so that all who contemplate buying land here should do so at once. They sell the land in forty-three acre tracts or eighty-six, paying one-fourth down and the balance in three equal yearly payments. If any readers of the Courier wish to invest without coming this spring they can do so by sending me the first payment, $107 and $10 for selecting and locating the land which I will attend to for any of our DeKalb county people. The secretary of the company resides here now, and will issue deeds as soon as I select the land. The desirable tracts on the water front will soon be all taken and those who wish good locations should act quickly, send draft on New York or Chicago to my address at Port Burchard Honduras, Central America via New Orleans. Any one wishing reference can inquire of my old neigbors. I will further say that every one contemplating moving here to clear and plant land should plan to do so about next November as the season for planting is about over for this year, and you can do nothing planting out of season. The first of January is a good time to begin work on land. One month could be utilized building a house. We have a new town here all Americans with a good two-story hotel and other buildings going up, several hundred laborers employed at this place alone, I shall return to Indiana to bring my family in August and shall come to Auburn to organize a Fruit Growing Co., for I know there is big money in it. Many of the plantations up the coast are paying 100 per cent on the money invested, and I believe with all Yankees we shall do better yet. Hoping to hear from many of you soon,

I remain yours fraternally,
Joseph A. Shade,
Port Burchard, C. A.

Obituary.

Dora Estella Hilkey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Hilkey, was born October 12th, 1873 and departed this life March 28th, 1893, aged 19 years, 5 months and 15 days.

Sister Dora was converted in a meeting held by Rev. Mr. Turring at the Hopewell church and united with the United Brethren church and lived a faithful christian until death. Sister Dora was most highly esteemed by all who knew her, and through her sickness she was fully resigned to the will of God, and said Lord thy will be done, and left a bright evidence of her future prospect. She chose Rev Crites to preach her funeral and where it should be preached and chose her pallbearers. She called the family and friends around her and talked with them and exhorted to live right and meet her in heaven and bade them all good bye and quietly departed.

It Should be in Every House.

J. B. Wilson, 371 Clay St., Sharpsburg, Pa., says he will not be without Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, that it cured his wife who was threatened with pneumonia after an attack of "LaGrippe," when various other remedies and several physicians had done her no good. Robert Barber, of Cooksport, Pa., claims Dr. King's New Discovery has done him more good than anything he ever used for lung trouble. Nothing like it. Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon gained twenty pounds. All this occurred after learned and well known physicians had failed. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. Louis D. Vandervere.

My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could find nothing that would afford her any relief, and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. Successful Always.

The New Great South American Kidney Cure.

The acknowledged superior cure and immediate relief for all derangements, painfulness and decay of the kidneys or bladder, Bright's disease, diabetes or any complaint that hurts or despoils either of these delicate organs. This new remedy has been thoroughly tested by learned physicians and found far superior to any medicine yet discovered for quickly relieving all weaknesses, aches, pains and distresses arising from disease of any part of the urinary passages. It is a great relief for the old, middle aged and children, male or female. It relieves at once retention and pain in passing water, and it is very effective in relieving prostatic troubles in the old, and for nightly incontinence of water in children, or others, caused by weakness of the bladder. It may be worth to many a hundred times its cost. This is a remedy of great value to ladies, because they are very liable to weakness and pain peculiar to their sex. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn, Ind. tf

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil Morrell spent several days in Ft. Wayne last week.

Mrs. Ed. Braun returned Tuesday evening from a visit of a few days in Ft. Wayne.

J. B. Hoover of Auburn was in town the first of the week visiting old friends and acquaintances.

Mrs. Lehman who has been spending the winter in Ft. Wayne returned to her home Monday evening.

Mrs. S. C. S. Winslow went to Auburn on business with the county treasurer Wednesday of this week.

Frank Goodwin moved his family Monday, into the building owned by Rev. Mr. Klotz, next and south of his residence.

J. E. Harmes moves his family to Kendallville this week. Henry Strow has bought his property on South Wayne st.

Mrs. Barker, who lived near Barker's Chapel, a few miles north of town, died Sunday morning. The funeral took place Tuesday morning Rev. Mr. Suman preaching the sermon.

Dell Locke has been very sick with typhoid fever His father S. J. Locke went to Decatur on account of this, and when he returned last week, reported his son, as some better.

Rev. W. R. Suman goes from here to Nappanee, Ind. Many of the members of the church and perhaps others who attended upon his preaching, are disappointed that conference did not return him here, for this year.

The new M. E. minister for this year Rev. U. S. A. Bridge preached to a full house. Those present were very favorably impressed and he is spoken of as a man of culture and polish. He is logical also interests the hearers and holds attention closely.

The new clothing store of which the proprietor is J. Oppenheim has been opened in fine style He advertises he will close out a stock of ladies' fine shoes at a bargain, from which we infer his attention will hereafter be confined to gentlemen's clothing.

Abraham McEntaffer, an aged man, who lived south of town a short distance, died Wednesday morning of last week and was buried the day following. He had been in poor health for a long time and sick for several months past. He had suffered much and no doubt death came as a relief.

Dr. Broughton is improving his property in various ways besides the addition he is building, and providing a new foundation. How natural it is, as the spring time comes, and nature puts on her fresh garb, for mankind to yield to the impulse to freshen up and brighten up not only the person, the outward self but the surroundings also.

Mrs. Gill's opening of millinery and other goods commanded a fair share of attention. She keeps quite an assortment of fancy goods, and material for fancy work. Mrs. Gill is evidently prospering in her business, and it would be strange if she did not, since all the Eves will have at least one new bonnet for each of the four seasons, and those dealing in them ought, it would seem to pile up the dollars.

Saturday an infant child of Calvin King, living on West North street, died.

Job. Warford's house got a severe scorching last Thursday morning. Insured.

Romain C. Campbell and wife, (nee Mattie Hamilton,) of Angola, are visiting their Butler friends.

The M. E. church is still closed for repairs It will be open for service next Sabbath and will be a thing of beauty.

Stephen K. Enzor an old time resident of Franklin township, died very suddenly lost Friday in the log house on his farm five miles north of Butler that he erected about forty years ago. The writer recalls sharing its hospitality with him thirty-four years ago. We believe he had passed his 80th year.

About a week ago Mrs Noble Cherry was stricken with paralysis and a day or two afterwards, Mr. Cherry was assisting her when he was also stricken by the same affliction. Mr. C. died Saturday and his funeral took place from his residence Monday afternoon, Mrs. C. is slowly improving and may get up again.

M. M. Brunstetter, S. J. Johnson, W. Richards and wife and J. A. Campbell attended the Odd Fellows district meeting at Ft. Wayne last Wednesday. Representatives from one hundred and seventeen lodges and from twelve states were in attendance. The number reached about fifteen hundred and was an enthusiastic gathering.

Butler has just passed through a carnival of death. Last Sabbath no less than five corpses were in different parts of town. The first death of the week was that of Oliver Devore, who was killed on the railroad at Columbia City and buried last Thursday from the church of God. The funeral was an impressing one, being conducted by the railroad men. His death was the fourth one in the family within five months. The next death was that of Mrs. Joseph Oberlin, who died very suddenly last Thursday morning. Her funeral took place last Sunday from the U. B. church, Rev. Mr. Tedro officiating followed to the cemetery by the largest procession of relatives that have ever followed any person in the history of our place.

On Friday the sad news reached us of the sudden and unexpected death of Mrs. Edith Husselman (nee Platter) sister of Mrs. A. G. Jones, who a month ago left her home and loving husband at Witchita, Kansas, for a visit to friends in her old home, and to visit Ann Arbor for medical treatment for some trouble that baffled the skill of western physicians. She seemed in a fair way for recovery, but a sudden change took place and before any of her friends could reach her she died among strangers far from her husband and son. Her remains were brought to Butler on Friday night. Her husband reached here Saturday night. Her funeral took place from the Christian church last Monday, and her remains were laid to rest by those of her father and mother in the beautiful cemetery at Newville.

Mrs. James M. Norford (Lizzie Lewis), died quite suddenly Saturday, after a brief illness. Her funeral took place from her late residence on West North street, Tuesday. Thus we have had one funeral on Sunday, two on Monday and one on Tuesday.

In Memoriam.

[Lines written in memory of Oliver Devore, who died April 4, 1893, aged 21 years, 11 months, and 20 days.]

Yes, he is gone. Life's flickering lamp
At last has ceased to burn.
The fearful sentence has been passed,
Dust must to dust return.

That form which yesterday we met
Arrayed in youth's bright bloom,
Now lies in death's sad, cold embrace,
Beneath the silent tomb,

His life was like a summer rose
That opened to the sky.
Ere half its beauty could enfold
'Twas doomed to fade and die.

But oh, it seemed as tho' that shock
Had broken that mother's heart,
When with a tearful eye she took
A last look ere they part.

We'll plant the myrtle. And the rose
Shall bloom to deck the spot.
Altho' long years shall pass away,
He will not be forgot.

Troy township, it will be noticed, is the only township having every school represented, while six of the townships have done nothing whatever.

The introduction of the Y. P. R. C. of Indiana is considered by educators to be the greatest educational step taken for many years. The object is to place the "general reading of the half-million children of the public schools of the state under competent guidance and control, and thus substitute for the trashy and often vicious reading matter, a grade of literature, sound in its context, chaste in language and imagery, and pure in its moral tone." It is not enough that our schools should make our pupils able to read simply, but they should make them disposed to do so. They should create in them a taste for good reading. This, however, can not be done unless pupils are furnished with proper and necessary books. Ex-Governor A. G. Porter, in speaking of the educational needs of the state, said, "A child that has a fondness for reading has no desire to be among vicious associates. I believe that the best preparation of a boy for a virtuous life is to interest him in good reading."

The work is now fairly introduced in the county and it is to be hoped that every teacher will feel his great responsibility in this work, and that next year every pupil both in the town and the country schools will read at least one or two of the books.

Great Promise for Wood Manufacturers.

It is only quite recently that manufacturers of furniture, wagons and wood work generally have become aware of the wonderful promise offered by North Galveston, Texas. Directly tributary to this young city, and not many miles distant, in eastern Texas, are over 46,000,000 acres of timber which comprises all of the high grade hard and soft woods.

Many people are coming in and are now doing business, but there is room for a great many more. With rail and water facilities for shipping, and markets in all directions, there should not be any hesitation about the outcome of manufacturing ventures. For further particulars call on or address Rickel & Sprott, the local agents. The address of the home office is North Galveston Association, Box 963, Minneapolis, Minn.

FINE PICKING OF NEWS

AS FOUND IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

St. Mary's, Ohio, Almost Wiped Out by Fire—Sensation at Lima—A Big Combine—Dreadful Mine Disaster—Terrible Storm in the Northwest.

A BIG FIRE.

A Block of Buildings at Lincoln Wiped Out.

Fire, with a high wind prevailing, swept away a quarter of a block in the northeast section of Lincoln, Neb. Seven buildings were burned, for the most part old frame structures of no great value, but two livery stables, included in the list, contained valuable stock, over fifty head of which perished. The spread of the flames was so rapid that work of rescue was impossible. Walter Bohanan had twenty horses burned and places his loss at $10,000. Walner Bros., of Peoria, Ill., had just shipped thirty-eight head of blooded Holstein cattle for auction sale and all perished. Many of the finest steppers in the city were boarded in the barns and hardly one escaped. Including Bohanan's, the total loss is hardly less than $25,000 with a total insurance of less than $3,000. Two hotels adjoining on the northwest were saved with difficulty. The fire is believed to be the work of incendiaries, but no arrests have yet been made.

STORM SWEPT.

Terrible Cyclone in the Northwest.

Chicago special: Severe storms swept over the States of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, and Indiana, doing great damage, the full extent of which cannot be learned, as the telegraph wires have been prostrated in many localities.

A cloud burst at Ottumwa, Iowa, caused great damage to property. At Boston and Columbia, Ind., floods destroyed much property, many head of cattle were killed, and railroads are badly washed out. A cloud burst flooded the town of Centralia, Ill., and in some parts of the city the water stands nine feet deep.

At Springfield, Ill, the rainfall was so heavy that street-car traffic was suspended. Passengers on incoming trains report the entire country between Springfield and St. Louis under water.

Three-fourths of the houses at Page City, Mo., are destroyed.

Fire at St. Mary's, Ohio.

A special from St. Mary's, Ohio, dated the 13th inst., says that between 11 and 12 o'clock to-night every business block between the city buildings and the Fountain Hotel were entirely destroyed by fire, and unless immediate relief is received the entire Fountain square will be in ashes. The following merchants lose their entire stock: McKee & Marvelus, hardware; W. M. Hormet, furniture; J. E. Hesser, boots and shoes; Charles Schweisbelma, saloon; John Stuart, saloon; D. E. Ager, photographer; D. Evere, undertaker. Help has been telegraphed for, and the Lima fire department is expected. The fire started in the second story of Stuart's saloon. The loss will be in the neighborhood of $500,000.

Rumors of Trouble.

Toledo special: The seven engineers and firemen on the Lake Shore Railroad, who severed their connection with the road during the recent Ann Arbor strike in refusing to handle the boycotted freight, will wait upon General Superintendent Canniff and ask to be reinstated. Should their reinstatement be refused, it is rumored that a general strike on the Lake Shore will result.

Medals of Honor.

The medals presented by the King of Sweden to the officers and men of the United States cruiser Baltimore, on the occasion of the transportation of the remains of Captain Errieson to his native country, have been received by Chief Clerk Hogg of the Navy Department, and will be forwarded to the officers and men who are to have them.

A Big Combine.

The scheme of New York capitalists to secure all the rolling mills and furnaces in the Mahoning Valley for $7,000,000, which has been in the hands of John A. Logan, jr., for some time, was perfected in New York recently. The purchasers will organize a company and operate all the plants under one management.

Sensation at Lima.

Prof. Edward Frey, a prominent musician of Lima, Ohio, was shot and fatally wounded by his wife the other night. Early in the evening Frey went home and gave his wife a terrible beating and left. Returning in a short time he renewed his assault upon her, whereupon she shot him, inflicting a fatal wound.

Burned to Death in a Lockup.

Two men, Lee Newell and Leon Styles, were burned to death in the calaboose, at Stanberry, Mo. They had been arrested for drunkenness late in the evening, and it is supposed they fired the building in order to attract attention and gain their liberty, but relief came too late.

Dreadful Mine Disaster.

London special: An explosion in the Pont-Y-Pridd coal mine imprisoned scores of miners, and their families and friends present a pitiable scene at the mouth of the shaft. The mine is burning and rescue is impossible. Four bodies have been pulled out.

Treasurer of the United States.

Daniel N. Morgan of Connecticut, has been appointed Treasurer of the United States, vice Enos H. Nebecker, resigned.

Will Ask to Be Reinstated.

Toledo special: The local division of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will make a formal demand or request on the Lake Shore Company for the reinstatement of its engineers who left its service on the night of March 17, because they would not handle Ann Arbor freight cars. This statement was made recently by Chairman J. W. Watson of the Lake Shore Grievance Committee of the Brotherhood. He said that the committee would make the request of General Superintendent Caniff next week. He thought that the company would not hesitate to grant the request as the men had only done what they were in duty bound to do by the brotherhood. It is a case that the brotherhood has never met with before and they will proceed with considerable caution in making the request.

IT'S ALL OVER.

The Strike at Chicago Was of Short Duration.

Chicago special: The strike inaugurated at the World's Fair grounds was amicably settled at a meeting of the Council of Administration with the Executive Committee of the Building Trades Council. The whole trouble is settled as far as the exposition company is concerned, but there are however, several contractors on the grounds who must sign the agreement before their men will return to work. There are 2,000 men who will not return to work on this account. A committee is endeavoring to get these contractors to sign the agreement, which will put these men at work and enable the great enterprise to be pushed to an early completion.

The net result of the strike was the loss of one day's work to the men, the securing of free tickets for walking delegates and twenty-four hours' loss of time in completing the fair at a time when every minute was precious.

It was virtually a back down on the part of the labor leaders, who were compelled to admit that the question of employing non-union men was settled finally two years ago.

Four thousand five hundred workmen obeyed the orders of the building trades council to strike, and about 1,000 ignored the orders.

A FIENDISH ACT.

An Attempt to Blow Up the Boilers of a Pittsburgh Manufactory.

An attempt was made to blow up the Pickling establishment of Lutz Brothers at the corner of Main and Cherry streets, Allegheny, Pa. To the timely discovery and carefulness of Engineer Fred Mohr, is attributed an escape, almost miraculous, from the destruction of the works in which over 100 people are employed. During the night previous, some one had entered the boiler room, and having closed the lower valve of the glass water indicator, to prevent its escape, opened the escape valve under the boiler, allowing the water to escape. When the engineer fired up in the morning the water glass showed a full boiler as he had left in the evening. The boiler heated so rapidly that the engineer became suspicious. He tried the water guages and was almost paralyzed with fright. The fire was drawn and an examination showed the boiler to be dry. Detectives have been put to work and a rigid examination is in progress. The firm cannot understand the motive for such an outrage. If the fiend is discovered it will likely go hard with him.

A Violent Storm Sweeps Over the Rocky Mountain Region.

Denver special: The whole Rocky Mountain region has been treated to a wind storm of unusual severity. The area of low pressure extended from Montana southward and the storm was cyclonic in its nature. The wind blew thirty-five miles an hour in Denver, while at Salt Lake, Utah, and Grand Junction, Colorado, it blew sixty miles an hour. The wind was very high at Aspen and Leadville, where great damage is reported. In this city telegraph and telephone lines are down, while chimneys and brick cornices were blown over frequently. A mass of brick from McGovern's undertaking establishment fell on Mrs. Bertha McFarland, aged 19, injuring her so severely that she died two hours later. At Florence, Col. many oil derricks are blown down while many other places report great financial loss. A number of persons were injured.

Burned to Death.

The residence of George H. Talcott of Talcottville, Lewis County, New York, was supposedly struck by lightning and burned to the ground. The neighbors did not know that it had been burned until after daylight next morning, when the discovery was made that Mr. Talcott and his mother, a lady over 70 years of age, had been burned in the house, their charred and blackened corpses being found in the ruins. The theory that the house was struck by lightning is purely guess-work, and a Coroner has been summoned to make all possible investigation, as some hold that Mr. Talcott and his mother might have been robbed and murdered and the house set on fire to hide the crime.

Strike on the Santa Fe.

Topeka (Kan.) special: The 1,100 machinists, boiler-makers, blacksmiths, and their helpers employed in the shops of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad at this place, quit work, and, acting with their fellow-workmen in the same departments along the line of the entire system, are on a strike for better wages and other demands. This demand of the men is that the pay shall be increased 25 cents per day; that inexperienced men who get less than the regular rates shall not be required to do the work of skilled men, and that when the company deems it necessary to reduce expenses gangs of men be not discharged or laid off, but that the hours be reduced.

Old Liberty Bell.

The arrangements for the transportation of the old Liberty Bell from Philadelphia to Chicago are almost completed. The special train bearing the relic will leave Philadelphia on the 25th instant, and will arrive in Chicago on the 29th, four days being consumed in the journey. The bell will be escorted by a party including Mayor Edwin S. Stewart and other city officials and several invited guests. The train will consist of several Pullman sleepers, a dining car and the special car designed for the bell. The journey will be made over a circuitous route to enable the inhabitants of Northwestern Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to see the historic relic.

A Divorced Man Takes His Own Life.

Tekonsha (Mich.) special: William Watson and his wife were divorced in 1886, and soon afterwards the ex-wife married Randoyoe Shedd. Watson went to Kansas but afterwards returned and was here when Shedd and his wife were found dead. Mrs. Shedd's throat had been cut with a butcher knife and her head split with an axe. Mr. Shedd was found with his throat cut from ear to ear. It has always been supposed that Shedd murdered his wife and then committed suicide. Something had preyed on Watson's mind and caused him to seek death in a similar manner. The other night he cut his throat and died.

Unconstitutional.

Judge Taylor of the Indiana Superior Court, declared unconstitutional the law under which boards of children's guardians are organized in all the large cities of Indiana. These boards were empowered to seize and care for all children of disolute and vicious parents and those whose surroundings were not what they should be. Judge Taylor declared the law to be one in constraint of human liberty and contrary to the inalienable rights of the individual rights of the individual.

Louisiana Clubs Must Pay a Liquor License.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana decided the case of the State against the Boston and Pickwick clubs in favor of the State. Nearly all the clubs in the State run private bars, and the suit was to compel them to pay the regular license of $1,000 a year. The clubs' defense was that it bought and sold liquor to members at cost. Unless the bars are closed, the State will derive a revenue of $100,000 a year from this source.

Terrible Accident at Joliet.

Joliet (Ill.) special: Nine men employed on the drainage canal were killed outright and ten others received injuries more or less severe, by the falling of a Cantilevre machine, used in the work on the engine house, in which the men were gathered for protection from the storm which awed this section of the State. The high Cantilevre on wheels, weighing 280 tons, was on the track when the storm set in. Before it could be changed the wind swept it down the track and it fell on top of the engine house, where the men had gathered to get out of the storm and nine of them were killed outright and ten others wounded, with chances of recovery doubtful. Samuel Corms of Lockport, overseer of the gang, was among those killed. The others were Italians and negroes, who have been working on the drainage canal for a couple of months.

World's Fair Ceremonies.

The plan to hold the opening ceremonies of the World's Columbian Exposition in Choral hall, which accomodates less than 3,000 persons, is meeting with a good deal of opposition and the prospects are that the exercises will take place in the open air. The National Board of Control took up the subject, and, after a long discussion, Director General Davis, President Palmer, and Secretary Dickinson were authorized to select a suitable place in the park for holding the ceremonies. This is regarded as a notice to the local officials that the ceremony shall be a public affair.

Indiana G. A. R.

The Indiana State Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in session at Evansville elected the following officers: James Johnson, commander; C. J. Murphy of Evansville, Senior Vice Commander; W. F. Medsker of Cambridge City, Junior Vice Commander; John G. Hitt of Greensburg, Medical Director; O. S. Reed of Noblesville, Chaplain; Benjamin Starr of Richmond, L. A. Foote of Crawfordsville, J. W. Senior of Madison, H. H. Ragan of Lowell, and Ed. C. Booze of Indianapolis, Council of Administration. The next encampment will be held at Lafayette.

Three Fireman Fatally Hurt.

The large stables of the Northern Indiana Horse Breeders' Association, located in Warsaw, Ind., were destroyed by fire. Twenty-three valuable horses perished in the flames among them several stallions recently imported from England and two trotting horses, with records of 2:10¼ and 2-12. This was one of the largest establishments of the kind in the State. The loss is $200,000 partly insured. Perry Brown, chief of the fire department, was fatally injured by a falling wall. Two other firemen were also badly injured.

Fifty-Four Drowned.

Vienna special: A dispatch from Constantinople says that the cause of the loss of the Sultan's palace steamer by which a large number of lives were lost, was the result of the palace steamer being run into and sunk by the admirality steamer Teschsvie. The number drowned was fifty-four and most of them were servants. The accident is attributed to a northerly gale which prevailed. An inquiry has been ordered as to the cause of the accident.

Will Burn Him at the Stake.

A colored man went to the house of Fred Braun at Dennison, Texas, and seized Miss Leona Redding, a pretty 16-year-old girl. He bound and gagged her and carried her to a vacant house two blocks away, where he kept her for three hours, assaulting her repeatedly. The girl did not regain consciousness for many hours. She may die. Officers and citizens are scouring the town for the fiend. Threats are made to burn him at the stake.

The French Ambassador.

M. Patenotre, the French Minister to the United States, has received the credentials promoting him to grade of ambassador, and raising the legation to the rank of an embassy in accordance with the decree of President Carnot of March 25. A copy of these credentials have been furnished to Secretary Gresham. The department has also been informed that a bill has passed the French assembly providing for the increased expenditures attending the change.

Are all Homeless.

Half a dozen families were rendered homeless by the destruction by fire, at tenement houses 84, 86, and 88 Ontario street, Chicago. Many of the occupants of the houses were rescued by the firemen with great difficulty. Capt. Green was overcome by smoke and died soon after being taken to Alexian Brothers' hospital. Two firemen sustained severe bruises by falling from a roof. The property loss will not exceed $10,000.

Killed by a Burglar.

Mr. John Dollard, a member of the Norfolk, Va., City Council and a wealthy merchant, was shot in the throat by a burglar who was attempting to enter the rear door of his store. He died within ten minutes. The man escaped, pursued by a policeman and citizens, who fired at him five times without effect. He returned the fire with great deliberation.

SUNSHINE A BIG BOON.

HELPS WORK AT THE WORLD'S FAIR GREATLY.

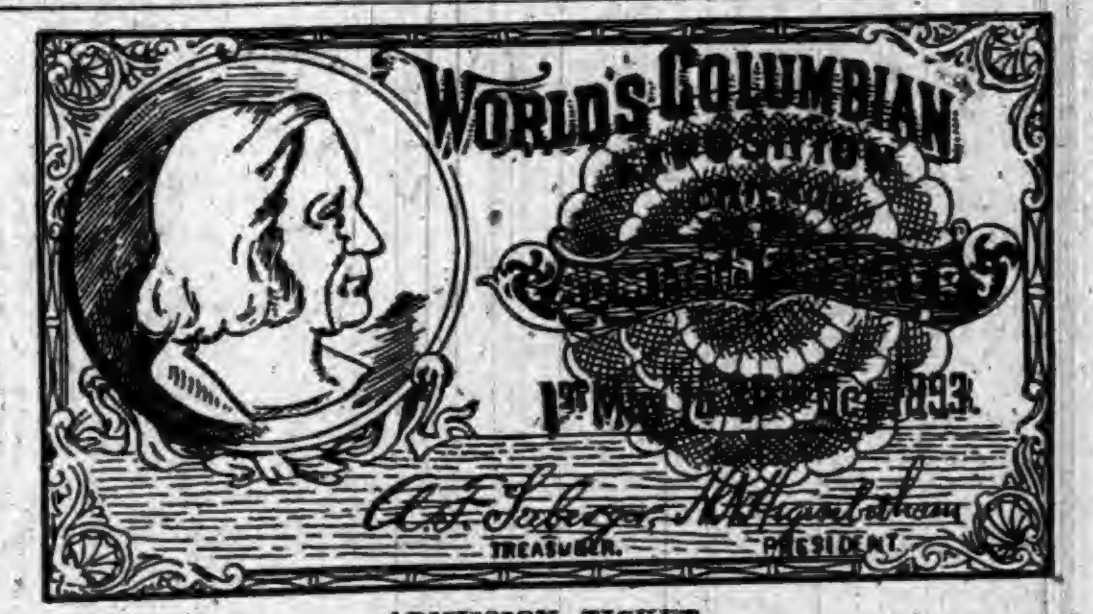
Clear Weather Has Enabled a Largely Increased Force of Men to Prepare Roadways and Hurry the Buildings Along to Completion.

Notes of the Big Show.

Chicago correspondence:

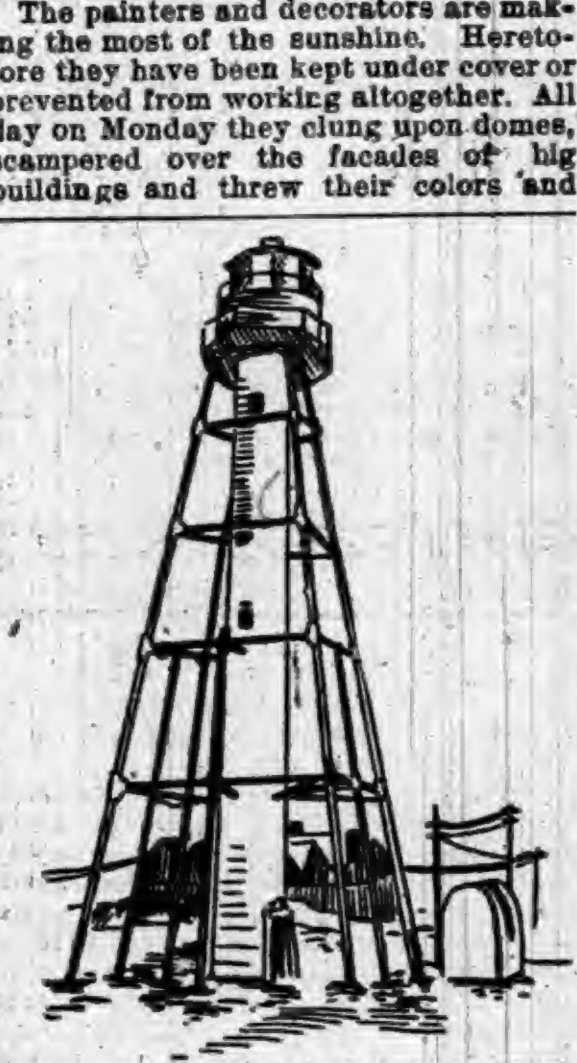
A week of sunshine and a mud-drying wind from the north has put fresh energy into thousands of men who are getting the Fair in readiness for the opening day. An immense amount of progress was made during a fortnight of snow, rain and slush, but the things accomplished since the clouds rolled away go a long way toward justifying the calm, confident statement of Director General Davis and his department chiefs that with good weather the Exposition will be practically finished when the big engine begins to throb on May 1.

With the appearance of the sun orders were issued to press work all along the line, and by noon 10,000 men were toiling in the grounds. The efforts of the workmen were not concentrated on any one building or along the roadways, which have been in an execrable condition ever since the snow disappeared. Every contractor felt the prod from the Administration Building. Not one of them was spared. In nearly every department the force of men was increased, and in some instances doubled and trebled.



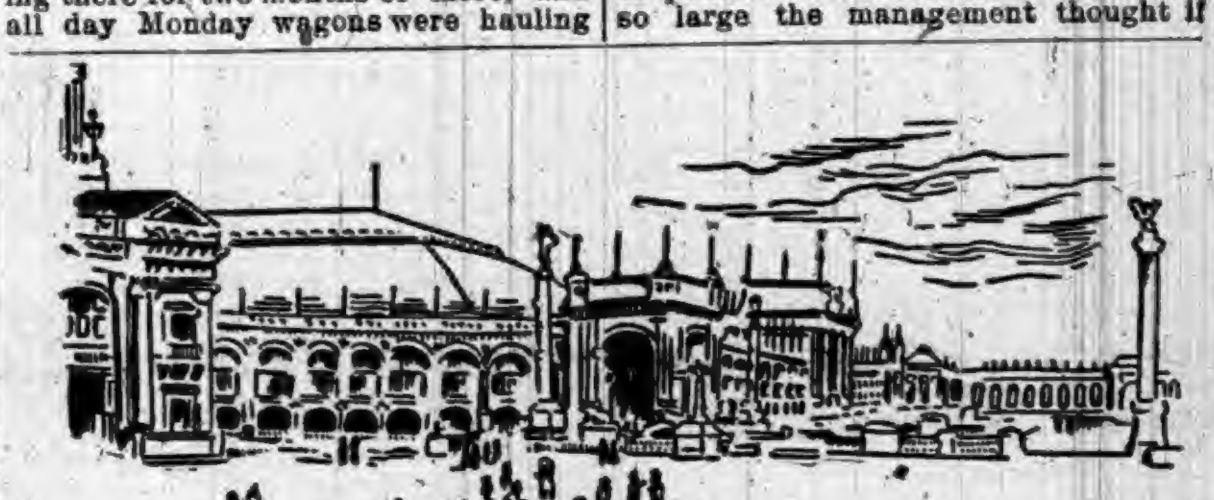
ADMISSION TICKET.

The painters and decorators are making the most of the sunshine. Heretofore they have been kept under cover or prevented from working altogether. All day on Monday they clung upon domes, scampered over the facades of big buildings and threw their colors and tints upon arches and pillars. The planked roads which were laid when the mud defied the movement of building material are now being ripped up and an extra force of workmen is grading and scraping the avenues about the buildings. South of machinery hall another force is making roads with the assistance of steam crushers.



LIGHTHOUSE NEAR LIFE-SAVING STATION.

Off in one corner of the grounds a half hundred men are burning the debris of the Fair. Fires have been burning there for two months or more, and all day Monday wagons were hauling refuse to the flames. The fuel comes from all parts of the grounds. It comes from Germany with its blue painted crates, from Alaska with the heavy cases plastered with "old glory" labels and from all the Government and State buildings where workmen have leveled their scaffolding with the ground. Over at agricultural hall a hundred men are at work raising and placing in position the animal groups wrought in staff. The work of construction and landscape gardening must soon be finished, and every effort toward this end is being put forth.



LOOKING EAST FROM THE ADMINISTRATION BUILDING.

Just Half a Dollar.

It costs just half a dollar now to get into the grounds. The original intention to close the gates March 15 in order that work might not be hindered by visitors was reconsidered because the revenue was becoming quite an item in replenishing Treasurer Seeberger's rather slim balance. To increase the revenue without greatly increasing the number of visitors it was suggested that the entrance fee be increased to 50 cents. Somebody made the suggestion that $1 admission be charged, but the exhibition authorities thought such a tax would be prohibitive. At a meeting of the board of admissions a resolution was unanimously adopted fixing the price of admission at 50 cents, beginning April 1. The first Sunday following this decision 8,000 admission tickets were sold, and the number who seek to gain entrance increases daily.

American Bible Society Exhibit.

The American Bible Society has prepared a curious exhibit for the fair. It will show a number of historic bibles, plates from which the largest editions of bibles ever struck were printed, and long rows of bibles in foreign tongues. The latter are designed to give some idea of the stupendous difficulties the society has overcome in translating the scriptures into languages that are seldom mastered by English-speaking people. In a general way the purpose of the society is to show what it has done since it was organized seventy-six years ago. Copies of each of the annual reports and bound files of the Bible Society Record will occupy shelves in one of the eight cases in which the exhibit will be contained. In the same case will appear specimens of the electrotype plates used in printing the Scriptures. Two of these plates are especially noteworthy, one of them having been employed in the set used in printing 980,000 copies of the 5-cent edition of the New Testament, a total edition numbering 3,300,000 having been issued since 1878. The other plate is one of those used in supplying 876,000 copies of the 2,054,000 20-cent Bibles which have come from the society's presses in the same period. The World's Fair model Sunday-school building, which is to be erected on Stony Island avenue, opposite the 47th street entrance of Jackson Park, seems to be an assured fact. Nearly $20,000 out of the $30,000 needed to begin the work of construction has been subscribed.

Since the first admission tickets to the World's Fair have been placed on sale in Chicago, the managers have been besieged with applications for the tickets from persons in all parts of the country as well as Europe, who desire them not so much for actual use as for souvenirs, and it is to meet this demand that the managers decided to begin the sale thus early. They are season tickets, good for admission to the Fair at any time between May 1 and Oct. 30. The first issue is six millions, in four different designs. They have been made by the American Bank Note Company, with special reference to the prevention of counterfeiting. White paper of special manufacture is used for the tickets. In general texture it resembles the paper on which national bank notes are printed. Instead of the silk cords in the bank-note paper there are small particles of different colored linen paper, which, being cut up very fine, were dropped into the pulp while it was being run through the rollers in course of manufacture, and in this way became a part of the sheet itself.

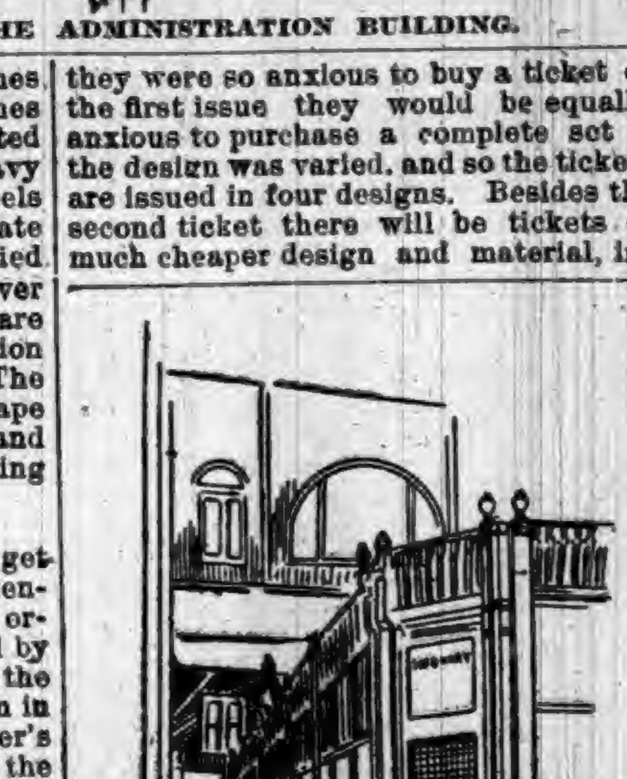
The process by which this paper is manufactured is entirely new and patented. In this way alone it is thought the possibility of successful counterfeiting of the tickets has been removed.

In general design the tickets resemble somewhat the old 25-cent piece of fractional currency. They measure 3 3-5 inches in length by 2¼ inches in width.

On the face of the tickets appears, in scroll work at the top, "World's Columbian Exposition." Below is the line "Admit the bearer," and still lower are the dates for which the tickets are good. In the left hand end is the engraving of the head of either Columbus, Lincoln, Washington, or an Indian chief in full war dress.

At the bottom of the tickets is what seems at first glance a fine lined border three-quarters of an inch wide. It is really the words, "World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago," in very small letters. There are seventeen separate lines of lettering in the narrow border. On this border are the engraved signatures of A. F. Seeberger, Treasurer, and H. W. Higinbotham, President. Through the signatures of the officers is a punched perforation and in the middle of the ticket is a colored scroll work design a little larger than a silver quarter, the color varying on the different designs and being either purple, pink, green, or blue. The back of the ticket is what seems to be scroll work, but which is fine lettering, the words "Columbian Exposition" and "Chicago, 1893," appearing. In a little darker shade of the same color of the background is "Good for one admission at pay gates."

The demand from persons who wanted to purchase tickets as souvenirs was so large the management thought if they were so anxious to buy a ticket of the first issue they would be equally anxious to purchase a complete set if the design was varied, and so the tickets are issued in four designs. Besides the second ticket there will be tickets of much cheaper design and material, intended for sale only at the gates to visitors going right into the exposition.



POSTOFFICE IN THE GOVERNMENT BUILDING.

College Hill Sanitarium Burned.

A careless tinner upon the roof of the College Hill Sanitarium at Cincinnati, Ohio, caused a loss of from $100,000 to $150,000 of property and imperiled the lives of 200 patients. A hot soldering iron was permitted to ignite the roof and the flames quickly got beyond the control of the waterworks of the institution, as well as that of the village of College Hill. The superintendent, Dr. O. Everetts, directed the attendants to give every effort to the task of safely removing the sick, the insane, and the ailing patients. In this they were faithfully assisted by the villagers, who flocked to the place. The scenes within the great structure, four stories in height and filled with 200 patients, were exciting. The insane shrieked and tore their clothing, the less unfortunate were distracted by fear, and begged to be helped away from the flames.

LUNA'S DESTRUCTION:

An Occurrence of the Future Written for This Paper.

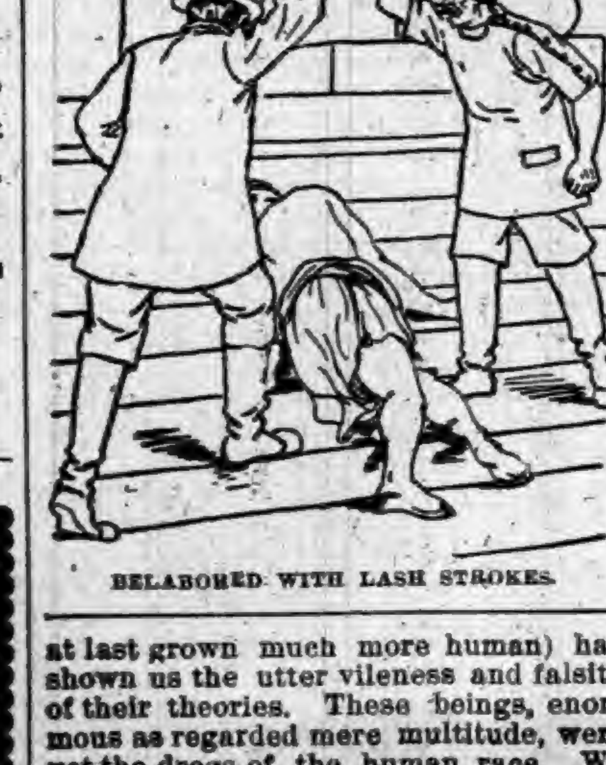
BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

CHAPTER I.

You ask me, my dear nephew, to narrate the story of that fateful and ghastly catastrophe which brought us, in the year 4739, A. D., so peculiar and wonderful a deliverance. I will heed your request, old and feeble man that I am, to the fullest of my powers. Well, then, let me begin at the autumn of the year 4738. At this time, as the history of your land will readily tell you, a last terrible political change had possessed the entire earth. Here in America anarchy had for nearly three centuries rioted. Nothing but the splendid material advantages of the country had saved it from the most piteous bankruptcy and degradation. The whole radical movement, as you doubtless know, began with a certain systen of mild and rather sane socialism. But society was not prepared for even these comparatively gentle measures. The single tax idea might have succeeded if the executive, both in the States and at the general capital, had not proved fatally corrupt. Naturally good and honest citizens revolted against the gross maladministration of affairs, and finally came that short but bloody civil war in which honor and decency were defeated. Afterward almost utter lawlessness reigned. I am thankful, notwithstanding all the miseries and misfortunes it has been my lot to witness during my own lifetime, that I did not exist during those wild and hideous times. License replaced liberty; bands of insolent robbers ruled in all public places; the family was travestied in its most sacred domestic relations by the sanction of a new libidinous marriage code.

Meanwhile, through successive decades, a spirit of stern revolt had been slowly gaining strength. By this time the electric steamships easily accomplished trips across the ocean in six and occasionally in four hours. Europe has thus become close to our very doors, and everything which happened there was to us very much as the occurrences in Connecticut were known in Massachusetts during previous times. Our house, my dear nephew, had inherited traditions of conservatism through many generations. We were called aristocrats by our enemies, but we belonged, as you are aware, to the large yet powerless body classed politically as Cautionists. Who first coined the name I cannot tell you; it had become applied, however to a great throng of dissenters in Europe, in Asia, and in many parts of Africa. My father, my uncles, and numerous other kindred besides, were in constant communication with foreign friends and sympathizers. The one universal language which for 300 years past had replaced all those various and inconveniencing tongues previously spoken on earth, of course rendered such intercourse in every way facile. At this time Europe and Asia had been, as one might say, overswept by a very deluge of blood. Not a trace of the great European dynasties now survived. The anarchists (or indomitables, as they had grown everywhere to be called) had set a price upon the heads of all who bore within their veins the least drop of royal blood. I think it highly probable that by the year 4728 not a single person lived on our planet who could claim the remotest relationship to the Guelphs, Hapsburgs, Hohenzollerns, or any of those races which had once so towered in sovereignty above their kind. At first the slaughter of royalty had been wholesale and brutal. History will tell you how the man who insisted on calling himself Victorian XII., King of England and Emperor of India, had been hanged in London before a shrieking and sneering mob of Indomitables; how Rudolph XVIII., self-styled Emperor of Austria, had, with his entire family and a body of devoted retainers, first received the most hideous indignities in a square of Vienna, and then been literally tortured to death; how a certain individual, who had persisted in proclaiming his right to the German throne under the title of Friederich Wilhelm XIV., had been first stripped naked before furious thousands in Berlin, and then belabored with merciless lash strokes until he sank dead at the very portals of what was once his ancestors' imperial palace. These and many other frightful tragedies, my dear nephew, must surely have formed a part of your education. And I need not tell you that we Cautionists had always deplored them, while at the same time realizing the folly of all kingly claims and the futility of seeking to base government on anything which dealt with ancient "divine rights" of rulership.

We called ourselves, and indeed we were, philanthropists of the truest and purest type. The indomitables (though at last grown much more human) had shown us the utter vileness and falsity of their theories. These beings, enormous as regarded mere multitude, were yet the dregs of the human race. We pitied them; we comprehended how they were the inevitable result of those tyrannies and social bigotries which for ages had disgraced civilization. And yet we perceived but too clearly that the time was fast approaching when either they or we must perish. In old days men fought and died for love of country. Our impulse was so much larger than one of mere patriotism that it dwarfed such an aim into relative pettiness. We had reached that loftier plane of loving which surveys, philosophizes, attains and hence no longer foolishly struggles. Our lives were clean and chaste, our daily habits purity itself, our thoughts exalted, sincere, mutually aidful. And moreover, my boy, we had struck that key-note of all harmonious existence which to you, at this later and triumphant hour of human advancement, appears a process hardly less easy than breathing itself. I mean, simply, that we have learned to love one another. In a way we even loved our mighty arch-foe, the Indomitables. What our forefathers had found so difficult was rendered easy to us by a wholly natural process of human evolution. It was the spiritualization of our minds, our temperaments. It had come, by slow yet certain degrees, broadening outward from those centers which were once deemed incapable of such artistic expansion. What our predecessors, in lofty and prophetic moods, had spoken of as the higher life, we had reached with no apparent effort. All the future potentialities of peace and happiness were plain to us as the sun and stars. We realized ourselves to be the final fruit and flower of mortal development. Other physical development we clearly foresaw, but we felt that an ideal of sweet and holy meaning, long descried from afar, steadily gaining strength and splendor, had now burst upon us at last, in the largeness of its benediction and salvation.



BELABORED WITH LASH STROKES.

But, like all dawns, this one had first smitten the mountain peaks, leaving the valleys in the shade. The Indomitables were in that shade. We perceived the possibility of our own destruction at the hands of these less fortunate beings, who in every country of the globe far outnumbered us. To annihilate them was against our will, and yet we felt that not to make the attempt would be doubtless to delay thousands of years the coming of happiness on earth and the reign there of wisdom and peace.

We were stronger than the Indomitables in everything but numbers. For years past we had been slowly gaining force through organization, fraternization, and all methods by which a great sect of believers, with the certainty of right on their side, may prepare for the victory or defeat of a last epical and prodigious contest. A system of intercommunication had become established between us in all parts of the world; at almost an hour's notice we could flash to Australia, New Zealand, or Patagonia, by means of submarine cable, intelligence in cipher which would cause those of our order dwelling there to send us naval and other aid. For in many a secret nook of the coast, unknown to the anarchical governments, huge ships had long ago been prepared and a positive clandestine military network may be said to have stretched from Sweden to the Cape of Hope, from the Canadas to Terra del Fuego. Of course I do not wish to have you suppose, dear nephew, that the Indomitables were ignorant of these far-reaching and subtle preparations. They decidedly were not, but, altogether masters of the situation in every political sense, they nevertheless had lapsed into that most piteous form of weakness which is born of internal corruption. Teeming with dishonesty, they could not trust one another as individuals, and as different communities they were divided by sharp lines of feud. I know of nothing more sad and odious than their misrule and internecine turmoil. They had completely proved the total fallacy of all "equal rights" principles when applied to bodies in which individualism held potent sway and true philanthropy was at a zero mark. The worst form of monarchies, like ambition, envy, greed of gain, arrogance, cold-blooded selfishness, tramping rough-shod on the feeble, hypocrisy, falsehood, audacious theft, conscienceless nepotism, wholesale slander—these raged far more hotly among the rabbles, who now called themselves law and order, than they had ever approximated toward raging when anarchy, in all its crude and flaring usurpature, had not flooded the world. Ages previously a certain French revolution had foretokened just the horrid effects from which we of a sounder and more enlightened condition were suffering then. But then there had come the reaction of tyranny; now a reaction was threatened, but it did not in the least partake of social vengeance or even revolt. As I have said, we were silently yet potently massing, without a shadow of rancor or passion. The Indomitables must go, or we must go. The globe must either be given up to wild sin and misery (for every year each increased, one being a consequence of the other), or it must, by a tremendous pulse of righteous onslaught on our part, become the habitation of humanitarianism, content and philosophic virtue.

CHAPTER II.

All through these latter years we Cautionists had openly concerned ourselves with the pursuits of learning, knowledge and scientific search. Scarcely was there a single great academy, throughout the length and breadth of the earth, which was not nourished and administered by our agency. Of what we had already accomplished I need not speak. Telescopes of a superb power had been invented by us, and through their means and those of the new interplanetary magnetic currents with which you, dear nephew, are now so wholly familiar, we had obtained distinct tidings from two planets of our solar system, Mars and Venus. But apart from a somewhat vague interchange of signals we were then, as now, in ignorance of the real quality of the races on these neighbor worlds. Still, the advance had been immense. From the moon, our comparatively near stellar companion, we had succeeded in securing no sign of life. This lack of success corroborated previous conclusions, namely, that the moon was a frozen orb, without atmosphere, a colossal cinder, so to speak, revolving round a world which, because of its much smaller size, it had long ago preceded in the cooling off process, and in those evolutional changes of lower vegetable and animal life to higher, which every orb of the billions crowding space doubtless has been fated to undergo. Our greatly improved telescopes had shown us the topography of the moon as never before. Her icy peaks and barren vales were as familiar to our astronomers as to ordinary tourists are the slopes of the Alleghenies or Catskills. No longer had science the faintest doubt on the subject of her complete present sterility. If the question of her duration ever presented itself, this, it was taken for granted, would depend on the general stability of earth and the solar system.

And yet, suddenly, to the surprise of millions, the moon had of late revealed some extraordinary novelties of phase. Not long ago, while observed here in America during her second quarter, the entire hollow of her curve had become flooded with a misty golden fire, which had faded, at length leaving a spirit of flame plainly visible. The sight was horrifying to many of the Indomitables, for ignorance, as you know, too often consorts with cowardice. As fear, too, is at the root of so much religion, in a few days various new sects were formed that spent their time in praying for deliverance from the horror of some calamity—dreaded yet unknown. We Cautionists, however, were for the most part tranquillity itself. Your own family, my dear boy, has been noted, through several generations, for their scholarship in different directions. Geology has always been a study in which I excelled; your father was devoted to astronomy, and spent hours raking the heavens at night with a telescope of great strength. From him I learned that these lunar phenomena were most probably the harbingers of the moon's final and utter extinction.

"But I thought," was my reply to him, "that she had not had, for thousands of years, a single trace of life left."

"No visible trace," he answered. "But evidently, hidden deep down within the bowels of her sphere, have lain sluggish yet savage fires. There is no doubt at all that from the cold craters of several volcanoes live flames have been gushing of late. As for those weird, yellow lights which have either circled the moon when at her full or brimmed the interval between her two cups when she has been yet an immature growth in our heavens—these, I should say, are certainly caused by fiery issues of a like sort from craters on her other side, that side which the eye of man has never beheld."

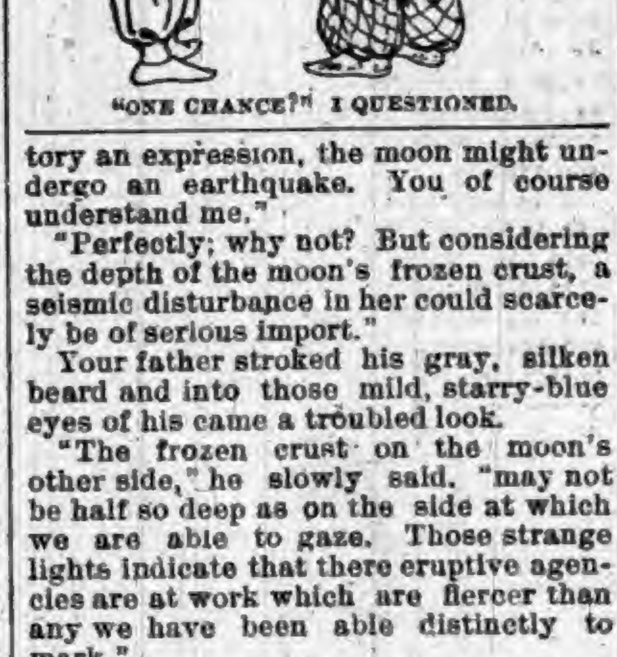
"Then you think," I said to your father, "that these outbursts are merely the last throes of dying life in the orb, and that no harmful consequence to earth may possibly come from them?"

Your father's grave, sweet face clouded a little.

"There is one chance," he replied, "and it might be fraught with fearful danger."

"One chance?" I questioned eagerly. "You mean——"

"That imprisoned gases within the moon may lie at the core of this agitation. If I can use so queerly contradictory an expression, the moon might undergo an earthquake. You of course understand me."



"ONE CHANCE?" I QUESTIONED.

"Perfectly; why not? But considering the depth of the moon's frozen crust, a seismic disturbance in her could scarcely be of serious import."

Your father stroked his gray, silken beard and into those mild, starry-blue eyes of his came a troubled look.

"The frozen crust on the moon's other side," he slowly said, "may not be half so deep as on the side at which we are able to gaze. Those strange lights indicate that there eruptive agencies are at work which are fiercer than any we have been able distinctly to mark."

"And you then apprehend——" I asked, suddenly pausing, and scarcely unaware just why I had either begun my query or thus abruptly broken it off.

"Apprehend?" your father repeated, with a faint yet meaning smile. For a time he was silent, even broodingly so, and then he again began to speak, in his rich even tones, and with a touch of unwonted fervor.

"It has long been my theory," he said, "that nearly all the worlds in space have a moment at which they definitely perish. The great astronomer, Ardiland, does not agree with me on this point, and yet he admits the probabilities of my hypothesis. In any large orb like the moon, these cooling-off processes have been, of necessity, irregular. All the surface of the planet is not equally dense or obdurate. Meanwhile the gases engendered by ages of slow, sullen, and repressed combustion have been insisting on some sort of outlet. For certainly on a bulk so volcanic as that of the moon they surely must have obtained it. And yet nothing is more thinkable than that they should at last, in some stern effort to escape, rend completely asunder the material which contains them."

"I see!" was my exclamation. "And then you believe that the moon may literally explode in the heavens?"

His gentle eye kindled.

"You have grasped my meaning precisely. Ardiland believes that these phenomena we are now so constantly witnessing have a most harmless explanation. I cannot agree with him, for the secretion of gases must still, I should say, be enormous, and if certain chemical crises occur their disruptive agency would be terrific."

I held my breath for a moment; I had the profoundest faith in your father's judgment on all subjects, and for his astronomic knowledge I had long felt positive reverence.

"That," I presently gasped, "would signify the destruction of the moon?"

"Her total destruction—yes."

"And to the earth, what?"

"Excessive danger."

"Of what?"

"I will not say destruction also," he returned, with hesitant voice; "but surely there would be frightful injury. And perhaps, too, our planet might be sent from her orbit and flung into the sun. Again, it is wholly credible that in case the moon should be shivered into fragments, not all of these would by any means strike the earth. Many of them—perhaps most of them—might dart into the radius of attraction wrought by other globes, like Jupiter, Mars or Saturn; for the centrifugal force of their flight would be furious when first generated, and much of the telluric mass, indeed, for this very reason of intense speed, be dissolved into vapor during its wild passage through ether; and hence our collision with any part of it might be rendered far less hurtful."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Origin of a Well-Known Line.

The common expression, "Like angels' visits, few and far between," was borrowed by Campbell, who uses it in the "Pleasures of Hope," from Norris, who, in "The Parting," a religious poem, said:

> But those who soonest take their flight
> Are the most exquisite and strong;
> Like angels' visits, short and bright,
> Mortality's too weak to bear them long.

Campbell spoiled the phrase in the stealing, for visits few are necessarily far between. People have become used to Campbell's expression, and its nonsense does not occur to them.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Some Woman Should Tackle This.

In the Roman Campagna, at the sepulcher of Metella, wife of Sulla, there is an echo which repeats five times, each being in a different key. It will also repeat a hexameter line, or another sentence which can be spoken in 2½ seconds.

Good Times in the South.

Last year was the most prosperous in the history of cotton manufacturing in the South.

THE ORANG KOOBOOS.

The Most Degraded Race of Men in the World.

The Bushmen of South Africa have been often spoken of as the lowest in the scale of humanity—the connecting link between man and monkey; but there is a race known as the Orang Kooboos, or Brown Men of the Island of Sumatra, who present a stronger claim to that distinction. They are described as covered with hair and having long arms. They are deficient in chin, or rather that feature forms little part of the face. Some explorers of the island were at first disposed to class them as simply a somewhat higher development of the orang-outang, but this idea was dispelled by the facts that they possess speech, though exceedingly rude and monosyllabic, have perceptive faculties and resemble the rest of mankind in their formation. They are, moreover, recognized as belonging to the human race by the Malays, who, however, hunt them as wild animals, in order to work them as beasts of burden. These singular people are only to be met with in the almost impassable swamps and forests of the island. They live among the branches of the teak and marringin trees, which grow to an enormous size. They construct a rude platform of bamboos wherever they can find a sufficient number of horizontal limbs of a tree to serve as the basis or sleepers for a floor, and over this they raise a rude conical roof of split bamboos and cocoanut leaves. These savages subsist almost exclusively upon fish, which abound in all the rivers and bays of that portion of the Pacific. It has been found impossible to teach the Kooboos the use of garments, although they manifest a great fondness for pieces of colored cloth, which they will attach to various parts of their bodies. They will tie a vest to their heads or around their waists with a lively grinning and grunting of delight, and seem, to make no distinction between a simple piece of cloth for ornament and a manufactured article, the only ground for preference being the difference of colors. It has been impossible to teach those in captivity the language of their masters, for after every effort they still spoke the Malay in an uncouth monosyllabic manner, like their own jargon of unclassified grunts. They seem to have no idea whatever of marriage, but merely pair off for a season, nor do they give any evidence of belief or consciousness of the existence of a spiritual being.

Notwithstanding the utter degradation of this hairy, brutish race, they seem to be no insignificant contributors to commerce, for in some of the impassable forests of Sumatra they have been the chief collectors of benzoin or gum benjamin. Curious stories are told about the manner of trading with the Orang Kooboos. The trader proceeds to a certain point on the edge of a forest, at certain periods of the year, with quantities of colored cloths, beads, and other trifles; he then beats a gong for some length of time at various intervals during one or two days as a signal, and then retires to a considerable distance to return in about a week, when he finds satisfactory quantities of benzoin in place of his goods, which have been carried away by the Kooboos.

DEATH OF A DOG IN THE SNOW.

His Frozen Corpse Discovered and Exhumed by His St. Bernard Friend.

Romeo is a noble St. Bernard dog and Brutus an English pug. They were owned by a Harlem gentleman and were inseparable friends. Their likes and dislikes were identical. They slept in the same kennel, ate from the same dish, and roamed about the yard together.

Seldom did they appear on the street and then only with their owner. But on the morning after the recent heavy snowstorm little Brutus did not respond to the breakfast call. Search for him proved fruitless and Romeo was invited to eat alone, but he refused to touch his food.

With an air of evident distress he wandered about the house, at times whining piteously, looking for his companion. His search, too, was in vain, and finally he laid himself down on a rug before the dining-room fire with his head between his paws. But he did not close his eyes.

For perhaps an hour he remained there motionless. Then he arose, walked around the room once or twice and then left the apartment. Soon afterward he was heard howling in the back yard and scratching at the door for admission.

Members of the family hastened to the spot and found Romeo there standing over the dead body of his friend Brutus, investigation soon solved the mystery.

Brutus, it appears, had in some unknown manner wandered out doors into the driving, blinding blast of snow. Unable to return inside the house after barking, howling and scratching for some time he laid down in the snow. He had not been strong for several months, and he soon yielded to the icy breath of winter and was frozen to death.

Romeo had, in exploring the yard, found the little fellow's corpse in a tiny snowbank, and, true to his instincts, drew it out and tried to carry it to a place of safety.

His efforts to restore life to his lost friend's body were touching, and he seemed to more acutely mourn his loss than any other member of the household. For two days he would not taste a morsel of food, but after thirty-six hours of fasting he allowed himself to be persuaded to eat.

Little Brutus' frozen form was placed in a shallow grave dug out of the almost solid ground at the foot of the garden, and Romeo was present at the burial. Every movement was closely noticed by him, and when the dog's body was covered he whined and would, if he had not been restrained, have scratched away the lumps of earth that concealed all that remained of Brutus from his sight.

That was several days ago, but Romeo's grief is yet as poignant as ever and he is often heard whining over the tomb of his little friend.—New York Herald.

Critical Moments.

The history of the casting of statues is one long story of patience. When Benvenuto Cellini cast his great Perseus, according to rules which his own genius had laid down, overwork and exposure had so undermined his strength that, at the critical moment, he was obliged to take to his bed, and leave the rest of the process to some faithful workmen who understood his plans.

Finally, however, one of them came rushing into his sick-room, where he lay dazed and groaning with pain, and told him, with many lamentations, that the process was a failure, and that the metal was caked.

Cellini sprang from his bed, ran across the street, and rapidly dragged a load of dry oak wood back to his furnace. He made a roaring fire, and finding that the base alloy in his metal had been burned out, he threw in all the pewter vessels of the household. Then the metal bubbled, the great Perseus was cast, and the maker and his faithful friends exulted.

Stiglmayer, a German goldsmith in the first part of this century, having an ambition to attempt larger works than any he had accomplished, went to Naples in order to see the casting of Canova's statue of Charles III., but was denied the sight of certain secret technical processes. Stiglmayer found them out for himself, nevertheless, and as soon as he went home made his first experiment on a statuette of Venus. Many delays occurred, and the excitement increased as the end drew near. By some mistake one of his assistants poured his molten metal into the air-hole. Then the casting came to a stand-still.

"The crowd of lookers-on," writes the poor founder in his diary, "stood first dumb about me, and then slipped out, one by one, and left me with my pain."

In a month a second casting was begun, and failed. With unbroken courage he began the third cast, and on Christmas eve the metal was again poured in. It ran into the mold, and spurted joyfully out at the air-hole.

"Our joy knew no bounds," he declares. "We raised a loud cry of joy, and embraced and kissed each other. Pasquale, the helper, kissed the head of Phidias coming out of the broken form, and burned his mouth, for it had not time to cool."—Youth's Companion.

THE FIRST WHISTLE.

When the Steamboat-Screecher Was First Heard on the Mississippi.

"I see they have finally settled the discussion as to who was the first man to use a steamboat whistle on the river," said Captain Jere Eastman, of Cairo, at the Laclede last night. "It was a mighty interesting discussion, too, and the thing was in doubt for some time, but it is all settled now, and Captain J. Stut Neal was the man. As Captain Neal explains it himself, the story is something to this effect: He was the engineer and part owner of the Revinue (spell that with an 'i,' mind you), and she was the first vessel to use a whistle. They got it from Anderson Fulton, in Pittsburg, where the boat was built. That was in 1843.

"You see, they were making a trip with Government supplies to Fort Touson, on the Red River, in 1844. They had had the whistle then, for, while they were making the trip, Polk was inaugurated President and old Cap'n Neal—he wasn't old then—was the only Democrat on the boat, and I tell you he made the Injuns jump when he set that old whistle to tooting. In those days the whistle was placed a-top of the boilers and the engineer could amuse himself to his heart's content if he wanted to. Old Cap'n Neal was a steamboatman born. He was the first man on the river to use the life-preserver, and sent Cap'n W. H. Fulton all the way to Philadelphia to get a supply of them for the Revinue. On the trip that I tell you about the Revinue towed a keel boat all the way from Pittsburg via New Orleans to Fort Touson, on the Red River. That was before the annexation of Texas, and at that time Fort Touson was the boundary line between the United States and Texas, and I tell you that was a feat for steamboating in those days."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Holders and Brushes.

Tastes differ as to the size of holders for use about the stove; some like large, thin ones, and others prefer them small and thick. It does not matter which way they are made, so you have plenty of them and use them. I make covers for them, which can be easily slipped off and washed, with a small ring or tape sewed on one corner for hanging them up. Hang near a stove, so there will be no temptation to use towels or an apron.

Besides the various kinds of scrubbing, keep one exclusively for washing vegetables; potatoes, turnips, beets, etc., can be more easily cleaned in this way than in any other.

Use a small tooth brush for cleaning around the handles of cups and tureens, and for dishes with rough surfaces, or raised designs; keep it convenient and it will be used oftener. I keep mine in a drawer of my kitchen work-table, beside my silver polish, chamois skin and other useful cleaners.

I have found a small paint or varnish brush, costing 5 cents, a useful accompaniment to the larger stove-polishing brush, as it can be made to reach into corners where the other one will not go.

A nail brush for the cook's and the children's use is indispensable. Of course there are dust brushes, crumb brushes and tooth brushes. I only mention these which I do not find in general use, but which cost little and aid much in making easier the work which many deem drudgery.—Portland Transcript.

The Name Forbidden.

A Dresden workingman has been forbidden to give his child the name "Robespierre Danton." The official in charge of such matters refused to register it, and thereupon the father elected to give his son no name at all. So he was summoned for non-compliance with the registration laws and fined.

Kalmucks Are Free Men.

The Kalmucks of Astrakhan, a roving people numbering 150,000 souls, have at last been freed from serfdom. When the other Russian serfs were freed in 1861 it was considered dangerous to extend this privilege to these people, lest their wildness would lead to its abuse.

Homes for Visitors to the World's Fair.

Is the title of a neat book containing a list of about 9,000 families who will accommodate visitors to Chicago during the time of the fair. It gives their names and addresses, and number of rooms each will have to spare; also gives a list of the leading hotels and their location; also contains twelve full-page large scale maps, each numbered, representing a section, of the city; also a double-page key map, divided into sections, each section representing one of the large scale page maps, and being numbered to correspond. With this book, intending visitors can readily decide and select the quarters of the city in which they would like to be located, and then enter into correspondence with one or more families, and thus arrange for satisfactory and comfortable accommodations at reasonable rates.

This book was compiled at great expense by a trustworthy Chicago firm, after a house to house canvass in the most desirable portions of the city. It is reliable, and great care was exercised to select reputable places. By its use people will avoid the expense and trouble incident to securing a place after arrival in the city. The book can be obtained through the ticket agent of the Lake Shore railroad in this city by calling upon him, 13-16

MRS. WOOTON.

Mrs. Martha V. Wooton, daughter of S. B and Angeline Stevens, was born at the home of her parents in Clinton county, Indiana, Feb. 25, 1859, and died at her home, the M. E. parsonage in Auburn, Indiana, April 7, 1893, her age being 34 years, 1 month and 12 days. She was married Feb. 25. 1880 to Rev. A. S. Wooton, who with three young children survive to mourn their heavy loss. The funeral was held in the church Sunday, April 9, at 2 p. m., in the presence of one of the greatest congregations ever seen there. All classes and all beliefs came to do honor to one whom they had all learned to love. The services were conducted by Rev. A. E. Mahin, the presiding elder of this, the Ft. Wayne district, assisted by Rev. J. D. Brosy of the Lutheran church, and Rev. G. W. Healy of the Presbyterian church. The services were solemn and impressive, and at the close the sad procession started for the beautiful cemetery, Woodlawn, where her earthly body was laid away to its final rest.

Mrs. Wooton had been sick for some time her final sickness dating back about seven months. In all this time she had suffered greatly, but had endured all with patience the most sublime. Her greatest concern was for her young children who would be left without a mother's care, and for he husband to whom she had always been a loving and sympathetic helpmate. She had no fears for the future for her trust was fully in her Redeemer, and to His will she was resigned. She passed peacefully away surrounded by loved relatives and friends, mourned by all who knew her. The floral tributes were profuse and lovely, especially the callas and Easter lilies, and a large broken wheel, the gift of the ladies in the immediate neighborhood. Her mother, Mrs. Stevens, and sisters Mrs. Stoms and Clara Stevens, who have been with her so much during her sickness were present at the funeral, as well as her brothers, Wilber, Frank and Lincoln Stevens, who reside at the old home in Clinton county. Mr. Wooton's brother, Isaac C. Wooton, of Fairmount, Ind., was also here. Mrs. Wooton in the short time she had resided here had endeared herself to all she met by her lovable and gentle nature, and Mr. Wooton and his little family have the deepest sympathy of the whole community.

[Lines on the death of Mrs. Wooton.]

She is gone! Long months she lingered,
  Wasted by disease and pain.
Vain the prayers of those that loved her.
  All physician's skill in vain.

For death—that mighty monster,
  Calling friends from our embrace—
Has taken hence our loved one.
  Now she sees them face to face,

Loving husband, do not weep so,
  But look up at yonder blue
There, among the white robed angels,
  She awaits to welcome you.

Dearest mamma. She said sweetly,
  "Do not weep, my loved ones dear,
But be good and meet your mother
  In that heavenly land so fair."

Yes, 'tis true that o'er her marble,
  Pale and lifeless, we did weep;
Wept for her within the churchyard
  Where she sleeps a silent sleep.

But again we'll meet our loved one,
  Whom we'll never cease to love.
Meet her where there'll be no parting,
  In those brighter realms above.

DEMOCRATIC CITY CAUCUS.

at 7:30 in the evening, to nominate a city ticket to be voted for May 1, including a trustee for the 2d and 5th wards, a treasurer, clerk and marshal. Meeting will be in the second floor of the Sebring building on North Main street. Let every voter come out and help to choose a good ticket.

J. F. ABER.
FRANK BORST -Com.
W. B. BROWN,

Election Notice.

I, Ulysses S. Raut, Clerk of the incorporated town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, do hereby certify that at a corporation election to be held on Monday, May 1, 1893,

the following officers are to be elected:
One Marshal,
One Clerk,
One Treasurer,
each for the term of one year;
One Trustee in Second (2d) Ward,
One trustee in Fifth (5th) Ward,
each for the term of two years.

In testimony of which I have set my hand and affixed the seal of said town, this third day of April, 1893,

U. S. RAUT,
(SEAL.) Town Clerk,

City Candidates.

MARSHAL.

For Marshal. on the democratic ticket, Joseph Robbins.

COUNCIL.

For trustee in the Fifth Ward, on the democratic ticket, Joseph E. Ensley.

TREASURER.

For treasurer, on the democratic ticket, Chas. H. G. Jones.

City Politics.

There seem to be few candidates, except for marshal. John Aber and Herman Kessler are talked of for clerk, but we have not found out whether they wish to run. They would fill the bill nicely. J. C. Henry and F. A. Hoff are also talked of for treasurer, but we have not seen them about it. In the second ward, George Lanning and C. C. Shaffer are mentioned for trustee. In the fifth ward, J. E. Ensley and D. Y. Husselman are spoken of. The list all through is an excellent one and we hope every democratic voter will come out this evening and take part in the caucus. If we have omitted any candidates it is because we have not had our attention called to them.

One thing should be noticed about our candidates for marshal. All are hardworking and careful men. We don't believe that one of them would shirk his duties.

Defended Her Good Name.

Young people are often giddy and oftener they are thoughtless. But this is no sure sign that they are bad. They may be as correct in all things as their more staid acquaintances. But a young person who is giddy or careless runs a great risk of being set down by the meddling ones, as altogether bad. This is especially true in the case of young girls. There came up a case of this sort last week, in a neighborhood not a thousand miles from the flourishing town of Auburn. A young lady of good family, yet with a fair amount of liveliness, had the misfortune to be assailed by a married woman of the neighborhood. The stories reached the young lady and she put in a vigorous protest. Her assailant was called in and asked to account for the slander going about. She stoutly denied having said anything against the young lady's character, but was confronted by several witnesses who declared she had told these very stories to them. When the proof became overwhelming the young lady, no longer able to control her indignation, sprang upon her occuser and gave her a tremendous thrashing in the most approved style in the art of self-defense. Then she wound up by kicking her enemy from the house. Here the husband of the woman interfered, and was about to tackle the girl, when the girl's father threw off his coat and said he would see his daughter have fair play. This ended the struggle, and we predict that the next gossip that starts out to assail that girl's character will take a course in physical training before she puts her stories afloat. Young people should be discreet and correct in all things, but if wrongfully assailed we glory in the spirit that defends itself.

Shorthand and Typewriting.

Miss Lizzie Rummel wishes to organize a class in shorthand, or two classes if needed, beginners and a full course. She teaches the improved Pitman method, a standard method. This will give a chance to learn at much less expense than to go away to school, and at least as thoroughly. Address her through the postoffice at Auburn.

A Compliment for Two.

W. S. Dancer has been dreaming dreams and seeing visions again. This time the dream was not as moist as the other. He dreamed a stranger came ot his door, as he sat reading, and Wils invited him in. The strange looking stranger informed Mr. D. that he, the stranger was an imp of the devil. "I don't believe it" said Dancer, in his usual polite style. But the imp insisted it was so, and to prove it offered to do three things, seemingly impossible, that Dancer would ask of him. So Dancer just asked that the big elm that keeps so much of the breezes off his wind pump, be removed. This was done in a twinkling, so that only a hole remained. Dancer next asked that the road to Auburn be made level and smooth, including the cut in the hill at Aaron Osbun's. "All right," says the Imp, "come let us go to town." They went and found the road as level and smooth as the beautiful streets of Auburn. Dancer now had one more favor to ask and it was this: "Can you find me two bigger liars than Obe Cool or the democratic papers". The Imp said he couldn't unless it was the average populist. This was more than Wils had bargained for. He scratched his head, tried to think of some way of withdrawing that question and substituting a less dangerous one in its place, when he suddenly saw he was alone, while a voice going deep and deeper into the earth, was heard to say as its tones grew faint and fainter, "What some people call lies are only palin truths about themselves. Of all the windgalls on the legs of the body politic, commend me to the populist reformer—the one who has absorbed so much virtue that there is none left to supply his neighbors." The voice died away in the congested bowels of the earth—a distinct odor of brimstone pervaded the air—and Dancer was left to his solitude. The hill at Osbun's was back in its place, as formidable as ever. The old elm again overshadowed the wind pump at the farm home The unwelcome dream had joined the things of the shadowy past. He awoke next morning with a clammy feeling along his spinal column, and a mental impression that of all earthly, heavenly or helly things to mortals given or loaned, dreams are the most delusive and unsatisfactory.

Newspaper editing is a very funny amusement sometimes. If you give a man a puff he never sees it; but if one line against him appears and he sees it before the paper is off the press, and while he would not have time to stop on the street and say "thank you" he has time to run all over town to denounce the editor who seeks to print all the news. Ex.

R. H. Cobb has the most interesting collection of instantaneous photographic views we ever examined. They show various scenes on his bicycle trip through southern California last winter, as well as many other views from Puget's sound to San Diego. The strange trees and palms, the lovely avenues and walks, the bright sheets of water, the groves of oranges and the abundance of beautiful flowers out of doors in December and January make a series of pictures of which he may well feel proud, especially as they are the products of his own skill.

The party given last week at the Armory Hall by Will Schaab and Ed. Rainier was a brilliant and most pleasant affair. We don't know what the boys could have added to make it better. Besides the dancing there were cards for those who cared to play, and some fine singing by Mary Young. Mrs. Garwood and Dr. Buchtel also rendered some exquisite pieces on the piano and violin. It was a very successful affair in all regards.

J. B, Johnson, of Lagrange, has located here, and expects to make Auburn his home. He is the patentee of the "Adjustable Steel Reclining and Swinging Chair," an invention that beats all the hammocks and is a chair and lounge besides. He expects to enter on the manufacture and sale of these popular articles, over 2,000 of which were sold last year. Here would be a good chance to form another manufacturing company. The chairs can be seen at the Hollister House office, or at Benedict's Novelty Works, on East Ninth street.

We made the acquaintance of the new officers of the Auburn Foundry and Machine works this week. B. C. Cook as mentioned heretofore, is president and treasurer; A. B. Nickey is vice-president and S. He and Mr. Cook are the two new men to enter the management, and both have impressed our people favorably. They will locate here with their families, and our people will extend them a hearty welcome. It might not be amiss to name some of the other active workers in this establishment; Mr. Ira Sunday, a young man of experience and ability, is book-keeper, Miss Edith Trentman is typewriter, and we must not forget Mr. Harry Snyder, their "hustler" who is spending a good deal of his time "on the road," for the company. The W. R. C. ladies gave a nice supper last Saturday evening. It took some study to learn what a "B. C." social was. But it was finally decided that "B" meant biscuit, butter, beef, beets, beans and bananas, while "C" was for cake, coffee, cream and cabbage. At all events, there was plenty of all these.

F. J. Yesbera, Auburn's popular jeweler, is going to give away a gold watch on May 1st, 1893, to the person guessing closest to the exact time a certain watch will run after being fully wound up. Mrs. Hodson who is earning her living by selling small articles finds her business impaired by reports that are being circulated to the effect that she has money on interest. Such is not the case. She has no money, and only asks the patronage of those who need the articles she sells, to enable her to get along. We hope the people will remember these facts and patronize her.

We call attention to the good showing made in the Auburn treasurer's report we published last week. It shows that last year, in spite of our heavy expenses we paid on our debt $1,105, besides having on hand a cash balance enough greater than last year, to make the real roduction about $1,300. We feel like saying to the board that this looks encouraging, and shows good management. Well done, and let's keep it going that way.

Mrs. Barns and Mrs. Kelley, of the COURIER force, were at Ossian last week attending the meeting of the Ladies' Home and Foreign Missions Society, of the Ft. Wayne Presbytery. They reported a splendid meeting. At the same time the rest of the COURIER force was doing good in the usual way by promulgating sound democratic doctrine, and sending it to all parts of North America, and even farther. There are many ways of doing good, and we propose to try several of them.

Some one might have "chipped in" to pay the 9 cents, but, of course, that would not have been the regulation red-tape way of doing business.

REVIEWING the post-official career of the Presidents of the United States, a Washington writer notes that six men—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Johnson, and Hayes—became planters or farmers upon retiring from public life; that five—Van Buren, Fillmore, Tyler, Grant and Cleveland—openly tried to get another term; that five—Van Buren, Polk, Fillmore, Pierce and Grant—traveled extensively at the close of their official career; and that four—Adams, Pierce, Buchanan and Hayes—sooner or later became recluses.

EVERY month or so the world is convulsed by a rumor that some startling change is to be made in woman's dress. It is very significant that these reports vary widely, some indicating a desire for reform in the direction of comfort and practicability, others presaging a relapse into the barbarism of bygone ages. Mankind has hardly recovered from the shock experienced at the announcement that crinoline was likely again to become fashionable, yet here we have the report of the national council of women on the subject of dress reform. In this document business females are advised to adopt any one of several grotesque and outlandish costumes, the main feature of all being that they are "dual at the bottom." Between the two extremes it looks as though feminine dress would remain about where it is at present. Whatever real reform has been effected in this matter has been in the direction of relinquishing the tight corset. With that abomination entirely done away with woman's dress would be healthful and comfortable, and it is quite attractive enough now to make her the greatest influence for good or evil on the earth.

Ages of Men Before the Flood.

It may safely be said that a very slight error in the translation of Hebrew numerals has led to all the apparent disparity, and on the authority of Genesis vi. 3, it may be accepted that the age of the antediluvian was not to exceed 120 years. That passage reads: "And the Lord said, my spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh; yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years."

As already remarked, the errors in the ages of the patriarchs as given in the Bible may be ascribed to the improper rendering of concrete numerals by the translators. The verse Genesis v. 3, is properly rendered, and reads thus: "Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat a son," etc., but if that verse had been translated in the same way as the fifth verse is, in the authorized version, it would read thus: "Adam lived thirty hundred years, and begat a son!" This shocked the consciousness of the Christian translator, and he was driven to the true rule of the Hebrew use in cases of concrete numerals. In the fifth verse the authorized version reads: "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." The true reading by the Hebrew rule would be: "And all the days of Adam which he lived were a hundred and thirty and nine years, and he died," making the entire age of Adam 139 years instead of 930 years.

Further, so primitive was the system of enumeration at the date of the writing of Genesis that the Hebrews had no means of writing nine hundred, or any number of hundreds above one, without repetition or circumlocution.

The following are put forward as the ages of the patriarchs before the Deluge, with the remark that they are subject to a few uncertainties in the numbers below one hundred:

Name.	Correct Age.	Age as given in the Bible.
1. Adam	139	930
2. Seth	121	912
3. Enos	114	905
4. Cainan	119	910
5. Mahalaleel	122	895
6. Jared	117	962
7. Enoch	116	365
8. Methuselah	124	969
9. Lamech	117	777
10. Noah	159	950

By this the time-honored proverb, "as old as Methuselah," is robbed of its point.

PROPOSED TARIFF BILL

DRAWN IN THE INTERESTS OF THE PEOPLE.

The Committee Makes Public the Proposed Measure and Explains Its Principal Features—Protectionists Getting Desperate—Copies of the Bill Can Be Had Free.

The New Bill.

The special committee of the Reform Club, appointed immediately after the election of Cleveland to prepare a draft for a tariff bill which the club will urge as a substitute for the McKinley bill, has made public its proposed measure. It is drawn in strict accordance with the Democratic platform, and in the interests of the people. It contains only ad valorem duties; makes raw materials free; places much lower or no duties upon the necessaries of life than upon luxuries; and lays revenue duties upon the bulk of manufactured goods—iron, steel, woolens, cottons, silks, linens, gloves, etc.

The following abstracts from the memorandum accompanying tables, and schedules of rates, explain some of the principal features of the bills:

1. Crude materials, to be used in the process of manufacture, are in general made free of duty.

In taxing other articles, the general object has been to fix such rates as would produce the largest amount of revenue, in a series of years, consistent with large importations.

The purpose of obtaining the largest revenue has, however, been limited by consideration of the welfare and necessities of the people at large, and especially the poorer classes. Taxes upon necessaries of life have been kept down to the lowest point which the needs of revenue permit.

It has not been thought necessary, and hardly proper, to reduce rates merely for the purpose of avoiding some incidental protection to domestic producers.

All duties have been made strictly ad valorem, except some of those which are levied as compensatory for internal revenue taxes upon similar articles produced at home.

Everybody must admit that in theory the ad valorem system is the only correct one. It is the only system which is not oppressive to the poor, or which does not require continual revision in order to prevent the tariff from becoming an instrument of private gain more and more every year. A complete system of specific duties, to be at all just, would require the enumeration of fully 10,000 different articles. Under the present law, articles worth from ten cents to $200 per pound are included under a common duty of 50 cents per pound. This is absurd and iniquitous.

2. All foreign articles which, if made here, would be subject to internal revenue taxes, must, of course, be subjected to at least an equal tax. Whatever ad valorem duty, therefore, is imposed upon spirits, ale, and beer, must be in addition to a tax equivalent to that levied upon the domestic article.

3. LUXURIES. The theory of imposing a heavy tax upon luxuries is plausible, but needs to be applied with great caution. The theory itself is often incorrectly stated. The object which should be aimed at is the collection of the largest possible amount of revenue from luxuries; not the mere imposition of the highest possible rate of taxes.

The present duty of 45 per cent. upon manufactures of gold and silver is almost prohibitory; and a duty of only 10 per cent. on precious stones, cut but not set, produces twelve times as much revenue as a duty of 50 per cent. on the same things in the form of jewelry. Even a duty of 10 per cent. upon precious stones is so high as to lead to much smuggling; and any increase in this rate would ultimately lead to a reduction of revenue.

Yielding in part to the popular opinion that silk is a luxury, we have placed silk manufactures generally in Schedule C, at 30 per cent., instead of with cottons and woolens. Silk yarns, silk thread, sewing silk and spun and thrown silk are placed in Schedule F at 10 per cent., leaving raw silk, of course, free.

4. The 25 per cent. schedule is the most important of any, and is purposely made the most sweeping. Long experience has shown that this rate of duty is, upon the whole, the most productive of revenue. It has been assumed that the presumption was in favor of this rate upon almost everything; and, wherever these schedules impose a higher or a lower rate, there is a special reason for so doing.

5. In placing a large list of articles in the 25 per cent. schedule, it is not forgotten that many of these articles are really materials for further manufacture. One beauty of a strictly ad valorem system is that one uniform rate of duty can be imposed upon such manufactures without doing serious injustice.

Manufactures of earthenware, glass and fur have been left subject to the uniform rate of 25 per cent.

6. METALS. All forms of crude metal, not merely in ores but in pigs, ingots and bars, with the exception of iron and steel, have been made free of duty.

Iron and steel, in the form of pigs and ingots, have been left at a duty of 20 per cent., while in bars, rods, etc., they are left subject to the general duty of 25 per cent.

7. COTTON. All manufactured cotton is put in the 25 per cent. schedule, except yarns and thread, which are put at 15 per cent. The reason for making a lower rate upon yarns is obvious enough. Yarns are clearly material used exclusively for purposes of manufacture. Thread is also used for manufacturing purposes only, and is in no proper sense a finished product.

8. FLAX, hemp and jute manufactures are divided into three classes, for special reasons. It being settled that all the crude materials are to be free, it is obvious that finished manufactures of this kind, literally "ready for consumption," should not be taxed more than 25 per cent.

The House of Representatives has voted, with substantial unanimity among the Democratic members, to repeal all duties upon binding twine and cotton bagging; the first in the interest of Northern farmers, and the second in the interest of Southern planters. Burlaps and bagging are articles, the cost of which is largely a tax upon farmers, and upon these the duties should be made very light. A tax upon cables and cordage is a tax upon American shipping; and in view of the contemplated changes in the navigation laws the duty upon these articles should certainly be light. Linen should be subjected to the lowest duty consistent with revenue requirements. It is here placed in the 20 per cent. schedule.

9. WOOLENS. The duty upon woolen and worsted manufactures of every description except yarns is placed at twenty-five per cent. This is certainly large enough, because this was all which was asked by the woolen manufacturers in 1867, when the supposed ideal woolen tariff was adopted. The manufacturers then stated that twenty-five per cent. net protection was all which they asked. After the internal revenue was abolished, the woolen manufacturers retained and even increased the amount of the protection which had been granted as compensation for that tax. It is believed that yarns should be admitted at a lower ad valorem rate than the other manufactures of wool, and they are put in the fifteen per cent. schedule.

10. GLOVES. Leather gloves and all other gloves, except of silk, are placed in the twenty-five per cent. schedule. Gloves are not a luxury; they are a necessity.

11. The 20 per cent. schedule includes, in addition to the articles already mentioned, several others which should be briefly commented upon. Manufactures of wood in the most finished forms are placed here, because the present tax on them is 35 per cent., and this seems a reduction proportionate to other reductions. Such provisions as are taxed at all are also placed in this schedule. Buttons, except of metal or glass, are placed here, because all other button materials, including silk, have long been admitted under 10 per cent. duty; and 25 per cent. for the manufactured article has been found highly protective, proving that a duty of 20 per cent. would produce most revenue. Glass and metal buttons are left practically in the 25 per cent. schedule as branches of those manufactures.

12. PROVISIONS. Most provisions are made free of duty; but some, which partake in a mild degree of the nature of luxuries, are put in the 20 per cent. schedule, while breadstuffs are mostly made free. Barley is made an exception, because it is used but little for bread, and is mostly purchased for the purpose of manufacturing beer. A tax of 10 per cent upon this is only a beer tax in another form. Potatoes are also subject to a duty of 10 per cent., because those which are imported are, in four years out of five, chiefly of a superior kind, used as a comparative luxury.

13. BOOKS. Since the enactment of the international copyright law, a very strong argument may be made for the admission of all books free of duty, since practically none could be admitted which would come into direct competition with any lawful book trade in the United States. Domestic books could not be admitted without the consent of the domestic publishers; and foreign books, copyrighted here, could not be admitted at all. On the other hand, so long as paper, binding materials and machinery are taxed, it is not just to make competing books free. The demand for revenue may well turn the scale, and 10 per cent. is probably the best revenue duty. The free list is extended to books more than five years old, and books received through the mail, not more than two copies to one address.

All articles upon which the revenue collected is too small to pay for collection, and upon which it is not probable that any mere reduction of rates would produce substantial revenue, have been placed upon the free list.

Annexed to the proposed bill are tables containing the actual imports and rates for 1892, the proposed new rates, the receipts on the basis of the importations of 1892, estimated imports for 1894 and estimated receipts for 1894, computed on the proposed new rates. We are satisfied that the proposed tariff would produce an immediate revenue of $120,000,000, if not more.

The ordinary expenditures of the Government, including postal expenses and sinking fund requirements, for the next fiscal year are estimated at	$370,000,000
Receipts from internal revenue and other sources, except the tariff	192,000,000
Balance required	$178,000,000
Estimated arrears of pensions payable within the year	45,000,000
Balance required for permanent current expenses	$133,000,000

To meet this demand the tariff here proposed will provide an income of $120,000,000 for the first year, which will steadily increase, and, in our opinion, will produce an average annual income of $165,000,000 during the first five years of its existence.

The tariff here proposed would leave a deficiency of revenue for the first year of $58,000,000, or, excluding arrears of pensions, $13,000,000. The question arises, how this deficiency is to be met. It may be done in any of three ways:

1. By short-date Government bills, to be paid out of the revenue of the next five years, which will certainly be sufficient for that purpose, because three-fourths of the deficiency will cease within two years.

2. By a duty on sugar, and perhaps on tea and coffee.

3. By an income tax upon natural and artificial monopolies, such as railroads, telegraphs, telephones, gasworks, and rents.

The Reform Club proposed tariff bill is now ready for free distribution at the office, 52 William street, New York City. Send in your address and secure a copy. If you are a farmer, mechanic, clerk, professional man or common laborer, it will pay you to study this bill and to ask your Congressmen to support it, or a similar one.

Who Made the Bill.

The committee appointed by the Reform Club to draft a proposed tariff bill consists of E. Ellery Anderson, Hon. Charles S. Fairchild, Thomas G. Shearman, Prof. David A. Wells, Hon. John Dewitt Warner, Everett P. Wheeler, and Jacob Schoenhof.

Mr. Anderson, the chairman, is an ex-president of and a big contributor to the Reform Club. Mr. Fairchild was Secretary of the Treasury during Cleveland's first administration, and is now President of the Reform Club. Mr. Shearman has for a third of a century been one of the most successful of customs attorneys in New York. He was Beecher's attorney during the famous Beecher-Tilton trial. He is eminent as a lawyer, statistician, and philanthropist. Prof. Wells has written more books and pamphlets on the tariff question than any other American. His "Recent Economic Changes" is regarded as one of the two or three great books of this generation. Congressman Warner is widely known as a writer and speaker on tariff and financial questions. He is the author of many of the Reform Club's most telling pamphlets and, more than any other man, has been the backbone of the Reform Club since its origin in 1887. Mr. Wheeler, is well known as a lawyer, writer and speaker on economic questions. He is also an ex-president of the Reform Club. Mr. Schoenhof was Consul to Tunstal, England, under Cleveland, and is the author of several works on the tariff and wage question.

It would be difficult to get together seven men better qualified to frame a tariff bill than these gentlemen. They are all successful business men; all have studied the needs of the people for many years; from their intimacy with different industries they know about what reductions are necessary and safe. They owe nothing politically to any protected manufacturers, and are in league with no clique of office-holders or spoilsmen; they have demonstrated their unselfishness and devotion to principle by giving their money, time and thought to the tariff and other reforms; they have no ax to grind in proposing a new tariff bill, and do so only to educate the people, keep the Democratic party in line, and see that the promises made to the people are carried out in good faith.

But little impression can be made upon such a committee by calling its members "theorists," "cranks," "hobby-riders" or "imbeciles," and yet protectionists are compelled to put up some kind of opposition to a bill that would actually stop the greater part of the tariff robbery. Their case is certainly desperate.

The Halford Scandal.

Secretary Gresham has made a discovery in the State Department which reflects as much credit upon his own sagacity as it reflects discredit upon his predecessor in office. The facts as given in a Washington dispatch are briefly these: John W. Foster, while Secretary of State, ordered the payment of $15 a day to Major Elijah W. Halford for his services as disbursing officer of the Behring Sea Commission. This was in addition to his salary of $3,600 a year as paymaster of the army, making his total pay about $8,675 a year. Mr. Foster was equally generous with J. Stanley Brown, the husband of Mollie Garfield. Notwithstanding the fact that he was already drawing $10 a day as an officer of the Treasury Department, he was allowed $15 a day additional as a member of the staff of the Behring Sea Commission. Seven or eight other officials were likewise allowed double salaries.

These disclosures are astounding. While it was known that Secretary Foster was by profession a sort of lobbyist for foreign interests, it was not supposed that he would be guilty of any such scandalous work as this. Neither was it supposed that Maj. Halford was the kind of a man who would consent to profit by an imposition of this sort. Both men were thought to be above doing anything dishonorable. Secretaries Gresham and Carlisle are entitled to the thanks of the public for bringing to light this fraud—this looting of the treasury by men in high places. They will be entitled to still more gratitude if they shall promptly put a stop to the whole disgraceful double-salary system.—Chicago Record.

Why You Should Support It.

The Reform Club bill is the first bill ever framed entirely in the interests of the people and without dictation from manufacturers or those with "vested rights." The makers of it are all eminent as scholars, and several of them as philanthropists. They are all recognized as authorities on the tariff question. With due consideration for past and present conditions, they have made a bill too good to be fairly appreciated at once; hence they have published it six months before Congress meets, in order that proper time may be had for general discussion. Speakers will also be sent out to discuss its merits, and perhaps to aid in securing petitions to Congress in favor of this or a similar bill. It will not do for the people to trust entirely to their Representatives in Congress. Popular sentiment must express itself. Many Representatives did not understand the full import of the last election; others have weak backs or elastic consciences which would bend and stretch before the millions and billions of dollars that will be represented in Washington in opposition to such a measure. "Vested interests" are quick to begin work along effective lines. They have already cried out against this bill, and will leave no stone unturned to prevent its passage. They wish to continue their robbery of the people, and will bribe and corrupt Congress, if possible, in the future as in the past. The only antidote for the poison is the strong assertion of public sentiment in editorials, speeches, and petitions. Let it be manifest in a way that shall leave no doubt in the minds of our Representatives of what is expected of them.

The Queen's English.

Lord Palmerston's reply to the illiterate member who asked him, "Are there two hens in 'Onilton?" is a specimen of his rather boisterous chaff. "No, only one; that's why heggs are so scarce there." Mr. Disraeli's comment upon a portrait of himself, "Is it not hideous? and so like," exhibited a discernment not common with unflattered sitters.

"Taste" of Electricity.

Physicians explain in an interesting fashion that the electric current when applied to the tongue seems to taste sour. The gustatory or tasting nerves, according to the doctors, are industrious and well-meaning little things, and, although it is not their business to take cognizance of any impression made by touch, they do their best to look after anything that happens to come in their way. Thus, when subjected to the electric current, they telegraph the fact in their own language to the brain, and as their language is exclusively that of taste they inform the brain that an electric current is sour. The ordinary unscientific citizen, having confidence in the stories told by his gustatory nerves, really believes that the electric current has an acid taste.

HARRISON IS ELECTED.

WINS BY A COMFORTABLE MAJORITY IN CHICAGO.

Chosen to Be World's Fair Mayor in the Face of Determined Opposition—End of an Exciting Contest—Elections in Other Cities.

Carter Carries Chicago.

After the bitterest and most stubbornly contested municipal campaign in its history, Chicago has elected Carter H. Harrison to the chief magistracy of the city. His majority is in the neighborhood of 20,000, and with him the whole Democratic city ticket is elected. The election of Harrison was opposed by every newspaper in the city except the Times (his own paper) and the Mail, and the fight has been notable for the bitter personalities indulged in by both sides. The fact, also, that the man chosen this year is to serve through the World's Fair, a period that will be most trying to the city government, has caused the whole country to watch the contest with eager interest. There were four candidates in the field, and the vote, barring a few precincts from which returns had not been received, stood as follows:

Carter H. Harrison, Dem.	103,362
Samuel W. Allerton, Citizens'-Rep.	84,891
Dewitt C. Cregier, United-Citizens	2,699
Henry Ehrenpreis, Socialist	1,057

Carter Henry Harrison was born in Fayette County, Kentucky, Feb. 15, 1825. He graduated at Yale in 1845, read law, engaged in farming, traveled for two years in foreign counties, and finally settled in Chicago, where he engaged in real estate operations. After the great fire of '71 he served as County Commissioner for three years. In 1874 he was elected to Congress and at the close of his term was re-elected, serving until 1879, when he was chosen Mayor of Chicago, in which office he was continued for four biennial terms.

ELECTIONS ELSEWHERE.

Hooker Elected to the Supreme Bench in Michigan.

A Detroit dispatch says that there is no doubt of the election of Hooker (Rep.) to the Supreme Bench by a plurality of 10,000 or over, and the Republican candidates for regents have won a still greater victory. In the old Democratic strongholds, such as Wayne and Saginaw Counties, the Republicans have made great gains. They have captured Grand Rapids, Ann Arbor, Manistee, Lansing and other cities formerly Democratic. The Democrats elect Mayors at Ypsilanti and Port Huron, overturning Republican majorities. All the proposed constitutional amendments have undoubtedly carried, the opposition being inconsiderable. A light vote was polled throughout the State.

License Issue in Minnesota.

Party lines were not closely drawn in Minnesota cities, the contests generally hinging on the question of license. At Anoka the Democrats and Populists united against the Republicans and elected George McCauley Mayor by a majority of 124. The combination also elected all the Aldermen except one and all the other city officers except Treasurer. Donald Grant (Rep.) was chosen Mayor of Faribault. At Ada W. H. Bangs was elected. No license won by a majority of 3. At Wabasha the Citizens' ticket, headed by C. C. Hirschey (Dem.) for Mayor, was elected by a majority of 111. At Albert Lea T. W. Kratvold (Rep.) was chosen Mayor over W. G. Kellar by a majority of 143.

The hottest fight in South Dakota was at Watertown, where everything hinged on the question of whisky or no whisky. According to dispatches the cold-water people were defeated, the opposition candidate for Mayor, W. A. Davis, being elected by a majority of 150. All of the Aldermen and other city officials on the Davis ticket were also elected.

Republicans Carry St. Louis.

The election in St. Louis resulted in a victory for the Republicans. They secured Mayor, Collector, Council, and most of the minor offices, if not all. Cyrus P. Walbridge secures the Mayoralty plum from James Bannerman by a majority of about 3,000. Henry Zelegenheim, for Collector, and Charles Nage', for President of the Council (Republicans), defeat their Democratic opponents by still larger majorities. The Republicans, it is thought, also secure every one of the six councilmen and a majority of the house of delegates.

Result in Milwaukee.

The Democrats carried Milwaukee, electing all their judicial candidates and sending Mayor Peter J. Somers to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the election of John L. Mitchell to the United States Senate. The vote cast was surprisingly large, considering the quiet manner in which the campaign was conducted, and shows that both sides planned a surprise for each other. The Republicans did some hard and quiet work and got out a large vote, but the Democrats were equally active.

At Springfield, Ill.

At Springfield returns from over half the city show that the entire Democratic city and township ticket is elected by decisive majorities. The probability is that the Republicans have elected four out of seven aldermen.

Little Interest in Nebraska.

The result of the municipal elections in Nebraska as shown by returns from towns representing all portions of the State are without special political significance. In many places the issue was license or no license or high license or low license. The contest appears to have been about equally waged, with the advantage somewhat in favor of license. Excepting places where this question was up, no particular interest was manifested and a light vote is reported. In South Omaha O. E. Walker, the candidate of the American Protective Association, was elected over Walters, Democrat, by sixty-five majority. He carried the rest of the ticket with him by smaller majorities.

Quiet Day in Kansas.

The elections in Kansas were the most quiet and orderly ever held in the cities of the State, owing to the operation of the election law passed by the Legislature making it a fine and imprisonment to give away whisky or cigars or to pay money for votes or to influence votes. Elections were held in all the first and second class cities for Mayor, Aldermen, and members of the School Board. At these elections women generally voted, and the result is a mixed victory. Wherever the Democrats and Populists combined they defeated the Republicans. The Republicans won a victory in Topeka, electing their candidate for Mayor, D. C. Jones, by a large plurality.

WINTER WHEAT CROP.

Varying Conditions Reported from Eleven States.

A detailed report in the Farmers' Review covering eleven States shows that there has been little improvement in the condition of winter wheat since the last report. The present condition in Illinois is not even fair. Most of the reports run from fair to poor. In some counties the late sown wheat is found to be killed and will have to be plowed up. On clay lands especially the damage in some counties has been great. In other counties the late sown wheat sprouted after the advent of winter and such fields were killed by the later severe weather. In Indiana the general condition is fair. The wheat that got a good start last fall is generally doing well. Some of the fields that were believed damaged are reviving, but slowly on account of the cold nights. Much of the wheat on the low lands has been damaged by excessive wet. Ohio reports show the condition to be much better than either of the two States mentioned. The condition varies from fair to good. The early wheat is looking well, but late is not so promising. In many counties the stand is very good and without any disaster will make a fine crop. In Michigan the condition varies greatly, some reporting very good and some very poor prospects. The general condition is fair. Considerable damage has resulted from freezing. In some counties the crop is still covered with snow, and condition cannot be determined. In Kentucky the general condition is only fair. Much of the wheat was frozen out. In Missouri most of the correspondents report fair. A few report poor and a few good. Some wheat has been frozen out, and the fields look dead, while other fields look well. Conditions in Kansas are a little better than in Missouri. The crop needs rain badly. In Nebraska the general condition is good, but in most counties there has been as yet little growth. A few counties report the condition as bad. In Iowa and Wisconsin the condition is reported as fair to good. In Wisconsin many of the wheat fields are still covered with snow. Reports from Minnesota are too meager to summarize. The outlook for fruit is generally good. The trees ripened their wood well in the fall, and the buds are well developed. The condition at present is reported at from fair to good from all the States covered by our report of winter wheat. A few counties in Illinois and Michigan report the outlook poor.

JUDGE RICK'S DECISION.

Declares Against the Boycott of the Locomotive Engineers.

Now that the text of Judge Rick's decision in the Ann Arbor strike cases is published, the Court's position appears not at all revolutionary. He declares that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has no right to maintain a boycott against the interstate freight of any road on which there may be a strike. The ordering and furthering of such a boycott, he says would be criminal, under section 10 of the interstate commerce law. He, therefore, enjoins Chief Arthur and the brotherhood from enforcing the boycott rule against the Ann Arbor Road.

But when he comes to the individual rights of the engineers he declares that Clark, Case, Rutger, and Conley acted within their rights and were entitled to quit the service of the Lake Shore Road when they did. These engineers, employed by the Lake Shore, were ordered in turn to haul out a Lake Shore train in which there were Ann Arbor cars. Each in turn replied that he would quit the road's service. This, Judge Ricks says, they had a right to do. Engineer Lennon, who, being out on a run, refused to switch an Ann Arbor car into his train, is judged guilty of contempt of court and fined. It seems, therefore, that the right of each individual engineer to refuse to make a run with a train containing cars for or from a road on which there is a strike is affirmed. But if preconcerted action to the end should be proven it would constitute a crime punishable by a heavy fine.

A Horse's Fear.

I once had a horse at home, born and bred on the place, so docile that whenever I required him I could go to him where the horses were at pasture, and though they all galloped off at my approach, he would calmly wait to be caught. Springing on his back I would go after the other horses, or gallop home with only my hand on his neck to guide him. I did not often ride him, as he was slow and lazy, but with timid women and children he was a favorite; he was also frequently used for farm work, in or out of harness, and I could shoot from his back. In the peach season he would roam about the plantation getting the fruit, of which he was very fond, by tugging at the lower branches of the trees and shaking it down in showers. One intensely dark night I was riding home on this horse. I came through a road with a wire fence on each side, two miles in length, and when I had got nearly to the end of this road my horse suddenly stopped short, uttering a succession of loud terrified snorts. I could see nothing but the intense blackness of the night before me, and tried to encourage him to go on. Touching him on the neck, I found his hair wet with the sudden profuse sweat of extreme fear. The whip made no impression on him. He continued to back away, his eyes apparently fixed on some object of horror just before him, while he trembled in such a degree that I was shaken in the saddle. He attempted several times to wheel round and run away, but I was determined not to yield to him and continued the contest. Suddenly, when I was beginning to despair of getting home by that road, he sprang forward and regularly charged the (to me) invisible object before him, and another moment, when he had apparently passed it, taking the bit between his teeth, he almost flew over the ground, never pausing till he brought me to my own door. When I dismounted his terror seemed gone, but he hung his head in a dejected manner, like a horse that has been under the saddle all day. I have never witnessed another such incident of almost maddening fear. His terror and apprehension were like what we can imagine a man experiencing at sight of a ghost in some dark, solitary place. Yet he did not forcibly carry me away from it, as he might so easily have done; but, finding himself maintained by a "nature superior to his own," he preferred to face it. The incident did not impress me very much at the moment, but when I came to reflect that my sight was mere blindness compared with that of my horse, and it was not likely his imagination clothed any familiar natural object with fantastic terrors, it certainly did impress me very deeply.—London Field.

Useful Books.

If a scholar has little money for books, he should expend it mostly for works of reference, and so get a daily return for his outgo. So seems to have thought a young man of whom an exchange tells a story.

The agent for a new encyclopedia called upon the aforesaid young man and began to set forth the great merits of the work.

"No," said the young man, "I don't need it. I have an encyclopedia already."

"Which one is it?" inquired the canvasser.

The young man could not remember. Neither could he tell who published it; but it was a fine work in many large volumes.

"Do you ever use them?" asked the agent.

"Certainly—almost every day."

"In what line?"

"Oh, I press my trousers with them. They are splendid for that."

Unjust Taxation.

It is unjust to tax the stomach with burthens that it cannot bear. Many silly people thus tyrannize that faithful servitor until it rebels and punishes them as they deserve. Dyspepsia is usually the child of gastronomic folly, but whether this or the natural associate of inherent feebleness from childhood, it is surely and pleasantly remediable with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the finest and most highly sanctioned gastric tonic in existence. As a result of the tone imparted to the stomach, and the increased activity of its digestive and assimilative action, insured by the persistent use of this benign invigorant, general stamina is augmented, the nerves strengthened and tranquilized, and a tendency to insomnia and hypochondriasis defeated. Biliousness, chills and fever, rheumatism and kidney troubles are conquered by this admirable medicine.

Loud Enough.

Congressman McKenney, who ran as the Democratic nominee for Governor of New Hampshire, rarely gets the worst of it in repartee. Mr. McKenney was a parson before he became a Congressman, and can deliver a sermon or make a speech with equal ease. With him originated one of the classic stories of pulpit wit. During a canvass, Mr. McKenney was interrupted in the midst of a public prayer by a man who persisted in shouting "Louder!" Mr. McKenney could not ignore the call, so he merely looked at the interrupter, and coolly said: "I wasn't addressing you, sir. I was addressing the Almighty."

The Argument Used

By the makers of the second-class baking powders to induce the dealer to push them off on Royal consumers is that they cost less than Royal and afford the dealer much more profit.

But you, madam, are charged the same price for them as for the absolutely pure Royal, which is perfectly combined from the most highly refined and expensive materials. The lower cost of the others is caused by the cheap, impure materials used in them, and the haphazard way in which they are thrown together.

Do you wish to pay the price of the Royal for an inferior baking powder, made from impure goods, of 27 per cent. less strength? If you buy the other powders, insist upon having a corresponding reduction in price.

Saved by a Quick Hair Cut.

The usefulness of carrying a sharp jack-knife was shown the other day in a Lewiston mill, when one of the young women's hair came tumbling down as she passed a piece of heavy machinery and the ends of it caught in some slowly revolving cog-wheels, says the Lewiston Journal.

The girl screamed, but did not have the presence of mind to break away at once before more strands of hair were caught and dragged in. She stood there holding out her arms and screaming while her head was drawn nearer and nearer to the fatal wheels. Then up came a man with a sharp jack-knife. He compassed the hair of the girl within his left hand and held it firmly as he might a rope, and with the other hand severed the hair close to the wheels.

Poor Gentleman.

Mr. Ardesoif, a young man of vast fortune and position, was an ardent cock-fighter, and with one fowl had won many matches. This unhappy bird, however, chanced on one occasion to be beaten, whereupon his owner had it tied to a spit and roasted before a large fire alive. Its screams were so effecting that even Mr. Ardesoif's cock-fighting friends expostulated, whereupon he seized the poker, and, exclaiming that he would be the death of any one who interferred, fell down dead upon the spot. This circumstance is recorded in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1789. "If Mr. Ardesoif had his foibles," says the editor, "his merits greatly outweighed them."

Would Do Her Best.

According to the Western newspapers, the people of that part of the country are still taking lessons of their visiting cousins from the East.

A young lady from Boston was in Chicago, says the Tribune.

"Come and sit around the fire, Emersonia," said the hospitable relative.

"There are physical limitations which will prevent my doing that, Aunt Rachel," answered Miss Emersonia; "but with your permission I will sit in front of the fire."

Cosmopolitan Sure Enough.

A Southern California newspaper rounds out a birth notice in its columns as follows: "The child was the first Dutch infant born in the San Luis Valley. The notice is written by a Dane, put in type by a Mormon, the proof is read by an American, the type placed in the 'form' by a German, and the paper is printed by a Mexican. This affords an interesting notion of the composite character of the great American people of the far Southwest."

Enough Acknowledged.

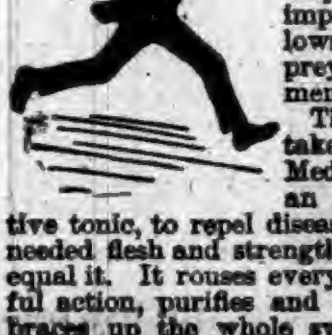
Accommodating.

Mr. Burleigh and his little boy were taking a walk in the woods one day in October, says Harper's Young People, and began looking for chestnuts.

The boy had poor luck, but presently observed with bulging eyes that his father had gathered a big double handful. A thought struck him.

"I say, papa," he said, "wouldn't you like to carry your chestnuts in my pocket?"



A "RUN DOWN" and "used-up" feeling is the first warning that your liver isn't doing its work. And, with a torpid liver and the impure blood that follows it, you're an easy prey to all sorts of ailments.

That is the time to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, to repel disease and build up the needed flesh and strength, there's nothing to equal it. It rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, braces up the whole system, and restores health and vigor.

For every disease caused by a disordered liver or impure blood, it is the only guaranteed remedy. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

$500 is offered, by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for an incurable case of Catarrh. Their remedy perfectly and permanently cures the worst cases.

Drs. Townsend Coming.

APRIL 18th.

Among many testimonials we find these: I had spinal curvature that doctors told me was incurable and I am now well. Another said: I was given up by fourteen doctors, who told me I had Bright's disease of the kidneys, but thanks to Drs. Townsend I am a well man. Another: I was bedriden for over ten years with a complication of female diseases. Some of the most eminent specialists, including three professors in medical colleges, and they all told me I could not get well. Four years ago I placed my case in the hands of the Drs. Townsend, and in 5 months and 4 days from the time I commenced treatment I dressed myself and walked across the room, and in another month I felt as well as I ever did in my life and have remained in excellent health ever since. Another says: I had epilepsy for fifteen years and was cured. Another: My whole nervous system was broken down and I was practically an old man at 31. I could not sleep, my hands trembled, I would get dizzy and forgetful and became so bad that I had to give up business. I consulted many doctors, the best I thought, in the country, and finally went to Europe, and spent over $9,000 and three years' time and was no better, but gradually got worse. I returned home to die and closed up all my business affairs. At last a friend, who had been cured, advised me to go to the Drs. Townsend. Without any faith, but to please him, I went, and to my great surprise they told me they could cure me, and they made good their their word, for from the first dose of medicine I commence to improve, and in twelve months I was completely cured. A lady says My case was pronounced to be tubercular consumption by seven of our best physicians, and under whose treatment I got worse all the time. The Drs. Townsend cured me in just four months. One says: I had catarrh that affected my head so I was almost crazy. It went into my ears, and oh! such a roaring, I was almost wild; it had gone down also upon my lungs and the doctor said it was the bronchitis. Thanks to the Drs. Townsend I am entirely well. Another says: I was cured of a bad cancer. A lady of great refinement, who had receiveed serious injuries during a confinement. was cured after other specialists utterly failed. Thousands a cases similar to the above might be cited.

Examination by letter or in person free and sacredly confidential. If unable to see the doctors write full peticulars: Thousands treated by correspondence. Address, with stamp:

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

By the last of March, thirty-one Auburn subscribers had paid in full, and $21,000 of the sum pledged had been raised but at the same time, the contractors had disbursed $26,000 to meet the expenses of construction. Delinquents were urged to meet their promises and struggled manfully to do so. There was something suggestive of heroism in the self denying efforts of the townspeople at this crisis and the sacrifices made by many, although not known to us by public record, were akin to the struggle of soldiers who fall unknown upon battlefields and pass into oblivion while an honored few who assumed leadership, received sole mention.

The question of securing a donation from Union township, was left to the voters many of whom were not taxpayers, and an election was held on May 23rd. The idea was to force those who would reap benefit to contribute aid by the power of a majority however unwilling and for the time, this vicious principle seemed to have been well employed. The contest was spirited and personal interests inspired those for and those against to use their utmost for success. The result in Waterloo City was for a railroad tax levy 104, against 207, majority adverse 103. In Auburn, the vote favoring was 172; against but 52, giving a majority for 121. It will thus be seen that the majority in favor of the tax in the township, was but eighteen. Simultaneously a similar election was held by the people of Wilmington township upon the question of a donation towards aiding construction of the Detroit & Logansport or what was familiarly known as the Eel River railroad. The township decided in favor of a tax by the light but decisive vote of 243 to 37. Jackson township by a small vote principally hostile to the measure, crushed all hopes of an appropriation from that quarter.

The railroad tax was levied in the townships of Union and Wilmington; it was collected, held in the county treasury pending a decision of the legality of proceedings which had been called in question and was ultimately turned over to the township trustees in whose hands it served to lighten subsequent taxation in those townships for many years.

The pernicious influence of elections, decided by a majority of interested parties combined with persons owning no property and paying no taxes, imposing burdensome taxation upon helpless minorities of taxpayers, shiftless loungers of towns against hard working property owners, cannot be too strongly deprecated. Elsewhere they have been known to cripple municipal credit, distress the citizen with onerous taxes and encourage ruinous expenditures for improvements good enough in themselves but beyond the ability of the people to pay. In the case in question, there was a natural sense of justice that as all were to share in expected advantages, all should contribute in proportion to ability to bring the road to completion.

The work went steadily forward but fell short of expectation. The road was not finished to Auburn by the 4th of July, but on the 14th of that month, the tracklayers had reached our town and it was not till Sept. 10, that the track was completed. Nearly a month later or on Oct. 5th, the successful result of so much concern and cost was signalized by a free excursion to Jackson, Mich. The train was crowded by our people desirous of enjoying the novelty of a ride upon the Ft. Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad. Many who went upon that excursion will recollect the blended (?) sense of discomfort and pleasure connected with the ride as they thus confirmed the reality of its construction and saw our town supplied at last with a commercial outlet.

All got ready to see the town grow as soon as the trains began to run but when the cars came they did not do all that was expected of them. We could get out into the world a good deal easier than we could before and we had all the facilities for transportation we could ask for but we could get away so easy that many of our people contracted the habit of going to Ft. Wayne to do their shopping at cash prices and bought at home on credit.

The road was good for Auburn but at first seemed better for its rival, north east, Waterloo City which now had two railroads and claimed in the columns of the local paper, that the early removal of of the county seat thither was a fixed fact as the completion of the new road had made the town, already more central, still more accessible. "We are advised" it said, "that the committee that have the matter in charge, are making progress and have been considering localities for sites of public buildings." There was no lack of parties who would liked to have sold grounds but the statement though plausible was premature. Auburn was not yet secure of her position as the county seat and although a good deal had been paid out to get the road, the facts stated regarding the city and the town to the south and north, settled the question that a town must have something more than a railroad running along its western border to give its real estate value and its business permanence.

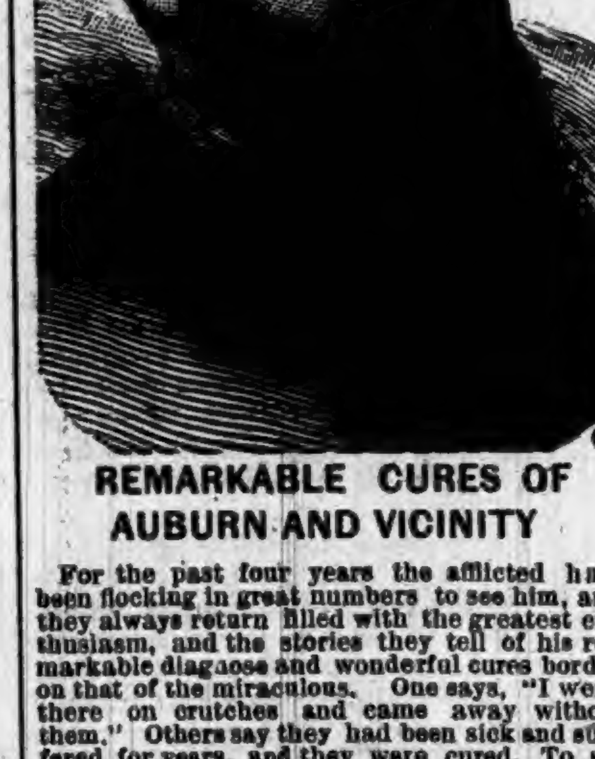
We have said that the new railroad was a harm as well as a help to Auburn but it was nevertheless a great advantage and marked the beginning of a change in the direction of stable prosperity. The fine grove standing west of the terminus of 5th street wherein pleasant assemblages had been wont to meet, was ruthlessly cut down and what is now the freight house of the road was erected. The low ground was partially filled in, and Messrs. T. D. Gross and W. H. Dills platted a tract known as the Gross & Dills Addition. It was gratifying to at last hear the shriek of a locomotive whistle and the rumble of passing trains and it was a convenience to people from Corunna, Waterloo and northward from Butler, who had business at the county seat to come and go with expedition.

(To be continued next week.)

Dr. I. S. Townsend & Brothers,

Consultation Free.

At the Swineford House, Tuesday April 18th. One Day Only.



REMARKABLE CURES OF AUBURN AND VICINITY

For the past four years the afflicted have been flocking in great numbers to see him, and they always return filled with the greatest enthusiasm, and the stories they tell of his remarkable diagnose and wonderful cures border on that of the miraculous. One says, "I went there on crutches and came away without them." Others say they had been sick and suffered for years, and they were cured. To see him and to be treated by him means health.

He asks no questions but gives a full history of each case as soon as he sees the patient, telling better how a person feels than they can tell it themselves. His knowledge seems perfect and his medicines are specific. They never fail. The work he accomplishes is truly astonishing.

There is no need to live in constant misery. It cost nothing to see him. The fullest examinations are free, A cure can be had for the mere cost of the medicine, He is the sick man's friend and no one is turned away unaided.

One of Auburn's most respected citizens Mr. M. N. Ward of Auburn, on the corner of Second and Jackson street, says: "I came to see Doctor Townsand four weeks ago I could hardly walk to the doctor's room without help. I have had heart disease and weak lungs and catrrah in my head for 20 years and was given up b the best physicans. I had rheumatism so my joints was so stiff I could not walk and my head hurt me so I could not rest or sleep. I was nearly deaf in right ear, but now can hear as well as I ever could. My neighbors all know how I have suffered. I can hear the clock tick in both ears, I thank God I feel well. Doctor Townsend has cured me. I have not been able to work for over one year, doctoring and taking patent medicines. I feel I am able to do two men'8 work now, have gained in flesh. I advise all to call on Doctor Townsend and be cured, I am willing to see any one and tell how bad I was, and let them see how well I am now,

Another respected lady of Auburn, Mrs. Rebecca Dickinson who has had a complication of diseases stomach, kidney, heart and lung disease and neuralgia pains all over, her limbs swollen so she could not step on them. She now feels nearly well, her pains have left her and her heart is well and she feels better every way.

Mr. Ward says his eye sight was so bad he could hardly see. He now feels that he could dispense with his glasses. The Docter performed over twenty cures on his last visit. He will forfeit $5 00 for any case of cataarh he cannot cure. An eye witness to a lady who was helped to the doctor's room four weeks ago, is now doing her own work.

My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could find nothing that would afford her any relief, and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial. To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. E. H. Johnson, of C. J. Successful Always.

Two million, two hundred and twenty-eight thousand, six hundred and seventy-two bottles sold in one year, and each and every bottle was sold on a positive guarantee that money would be refunded if satisfactory results did not follow its use. The secret of its success is plain. It never disappoints and can always be depended on as the very best remedy for coughs, cold, etc. Price 50c. and $1.00. At Robbins & McCord's drugstore. 6

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kincheloe,

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

The L. M. C. was held this week Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Phil Plum.

Mrs. Wm. Jackman in the country has been very sick. She is now better, but still compelled to keep her bed.

Mrs. George Wareham died Monday afternoon. She lived in the first ward, and has been ill for some time, and quite low for several days.

Rev. Mr. Suman and family took their departure from Waterloo Wednesday afternoon of last week for their new home for this year at Napanee, Ind.

Mrs. Bigler is here to sell her stock of millinery goods at cost in order that the building she has rented for a bakery may be empty, by the time an oven is built, and ready for use.

Bert Baker has rented the building on South Wayne street, owned by Mrs. Wm. Bigler, and where she formerly did business. Mr. Baker will soon open up here in the bakery business, which he claims to understand in all its parts.

Mrs. Charles Nodine died Monday night. She had been sick for some time with a complication of diseases and suffered much. Her physicians had little if any expectation of her recovery only hoping to alleviate her suffering.

Wesley Gary, wife and child came last week Wednesday on a visit to his father Noah Gary in the West part of town. They returned the following day, to their home in Toledo. The grandfather as is usual is very proud of his grandson.

H. C. Thompson has come here with the intention of starting a steam laundty, he will without doubt find abundant patronage. He came from Alexandria, Ind., and has moved his family into a house in the west end of town, owned by Miss Anthony, of whom he rents.

A number of varieties of hardy spring flowers, are making themselves lovely to the sight, and the beds of viola odorata, as its name implies, perfumes the air. The prevailing colors thus far are yellow, blue and purple as well as white buds are showing already of which the blossoms will give other shades and colors.

Garden making has commenced almost a month earlier than usual, and ground that is ordinarily only fit for spading by the middle of May, has now been in good condition for some time. If only the moles and snails will not get in their work as for two years past, the prospects are good for early vegetables.

BUTLER.

Father McDannel living two miles east of town is reported very poorly and from his extreme age is not very likely to recover.

Rev. Alonzo Gaff, of Sulphur Springs, Ohio, has been summonds to the bedside of his aged father, who is dangerously ill, with meager hopes of recovery.

The ladies of the M. E. church have been mainly instrumental in its remodeling and the interior presents a very inviting appearance. They are to have an experience meeting Tuesday night and an enjoyable literary feast is anticipated.

Rev. Kain filled the M. E pulpit last Sabbath most acceptably, and judging from the remarks of many of the hearers that filled the large auditorium, must have given general satisfaction. He has a good voice, of large compass and when awakened by the them of his discourses becomes quite eloquent. We bespeak for him good houses, a liberal support and material success.

The all absorbing topic of conversation on our streets for the past few days has been the fatal shooting affary in which Thomas Revett acting in the capacity of deputy marshal, and we believe armed with a legal writ from a proper civil tribunal, shot and almost instantly killed Warren Blackwell, who at the muzzle of a loaded shot gun resisted the officer in making his arrest. The circumstance is deplorable, yet when all the facts are presented, is shorn of part of its apparent barbarity. It is asserted that the deceased threatened repeatedly to kill the officers if they attempted his arrest, and to add emphasis to his threat actually shot at the officer, the ball passing within a short nistance of his body near his heart, and with a loaded shot gun pointed at the officer and within a few feet of him, snaped a cap, but the gun failed to be discharged, or the officer would have been the victim instead of the violater of the law. Many think the court and officers exercised undue haste in making the arrest while the deceased was crazily intoxicated. This, as the sequel proved is perhaps true, yet if every violator of the law was allowed his freedom when he is most likely to do his worst deeds, society might suffer many injuries, that the wisdom of the law prevents by taking the would be violators of its provisions into custody before the overt act is performed If the venders of liquor who knew his habits, and that he was dangerous if under its influence, had obeyed the law, and refused him the liquor, an otherwise good citizen, husband and father might have been saved to his wife and family and an officer in the discharge of a painful duty, been saved the bitter reflections that savors so much of murder that will haunt him the rest of his life.

Their Last Day of School

April 8, 1893 being the last day of school at District No. 11 of Richland township, and the school patrons with many others from adjoining neighborhoods and a number from Garrett, gathered at an early hour to listen to the school exercises, which consisted in reading, history, number class and arithmetic classes, all of which did very well. The advanced class in arithmetic recited on the last page, but one, in the Complete Arithmetic, to which they had advanced during the present term, which was doing exceedingly well, as did all the other classes The school then adjourned for dinner; and such a dinner! to say it was one of the grandest dinners for the occasion that we ever sat down to, is not mistaking it in the least; To attempt to enumerate the different kinds of eatables of which the dinner was composed would meet with a failure, for they were so numerous that time and space would not allow us to do it. The afternoon was spent in listening to declamations, dialogues and comically rendered music with French harp and bones with bell accompanment, all of which were rendered by the school. We were assisted in our exercises by that ever willing and efficient singing teacher, Mr. E. Texter, who with his able assistants, Miss Loutzenhiser, Mrs. Alice Friedt and Mrs. Malinda Loutzenhiser, rendered several songs which were well chosen for the occasion. At the conclusion of the exercises the school made their teacher a very nice present consisting of quilt blocks composed of a portion of each pupil's garments, so arranged as to show each pupil's name, indelibly stamped on the center of its block. They could not have chosen anything that would have suited their teacher any better or serve a better pupose in assisting him in remembering those whom he so greatly loves.

In conclusion the teacher wishes to say that he feels to thank the patrons, parents, school officers and scholars for their kindness shown to him during the seven months of school that he was with them.

Obituary.

Samuel Shade was born in Crawford county, Ohio, Nov. 25, 1844, and died March 30, 1893, aged 48 years, 4 months and 5 days. His childhood and later years of boyhood were spent with his parents, who subsequently moved to Paulding county, Ohio, where he lived at the beginning of the Civil war. Here we find him the deceased at the stage of youthful manhood, only seventeen years old, standing at the shrine of his country's altar offering his services, his life, if necessary, for the preservation of his country and flag. He enlisted in the 68th regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, on the 31st day of October, 1861, for three years, or during the war. The regiment was assigned to Grant's command and began services at once in all of the leading battles of that campaign, beginning at Shiloh, Murfreesboro, Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, Donaldson and Fort Fisher. On December 10, 1863, after serving more than two years of his time, he again emphasized his loyalty by relisting as a veteran for three more years in the same regiment. The regiment joined Sherman on the memorable march to the sea, and the battles of Atlanta, Kennesaw, Resaca, and Savannah were added to his fiercest engagements of the Civil war. At the close of the war he marched with his regiment to Washington and took part in the grand review, after which he was mustered out of the service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865. He came to Steuben county, making his home with his uncle, David Shade, near Custer, Indiana, where he was converted and buried with Christ in baptism. He was united in marriage to Emeline F. Houser, Dec. 14, 1871, since which time he has resided in the near vicinity of his present home, one mile north of Turkey Creek. In Feb. 1892, he had an attack of lagrip which, together with diseases contracted from exposure to army life, resulted in death. He was patient and uncomplaining during a year's illness, and died in triumph of a living faith. While we deeply mourn the loss of a brother, weep with the bereaved wife and daughters, we sorrow not as those who have no hope. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The funeral was conducted by Rev. Mr. Bumpus at the Custer church Fairfield township, the interment being in Lake View cemetery at Kendallville.

Obituary.

Catharine Sherck was born in Union Co. Penn. Oct. 25, 1813 and died April 12, 1893 aged 79 years, 5 months and 17 days. She moved with her parents to Wayne county, Ohio, where she remained until grown to womanhood. She was united in marriage to Rev. John Sherck, January 15, 1845. They lived in Wayne county, Ohio, until the year 1870 when they removed to DeKalb county, Ind., where she lived until called from labor to reward. She embraced Christ while young and joined the Evangelical association about 1847 and remained a consistent christian until death. She leaves two sons Abram and Joseph, two brothers, one sister, nine children, two great grand children and many friends to mourn her departure. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. Truly our loss is her eternal gain, and we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well. The funeral was at Union Chapel, April 13, at 2 p. m., the services being conducted by Rev. D. C. Sheldon, and she was laid to rest in the Cooper cemetery by the side of her husband.

FRIGHTFUL EXPLOSION.

NITRO-GLYCERINE WORKS ARE BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Terrible Disaster at a Minnesota Mine—Scorpion Scourge in Mexico—Business Portion of Plymouth, Mich., Burned—Attempt to Wreck a Pay Train.

LOADED PIPE.

Terrible Disaster at a Minnesota Mine.

Tower (Minn.) special: Intense excitement, profound sorrow, bereaved families briefly sum up the condition of affairs which prevail in the residence district of the Minnesota mine near this city. The most disastrous fire in the history of the mine occurred recently, when three men were killed outright, nine others suffered serious injuries, two of whom will probably die. Several others were slightly injured.

The accident occurred at the mine blacksmith shops, where about twenty men are employed, nearly every one of whom sustained at least slight injuries. Three men, Nettie, Zollar, and Nelson, were engaged in breaking up a lot of worthless gas pipe before throwing it into the scrap pile. The pipe was being put under a 1,200 pound steam hammer and broken into such lengths as would permit its easy handling. The men had been engaged in this work for nearly an hour, when suddenly a terrific report sounded, and when the smoke cleared away a terrible sight presented itself. A crowd soon gathered, and the work of carrying the injured to the mine hospital commenced. Nettie, Nelson, and Koshavir died almost instantly, none of them living over twenty minutes. For over four hours Doctors Harwood and Richardson were busy dressing the wounds of the surviving injured. Phil. Marshead and James Mahoney cannot recover, both having suffered greatly from the loss of blood. The explosion was no doubt due to the presence of a quantity of dynamite in the pipes, which had at some time been used as a "gun" in opening "raises," that had become clogged.

Business Houses at Plymouth, Mich., Burned.

Fire was discovered in George Vandecar's barber shop, at Plymouth, Mich., and within two hours residents of that village were $60,000 poorer. The business block at the cornet of Main and Sutton street, was destroyed. Help was sent from Detroit, but the visiting firemen arrived too late to stop the progress of the flames. The following were burned out: George Vandecar, barber; Chaffee & Hunter, boots and shoes; Miss Nellie Steele, millinery; Alfred D. Lincoln, hardware; John L. Gale, drugs; A. H. Dibble, boots and shoes; Bassett & Son, furniture; R. G. Hall, dry goods; First National Bank.

Nitro-Glycerine Works Blown to Atoms.

Lima (Ohio) special: A terrific explosion of nitro-glycerine occurred at the High Explosive Company's magazine, two miles from this city. Clark Robinson's head was torn off. Benjamin Dowe, the man who had a huge gash blown in his side at a previous explosion three months ago, was blown forty feet and so badly injured that he died before he was taken to the ambulance. The force of the explosion shook houses and broke windows two miles from the scene. The cause of the explosion was that a run of glycerine caught fire from the friction and before the men could escape it exploded.

Scorpion Scourge.

Derango (Mex.) special: Scorpions have become so numerous in this city that the municipal authorities have offered a prize to be given the person capturing the largest number this month. Two thousand of the deadly pests were killed at the hospital here in one day. For these scorpions the city pays sixty cents per hundred.

Attempt to Wreck a Pay Train.

An attempt was made to wreck the Chicago and Eastern Illinois pay car two miles north of Brazil, Ind. The train was running forty miles an hour when the engine jumped the track, and stopped in the middle of a high trestle. It is claimed that a heavy piece of iron was placed on the rails.

The Observations Successful.

Director Holden of the Lick Observatory, San Francisco, received a telegram from Professor Schaeberle that the Lick Observatory expedition to observe the Solar eclipse in Chile has been successful in every respect. Fifty photographs were secured by the professor and his assistants.

Mills Burned.

The Enon Paper Mills at Enon Station, Ohio, eight miles west of Springfield, were burned to the ground. The mills are owned by the Columbian Paper Mill Company of New York. A conservative estimate of the loss places it at $100,000; insurance, small.

Peoria Election.

The city election at Peoria, Ill., resulted in the success of the entire Republican ticket by majorities ranging from 2,000 to 3,000, the latter figure being the majority for Philo B. Miles for Mayor.

A $40,000 Fire.

The house, cow barns, and other buildings, covering three acres on the Windsor farm, owned by William H. Bush, six miles from Denver, were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $40,000.

A Disastrous Conflagration.

Buda Pesth special: The village of Gazladany has been visited by a most disastrous conflagration. One hundred and twenty houses were destroyed and two persons were killed.

A Peanut Roaster Explodes.

A curious accident occurred on Illinois street, Indianapolis, one of the most crowded business throughfares in the city. A steam peanut roaster in front of S. J. Frances' cigar store exploded, the force of the explosion sending the machine crashing through the heavy plate glass window of the store. Frances, who stood behind the window, was showered with the flying glass and his face slashed with seven deep cuts. J. W. Caldwell, a traveling man from Chicago, who was making a purchase in the store, was badly cut about the head. Ed. McGaw and Otto Schmuck, passers by, were more or less seriously cut by flying glass and two or three women were slightly scratched in the same manner.

ASIATIC CHOLERA

Has Made Its Appearance in Winnipeg.

St. Paul special: A man who arrived here from Winnipeg stated that Asiatic cholera has found its way to Winnipeg. Last week there arrived there on the Canadian Pacific railway 256 immigrants from Europe, many of them from Southern Russia. They came to Montreal in the steamer Vancouver, and were destined, it is said, for the United States. They came from cholera infected districts and were not allowed to come into the United States. They were shipped by the Canadian Pacific to Winnipeg in the expectation of going from that point into North Dakota and elsewhere in the American Northwest. Cholera broke out among these immigrants at or on the way to Fort William, a station on the Canadian Pacific on Lake Superior. A man died of the disease on one of the cars. The car was quarantined at Fort William and the rest of the immigrant train sent on to Winnipeg in different sections. On the way to Winnipeg a child died of the disease on one of the cars and three other passengers fell sick. On arriving at Winnipeg, this state of affairs becoming known, the authorities became alarmed. They also learned that the passengers on the infected cars had been allowed to mingle with the railroad employes and other citizens of Winnipeg. All the passengers of the three cars were promptly quarantined.

VARNISH EXPLODES,

Wrecking the Building and Injuring Four Persons.

Louisville (Ky.) special: The big plant of the Hegan Mantle Manufacturing Company, in an alley opening on Fourth street, next to the new Custom house, was partly destroyed by fire, and four persons were injured. The fire broke out on the third floor of the main building, and originated from a stove. The flames spread through the building and barrels of varnish exploded. The end of the building next to Fourth street was blown out and the back porches of three old residences demolished. A number of persons were standing on them watching the fire, and they were hurled in the debris. Mrs. J. T. Jones was probably fatally injured, three of Ben Alford's ribs were broken, and an unknown woman and D. P. Faulds sustained painful bruises. They were all completely covered with brick. The property loss is $100,000, covered by insurance. Three alarms were sent out, and it took fifteen fire companies to subdue the flames.

Struck by Lightning.

Nashville special: Fairview stud, the home of St. Blaize, was the scene of a terrible destruction recently. A bolt of lightning struck a large brood mare barn and completely destroyed it, together with its contents, consisting of a large amount of hay, 2,500 bushels of oats, and twenty-eight head of thoroughbred brood mares, most of them in foal. Charles Reed, owner of the stud, was asleep at the time, and when awakened and informed of the destruction simply remarked, "All right, it cannot be helped." He did not even visit the scene, and has not made up a list of the mares killed. It is known that one of the mares belonged to Turfman Keene, and was valued at $8,000. Mr. Reed's loss will amount from $80,000 to $100,000. Lightning also struck Horatio Berry's barn in the same neighborhood and killed two brood mares.

Mines Ablaze.

Deadwood (S. D.) special: The underground workings of the Deadwood terra mine, one of the great Howe stake group, is on fire, and is burning fiercely. The fire started in the 200 foot level and it is feared is eating its way to the workings of the other mines, which are all connected. All the mines and mills of the group are shut down and 1,000 men are idle. If the fire eats away the timber supports in the slopes or chambers, whole acres of the earth's surface, part of which is densely settled, will cave in, entailing large loss of property. Two or three hundred men are at work fighting the fire, but they make little headway, being driven back by gas and smoke.

An Unusual Ceremony.

An unusual ceremony, one that has never taken place outside of Turkey, will be the dedication of the World's Fair Turkish Mosque in the Midway Plaisance, Friday, April 28th. The ceremony will be conducted under the auspices of the ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, an organization which has flourished in Turkey many years before it gained a footing in this country. Noble Robert Levy of Constantinople, who is the concessioner of the Sultan of Turkey, has invited all members of Medinah Temple of Chicago and all visiting shriners to be present in a body at the dedication of the Mosque, and to partake of a Turkish lunch within its walls.

"Boys, I'm Gone."

The workmen at the stave factory south of Bowling Green, Ohio, were the witnesses of a horrible death met by T. E. Dennis. He in some manner fell into an edging saw. The saw penetrated through his left breast and lungs, and, severing the coverings of the heart, it could be seen plainly. It is supposed that while leaning over the saw his suspenders caught in it, drawing him onto it. A horrible sight was witnessed when he walked away from the saw, trying to hold the big gash from which was freely flowing his life blood away, and only capable of saying, "Boys I am gone," and immediately fell dead on the floor.

Must Begin Again.

Cleveland special: The Lake Shore engineers who presented their request to be returned to work after their discharge by the company on account of the trouble at Toledo over the strike on the Toledo and Ann Arbor railroad have been notified by General Superintendent Caniff of the Lake Shore, that they might come back to work on the road but not in their old places. In other words they could begin at the botton of the ladder and work up again. This decision was reached after twenty-four hours' deliberation over the matter by the officers of the road.

Negro Murderer Shot to Death.

On the line of the Atlanta and Georgia Railroad, Jeff D. Barnett, a young white storekeeper, near the line of Quitman and Clay Counties in Georgia, was found dying in a pool of blood in his store the other morning. A posse of whites and blacks was organized and after a six mile chase captured the negro murderer, who confessed his crime, giving his name as Ed, only. He fired several shots at the posse before captured. The posse tied him and shot him to death, then piled fence rails on the body, saturated them with oil and burned it.

The Brutal Treatment of an Old Lady by Masked Men.

Old Mrs. Pruett, living near Coffee Landing, Tenn., was hanged by two masked men several nights ago, and some time since Clay Pruett's wife was shot and killed either by her own hand or that of some unknown party, and it is believed that the reason she was thus brutally treated is that she knew who killed the younger Mrs. Pruett, and these masked parties were trying to extort this information from her. Although badly tortured, it is thought the old woman will recover.

Irish Home Rule.

London special: An important statement is made in regard to the Irish Home Rule bill. It is to the effect that when the bill reaches the committee stage a large section of radicals will support a proposal to leave the Counties of Londondery, Antrim, Down, and Armagh, in the province of Ulster, under Imperial rule, these being the Counties in which the Unionist element is strongest. It is considered doubtful that Mr. Gladstone would assent to such a scheme even if the Irish Nationalist members were willing to do so. The proposition means the disolution of Ireland and the Irish Legislature created under it would represent only a portion of the country.

An Abandoned Ship.

The British steamship Gaston, which has arrived at Philadelphia from Sagua, Cuba, reports that on April 9 she sighted the abandoned German bark John Wilhelm. Her boats were gone, but otherwise the bark was little damaged. The seas were at the time running too heavily to admit of the Gaston's towing the Wilhelm, so the abandoned bark was left adrift. The Wilhelm left Darien, Ga., on March 20, for Antwerp, with a large and valuable cargo of yellow pine. She was commanded by Captain Hegelle, and was owned by A. Gilson of Dantzic. It is feared that Captain Hegelle and his crew are lost.

A Great Oil Fire.

The A. S. Holmes oil refinery at Buffalo, N. Y., covering twelve acres of ground, was destroyed by fire together with twenty freight cars and a train of oil cars. Thirty thousand barrels of oil were also burned. The fire was started by an engine dropping coals in some oil, which was running on top of the water in a little ditch. The wind blew the flames into the works and an explosion followed. Thomas Tracy was badly injured. Three firemen were slightly injured by one of the explosions. The loss will be heavy.

Paid the Penalty of Their Crimes.

John Hill, a colored lad of 19 years was hanged at Camden, N. J., for the fatal shooting on October 16 last of Joseph Dodson, also colored. Dodson was but 21 years of age.

William Bond, colored, 23 years of age, was hanged in the jail yard at Rockville, Md., for the murder on November 23, 1891, of Margaret Cephas, also colored. Bond was convicted on circumstantial evidence, which went to show that he was drunk and had attempted a criminal assault upon the woman.

The Issue of Gold Certificates Suspended.

An order has been received at the Sub-Treasury at New York for the suspension of the issue of gold certificates, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of July 12, 1882, which says that when the gold coin or bullion held in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes falls below $100,000,000 the issue of the certificates shall cease.

Cost of the World's Fair.

Auditor Ackerman has made a report showing that the building of the World's Fair has already cost $16,708,826, twice the sum expended for the Paris Exposition, and more must yet be paid out. The snow-storms and hard weather necessitated an extra expense. There is at present a cash balance of $626,396, and $2,361,263 due on contracts.

A Double Murder.

A double murder was committed two miles north of Clinton, Ill. Mat Bitner, a Bohemian, shot his wife and Mrs. Arthur Burne, the wife of a prominent farmer, and threw their bodies in the cellar and burned the house. Sheriff Barr and 300 men are in pursuit of Bitner. He will probably be lynched when captured.

Two Miners Killed.

By the falling of part of the roof in T. J. Woods "Champion" coal mine at Woods Run, Pa., James Wilburn, aged 40 and Dell Butler, aged 19, were killed. William Carson, William Hart, and Charles Butler, were badly hurt. Wilburn leaves a family of wife and two small children.

Toledo Wants Damages.

At Toledo, City Solicitor Read has filed suit on behalf of the city against the Standard Oil Company. The defendants are charged with alleged conspiracy to prevent the city of Toledo from constructing a natural gas pipe line and plant. The city asks for $1,000,000 damages.

Substantial Aid for Home Rulers.

Mr. Eugene Kelly, the Treasurer of the National Federation of America, subscribes $1,000 to the Home Rule fund and has cabled, through Eugene Kelly & Co., $10,000 to the Hon. Justin McCarty, M. P., for the use of the Irish parliamentary party.

Suicide.

Jacob Dittman, an old citizen of Lancaster, Ohio, aged 88, suicided in his stable by nearly severing his head with a razor. No cause is known, except that he was probably tired of life, and melancholy over the death of an old friend.

Great Crop Damages.

Batesville (Miss.) special: The railroad here is under water and the rain has destroyed growing crops along the Tallahassee River. It is estimated that $200,000 will not cover the damage in Panol County.

FAIR WORK ON SUNDAY

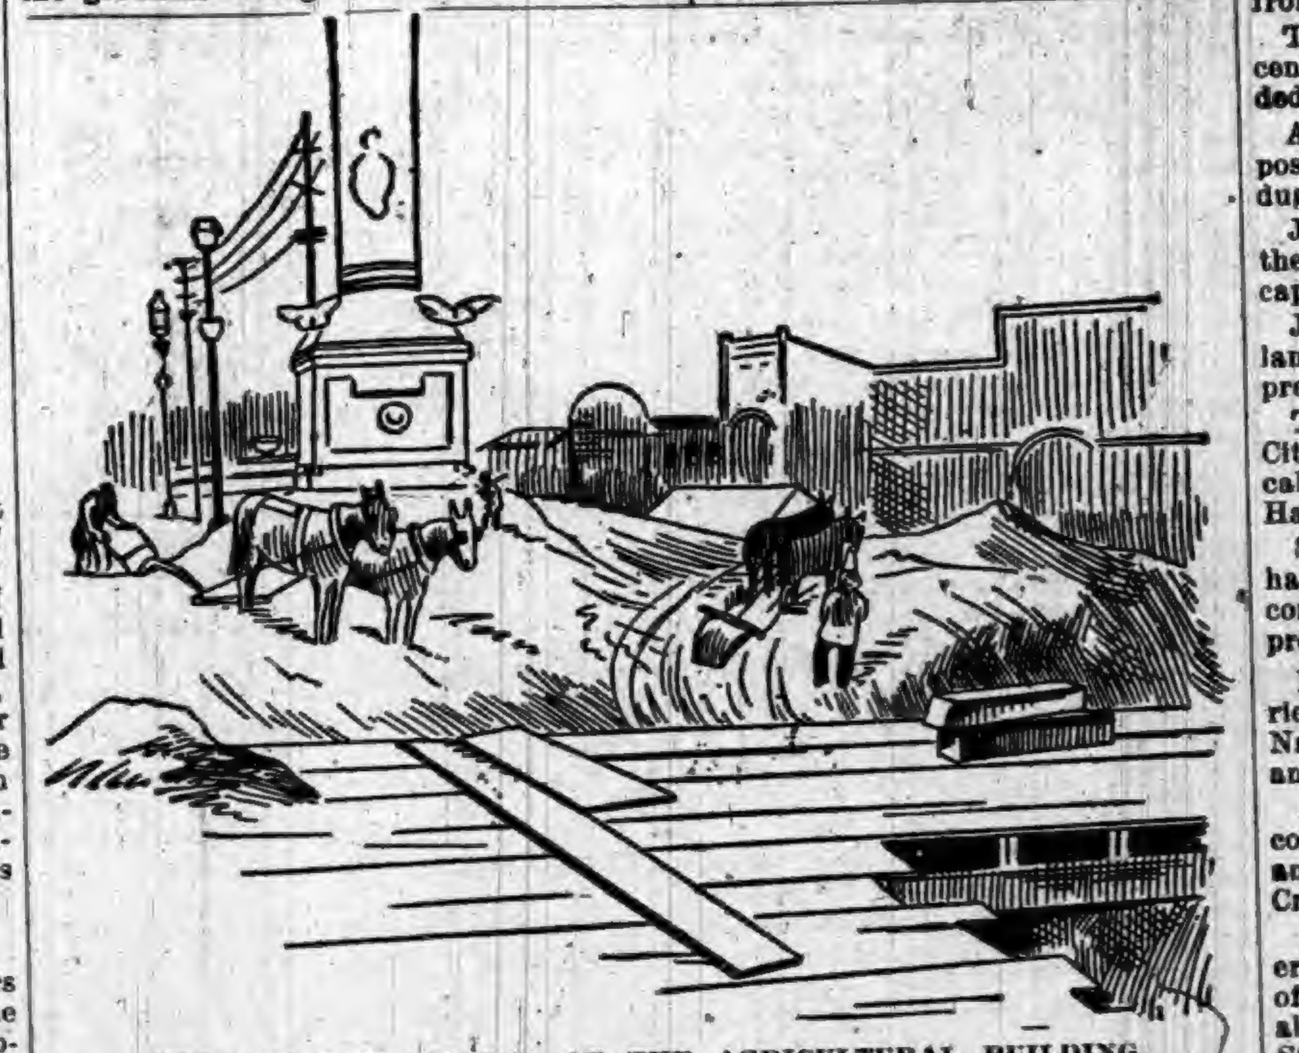
THOUSANDS EMPLOYED AT JACKSON PARK.

More Visitors Paid Admission Fees Last Sunday than Upon Any Preceding Day—The White City Will Open Its Gates on Time.

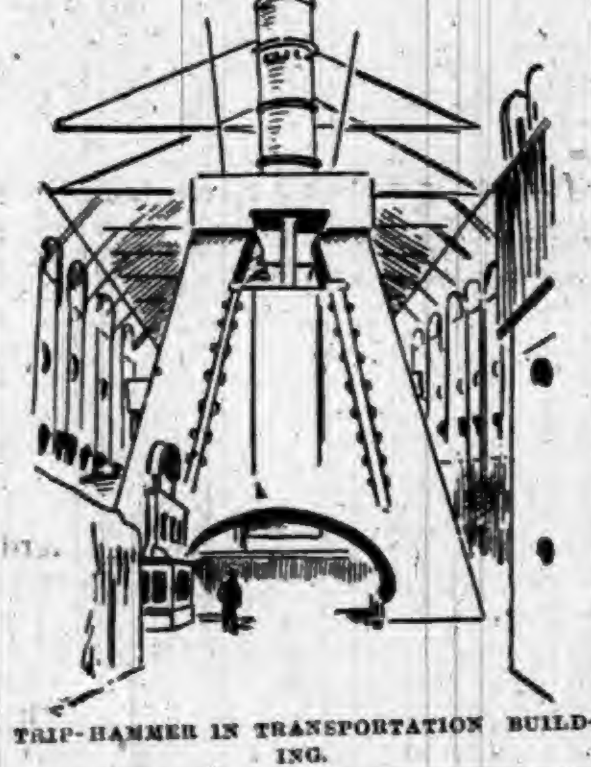
Going On with a Rush.

Chicago correspondence:

Sunday has ceased to be a day of rest at the World's Fair grounds. It is almost as busy as any other day. Last Sunday was, perhaps, the busiest one the park has known since that gang of Italian laborers went in to level off the grounds and was promptly driven out by a bigger gang of native workmen. That was about two years ago. Last Sunday there were lively scenes all over the grounds. Long trains of exhibits came rumbling into the grounds, workmen were busy in all the buildings, and the park was thronged with visitors. The turnstiles showed a big attendance. When Captain Horace Elliott went around to all the gates just as the sun was dipping below Midway Plaisance he learned that 11,904 people had paid to get into the park. But that was not all the crowd that came out. Six thousand more tramped through Midway Plaisance to see the Arabs in their voluminous robes of bright calico and the people from Java, who are putting up houses, woven like the baskets that Delaware peaches and Indiana cantaleups come in later in the season. No charge is made to get in Midway. The 6,000 people who strutted by the Columbian guard at Sixtieth street and Cottage Grove avenue stopped when they got down at the other end, where the turnstiles were clicking a lively tune.



GRADING THE GROUND AT THE AGRICULTURAL BUILDING.



TRIP-HAMMER IN TRANSPORTATION BUILDING.

There is no occasion whatever for worry about the World's Fair not being ready to open on May 1. A big conflagration or a severe earthquake might prevent, but nothing else that can be anticipated will be likely to interfere. There has been so much doubt on this point that it has been necessary to assure the public from time to time that everything was in the best possible condition under the circumstances, and that doubtless all would be in readiness on the appointed day. Now, after another careful examination of everything and interviews with all the heads of departments on whom the opening actually depends, it is possible to assert that when the Fair opens on May 1 it will be in a far better condition than any world's fair ever held.

"I declare," said Director General Davis recently, "that if the exhibitors will keep up the hurry that is now going on May 1st will find the Exposition nearer a complete whole than its most sanguine friend expected. There never yet was a World's fair that was entirely ready on the day of its opening. I do not suppose any intelligent person expects that. But, in spite of unexpected hindrances, in spite of unforeseen opposition, we are ahead. I do not wish to overstate the situation."

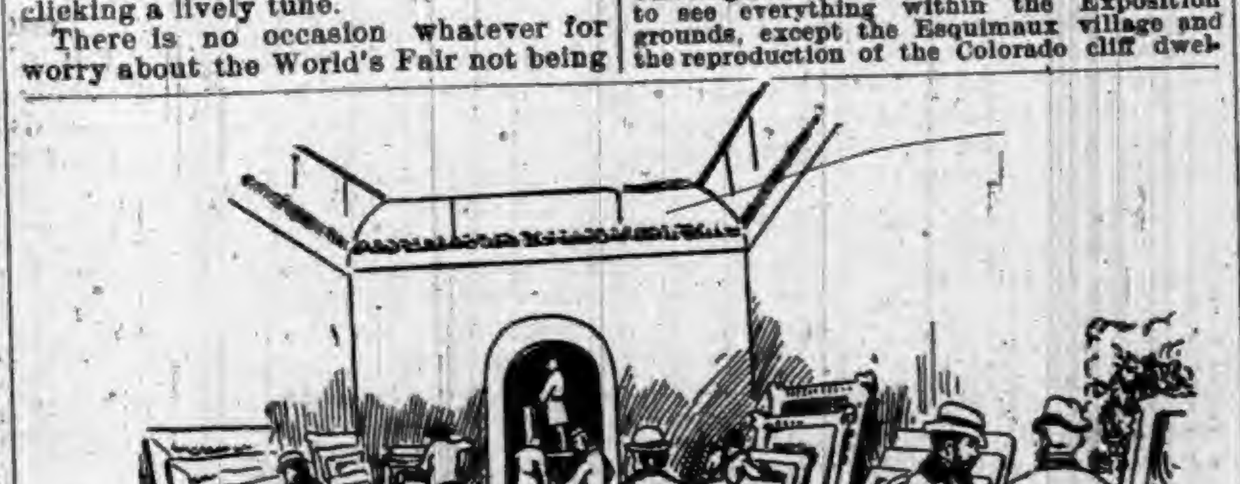
And so it was with all others. Every man having control of any department that could in any way promote or impede the opening has staked his reputation for veracity and ability on the result, and nothing on the subject now remains to be said.

On the Manufactures Building men are working day and night, stopping only for their meals. The exhibits are rapidly being placed, and everything is very satisfactory. The same may be said of the Transportation and Electricity Buildings, the Liberal Arts, the Agricultural and Mines and Mining Buildings, and of the various State and foreign buildings. Nobody connected with any of them has any time to waste in worrying, and there certainly seems no need for it. Armies of men are at work everywhere, exhibits are being rapidly placed and everybody says things are satisfactory.

Machinery Hall presents the busiest scene on the grounds. It must be ready. A failure here would be disastrous, for without power to move the machinery in the other buildings the opening would not be at all successful. Men are at work day and night here, too, and when President Cleveland touches the button that starts things going on May 1 it is quite safe to predict that Machinery Hall will do the rest.

There are to be 500 gates at the hundred different entrances at the Fair grounds, and they will be very handsome affairs of wire netting, steel and iron. Each of them will be provided with a self-registering automatic turnstile that will require the attendance of but one man at each gate. This official will take the ticket, see that it is all right, drop it in an opening in the gate-post, and press a short lever that will at the same time "chop" the ticket and unlock the gate. Then the visitor presses against the turnstile and walks in, registering his own admission. It will be very difficult for either gateman or visitor to cheat this contrivance, for if the number of mutilated tickets in the box does not correspond to the number of admissions registered by the turnstile the gateman will be held responsible for the difference, and there is no possibility of any one's passing through without his knowledge, as by a simple motion of his hand he can lock the gate and hold the crowd back as long as he pleases.

It is going to cost a whole lot of money to make and print the tickets for the "choppers" of these stiles to destroy. A beautiful design has been selected, and the paper will be made especially for the purpose. At first thought this would seem to be money wasted, but the astute Board of Managers knows of the tendency people have to preserve such things as mementos, and estimates that a very large amount can be realized on the sale of tickets that will never be used.



SCENE IN ONE OF THE ART PALACE GALLERIES.

Expense of Attending the Fair.

Answering the misrepresentations and falsehoods that have been circulated by the enemies of the Exposition, the following statement is complete and concise. It should be carefully consulted by those who expect to visit Chicago during the summer:

The Exposition will be opened for visitors on May 1.

An abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all. The report that a charge would be made for drinking water probably arose from the fact that Hygeia water can also be had by those who may desire it at 1 cent a glass.

Ample provisions for seating will be made without charge.

About 1,500 toilet rooms and closets will be located at convenient points in the buildings and about the grounds, and they will be absolutely free to the public. This is as large a number in proportion to the estimated attendance as has ever been provided in any exposition. In addition to these there will also be nearly an equal number of lavatories and toilet rooms of a costly and handsome character as exhibits, for the use of which a charge of 5 cents will be made.

The admission fee of 50 cents will entitle the visitor to see and enter all the Exposition buildings, inspect the exhibits, and in short, to see everything within the Exposition grounds, except the Esquimaux village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellings. For these, as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance, a small fee will be charged.

Imposition or extortion of any description will not be tolerated.

Free medical and emergency hospital service is provided on the grounds by the Exposition management.

The Bureau of Public Comfort will provide commodious free waiting rooms, including spacious ladies' parlor and toilet rooms in various parts of the grounds.

H. N. HIGINBOTHAM, President.

Fifteen Thousand Men at Work.

According to the closest possible estimates, 15,000 men went to work at Jackson park Monday, an increase of over 1,100 over the strongest force that has been inside the gates since dedication. Director of Works Burnham was in a very comfortable frame of mind over the settlement of labor troubles and the subsequent increased activity in all the construction and installation forces. "We have a full force in the department of works," he said in answer to a query, "and are moving along all right. I should say we had 3,000 men of our own besides the labor employed by contractors on exposition work. That includes the landscape, installation, color and carpentry divisions. The contractors have all their old men back and a good many more besides. It would be hard to say without an actual count just how many men are at work inside the fence and on the plaisance, but it is enough to make things move along at a lively pace."

She believed and told every one she met that unless they passed under her flag they could not enter the kingdom of Heaven. The deceased has been a resident of Wabash for about fifty years.

The records at the office of the Secretary of State show that large sums of money are being invested in the State at present by local and foreign capitalists. The number of new companies that have been organized and incorporated in Indiana since January 1, has been the largest in the history of the Secretary's office. The total amount of capital the companies and associations represent is about $15,000,000. The investment of the capital is principally in the gas belt. Indianapolis is also the home office of many of the new and larger incorporations. Evansville has a number of new ones, and other cities and towns of the state have been favored.

While the children of R. N. Taylor and his brother, Charles Taylor, were playing near their house, at Brazil, they became possessors of a dynamite cartridge, which evidently had been lost by one of the stone quarrymen. The boys thought it was great fun, and, procuring a hatchet, they gave the dangerous machine a whack, causing an immediate explosion. One of the children was seriously injured about the face, its right eye being almost torn out. The other child was also hurt, but not dangerously. The report of the explosion was heard at a considerable distance, and caused much excitement for a time.

An Occurrence of the Future Written for This Paper.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

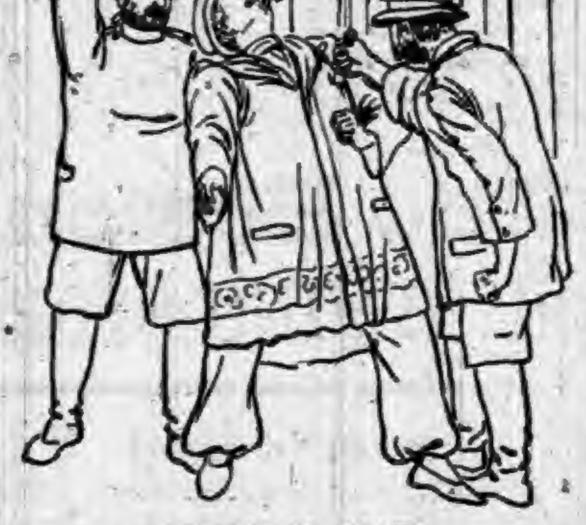
At the period when fear, interest, and curiosity had reached their highest point regarding these strange developments, we Cautionists, all over the world, had determined to rise and throw off the hateful yoke which burdened us. Our plan was simple and yet magnificent. You know the huge plain in Central Asia which we had resolved to make either our battle ground or the field of our defeat—either the beginning of our glorious and successful rebellion, or of our martyrdom, overthrow and death.

Family love was so strong among us that the project of leaving our wives, children, mothers, and sisters behind was not for a second to be dreamed of. In one great multitude we would quit the country of our birth, as other Cautionists, in larger or smaller multitudes, would quit the countries of theirs. All transport, whether by land or water, was so easy that within a few days we expected to meet in one monstrous cohort on the Asian plain. What we here in America specially feared (and I do not doubt that like misgivings were felt by our colleagues elsewhere) was the sudden discovery of our intent on the part of the Indomitables and their resultant thwarting vetoes. But the miserable lack of order and self-discipline among our foes made it doubtful if their concerted action against us could prove of prompt avail. In this conjecture we were right. Among the Indomitables our swift and comprehensive departure woke a wild flurry, as we afterward learned, but there was no decisive and sweeping effort to prevent it. On several portions of the coast just before embarkation, skirmishes and small fights did take place. But in the main we got off safely, and reached our destination soon afterward, supplied with weapons in abundance, and being received by allies who had prepared for us tents in very large, if still insufficient number, besides an amazing amount of other warlike aids, both defensive and protective.

The concourse was immense, and after our arrival every new hour swelled it. We were, of course, accomplishing a purpose which in the earlier ages of travel by steam would have been purely impossible. And yet as I saw the majesty, the magnitude of our undertaking realize and declare itself, I could not but feel that even now in this century of quick transit and of chemically prepared food which could be carried with an ease far greater than the old cereals and animal flesh, our stupendous rallying of the clans had been achieved through only a single cause. This cause was our patient and deliberate waiting, scheming, plotting for many years past—for years before either my own birth or your father's. And let me here tell you, my dear nephew, that I can remember, when a little boy, hearing your great-grandfather and my grandfather (that superbly ardent old Cautionist, who was stabbed to death one night by a gang of half-drunken Indomitables) declare that some day in the near future just this same supreme event would take place, and vaguely refer to this same Asian plain as the theater of its fateful occurrence. Your mother, of course, accompanied us, and her devotion to your father, her calm, heroic treatment of every hadship and inconvenience that she was called upon to endure, her noble self-sacrifice of conduct toward hundreds of her own sex endowed with less courage and fortitude than she so amply possessed, will always dwell in my memory sacred and indelible. I sometimes think it would have been better if your birth had not happened later—if you had not only been alive, but of an age to understand all the sweetness and bravery of her deportment. And yet perhaps I am wrong, here; for to have lived through the awful experience which we were destined to undergo could have left upon you nothing save an impression of abiding horror. A quarter of a century has elapsed since I passed through it, and yet there are nights on which I dream of it and wake in a cold sweat of terror.



STABBED TO DEATH.

CHAPTER III.

Millions of people, we had all gathered upon that far-stretching and almost treeless lapse before the Indomitables answered our mute but sublime challenge. Then they came by myriads, rushing together day after day on the vacant sweeps of country before us. We had chosen a central position in the unparalleled moor where we had camped. Our opponents could therefore gain nothing by an attempt to surprise us from the rear, since real rear we had none, and must either be boldly met and crushed or left quite unattacked.

But the Indomitables, boiling with rage, scented treachery of a most destructive sort, and yet, distracted by countless rumors regarding its true modes of operation, had no design of leaving us unattacked. Their plan was evidently to pour upon us and overwhelm us with numerical superiority, if nothing else.

The duel was to be one which stars might stop in their courses to observe. The enemy had halted about two miles distant from us, and incessantly it was being re-enforced by legions of new comers. We began to have a sense of our own hopeless minority. The far horizon for the space of one broad arc was now gloomed with the augmenting host. We well knew it was soon to be a battle to the death, but, like a giant specter, the premonition of our own utter rout and annihilation loomed before us. Still the nerve and resolution of our troops could not well have been eclipsed. Your father was a general high in command, and I held a place lower, though responsible. For three days we kept visiting different portions of our huge army, and everywhere we perceived the same marks of stoic and serene valor. And yet your father bitterly desponded.

"There is absolutely no hope for us," he said.

"We have a great cause," I answered.

"Yes. But our foes are an ocean. They have but to sweep over us and inundate us."

All the next day, as I so well recollect, the Indomitables were joined by one continual stream of re-enforcements. I began unqualifiedly to share your father's conviction after the fourth day following our arrival. On the night of this day we met. It was perhaps 9 o'clock in the evening. Never do I recall a night of more wondrous clarity and calm. There was not a breath of wind, and the moon hung crystalline in a heaven without a single cloud. Your father and I had mounted a small rise of ground just outside his own tent, and stood there, gazing through our glasses at the dark enormity of those gathered shapes beyond.

"The general-in-chief," said your father, "may order an assault at any moment, now."

"What!" I exclaimed. "A night assault?"

"Why not a night assault? Why not a speedy assault of some sort? To remain longer like this—to permit the advance of the enemy, surging toward us with its irrepressible momentum, would surely be less wise than to rush upon it with charge after charge of intrepid soldiery."

I made no answer; I was peering through my glasses at the dusky crowds that faced us. "If one could only see them better than even these searching lenses allow," I was thinking. "But this limitless level precludes the kind of scrutiny one desires."

Just then from the lower portion of the moon's full orb shot a jet of silvery flame, which I can only compare to the blaze of a calcium light, hundreds of degrees increased. In an instant the entire hostile throng was brightly yet spectrally illumined. It was a revelation that had seemed to answer my own yearning.

"You are right," I said to your father. "Their vastness does resemble an ocean."

Then we both lifted our eyes to the moon. We were already used to these strange freaks; on the previous night we had watched them for several hours.

"Those agitations," he muttered, "still persist."

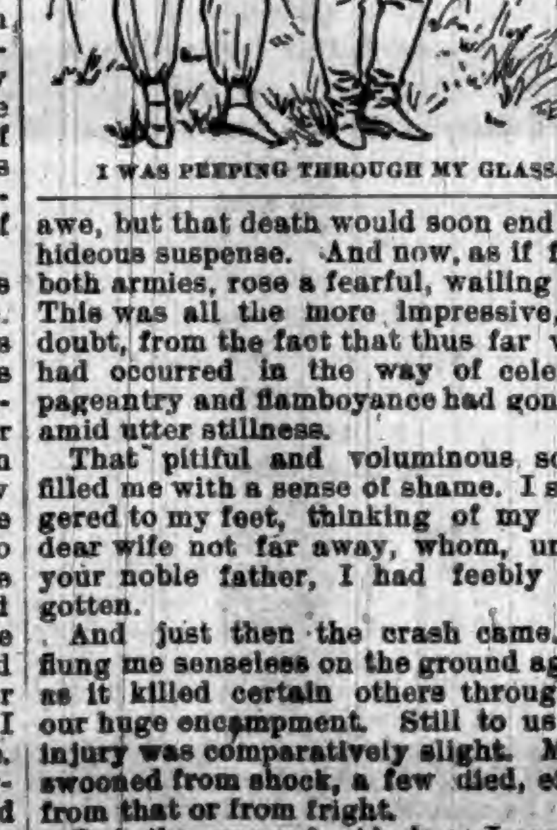
And now a cry broke from his lips. I had again directed my gaze toward the enemy. "These moving masses!" I exclaimed; what do you mean?"

Your father, no longer needing his glass because of the new effulgence that poured from aloft, stared for some time whither I had agitatedly pointed.

"They are moving toward us!" he at length almost shouted. "Good heavens, has no one else seen them? Why has no alarm yet sounded? Our women and children—but what could we do? We had to bring them with us! And to think that they, like ourselves must be drowned in this awful human sea!" He clutched my arm; he was trembling terribly. "It is too late!" he again broke forth. "They will be upon us before we have time to rally. And yet, if the general-in-chief is not too far away, we——"

And there, then, my dear nephew, your father paused. For in the next instant came what he himself days ago had prophesied. I mean the destruction of the moon.

Like a mammoth bomb-shell she exploded in the heavens above us. It was the grandest and most appalling sight man has ever witnessed. Her death, as the death of a world should be, was horror and splendor combined. At first she divided into clots of multicolored fire that swept in diverse paths through the sky, meteors of unimaginable girth and radiance. I recollect, amid all my terror, having a transient sense of safety, so aloof from earth seemed the blazing missiles born to her ruin. They streamed, like sunset clouds gone mad, north, south, east and west. They trailed behind their ragged and enkindled remnants wild curves and scrolls of brilliance. As they dimmed and dropped from view I thought, for a brief while, that all danger had passed. Then, suddenly, in the lurid twilight, I saw that from the zenith or thereabout a vast iron-lined protuberance was pushing itself toward earth, greatening at every fresh second, and seamed from center to edges with zigzag snakes of light. It flashed through my mind that this was the part of the shattered planet which yet remained unaffected by those explosive powers whose rage I had already seen. Downward it rushed, and the speed with which it came must have been almost incalculable. In a few more seconds it had filled the whole middle of the welkin, though now it had grown duller, glowing like a half-spent coal. Soon I felt a chill wind blowing on my sweat-dampened face. Your father had left me, hurrying to your mother in the near tent. I was alone on the little hillock; I sank down; my limbs loosened beneath me. Nearer came the terrible, gloomful thing. I had no doubt, as I lay there in abject awe, but that death would soon end this hideous suspense. And now, as if from both armies, rose a fearful, wailing cry. This was all the more impressive, no doubt, from the fact that thus far what had occurred in the way of celestial pageantry and flamboyance had gone on amid utter stillness.



I WAS PEEPING THROUGH MY GLASS.

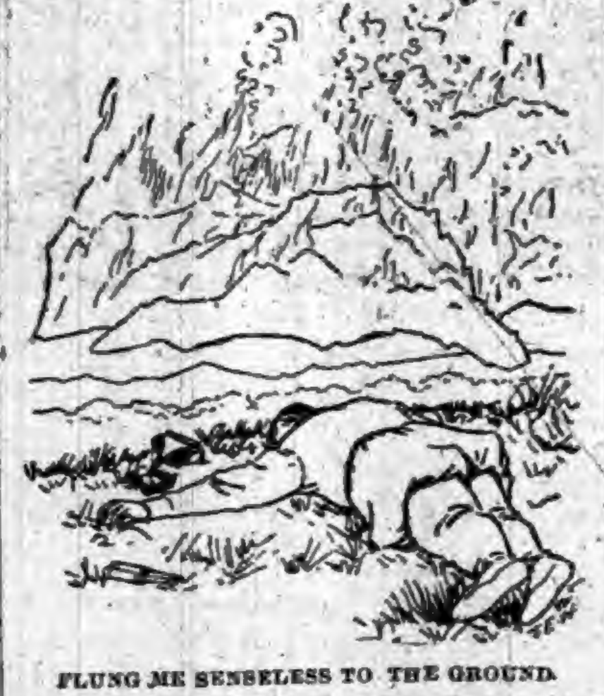
That pitiful and voluminous sound filled me with a sense of shame. I staggered to my feet, thinking of my own dear wife not far away, whom, unlike your noble father, I had feebly forgotten.

And just then the crash came. It flung me senseless on the ground againt as it killed certain others throughout our huge encampment. Still to us the injury was comparatively slight. Many swooned from shock, a few died, either from that or from fright.

But the enemy? Ah, here I come to records of which you are already so well aware! The enemy was absolutely crushed below that avalanche of lunar matter. The descending fragment of the moon covered eight miles in circumference, and its ravage paused within just a mile of us! Where it struck the earth now towers a great mountain—or rather a mountainous excrescence, with with six lofty peaks.

Beneath this lies—anarchy.

Not a single one of that gathered foe survived. The collision, astronomers declare, threw the earth seriously out of her course, and nothing saved her from the worst of fates but a sudden re-establishment of equipoise between herself, her sister planets and the sun. But, as you are aware, her position in space is distinctly changed, and with it her time, since time is always sidereal.



FLUNG ME SENSELESS TO THE GROUND.

A terrestrial year was formerly 365 days; it is now 600. But I need not repeat, dear nephew, what is already so familiar to you.

Often now, when I look into the starry depths of night, I miss the moon, remembering those pure and dreamy rays which so glorified earth. You have seen pictures of her, either regnant in a clear heaven or ploughing through depths of cloud which she had made lovely by her pearly luster. And yet these pictures can convey to you no real idea of what this ghostly and gracious satellite truly was, for no painter of the past has adequately put the moon upon canvas. And more than this, my boy, she was the friend of lovers. They used to say that her beams made men mad, and, in a manner, so they did. Love-mad, I mean, for there was a tender intoxication in her glories when shed upon land and sea, that has loosened the tongue of many a bashful lover and made many a reluctant maid kindly and acquiescent.

But, after all, how can I regret that our earth now moves through space unattended by this beauteous heavenly handmaid? For the great and most perfect surviving race which has made our world a sort of paradise amply compensate me for so relatively slight a loss. I must leave it for—the unknown! And, believe me, it is my daily prayer that I may find beyond this existence one of two precious boons—either the eternal repose which some of our philosophers declare awaits all us mortals or a bourne of future sojourn equally gracious and satisfying as that in which I linger now.

Aristocratic Beverage.

A landlord of an English inn tells a story of some ambitious patrons. Unlike certain persons who aspire to copy the customs of the more wealthy and fashionable, these were independent enough to say, after one experiment, "The gentlefolks is welcome to it for we." The landlord overheard this whispered conversation:

"Didst ever drink port, Jim?"

"No. What is it?"

"Why, port—port wine; it's the stuff as the gentlefolks is fond on."

"I reckon it'll be main expensive then."

"Oh, we can stand it amongst the three on us! Got any port wine, landlord?"

Thus addressed the landlord replied, "Yes, some of the finest in the country."

"What's it run to?"

"Seven an' six a bottle."

"They figured it out," the landlord tells the story, "with the stump of an old pencil on the top o' the table, an' when they made up their minds as seven an' sixpence was a half a crown apiece amongst the three on 'em, they ordered a bottle. I sent my man down to the cellar for it, and I went out to look at my pigs.

"When I come back there they was sittin' wry-mouthed an' lookin' at one another, wi' some muddy-lookin' stuff in the glasses. 'Gentlemen,' I says, 'ye don't seem to like your liquor.'

"'Like it!' says one on 'em. 'If this is the stuff the gentlefolks like drinkin', the gentlefolks is welcome to it for we.'

"I turns to my man, and 'Bill,' says I, 'where did you get this bottle o' port from?'

"'Why,' he says, 'I got it from the fust bin on the left-hand side.'

"'Why you ode idiot,' I says, 'you browt 'em mushroom ketchup!'"

Had Bought Better Men.

The favorite recreation of Pope's leisure hours was the society of painters. Nothing was more agreeable to the poet than to spend an occasional evening with his friend Kneller, who, to use the words of Thackeray, "bragged more, spelt worse, and painted better than any artist of his day." Warburton tells an amusing anecdote of the two friends. Mr. Pope was with Sir Godfrey Kneller, one day, when his nephew, a Guinea trader, came in. "Nephew," said Sir Godfrey, "you have the honor of seeing the two greatest men in the world." "I don't know how great you may be," said the Guinea man; "but I don't like your looks. I have often bought a man much better than both of you together—all muscle and bone—for ten guineas."

The Right to Propose.

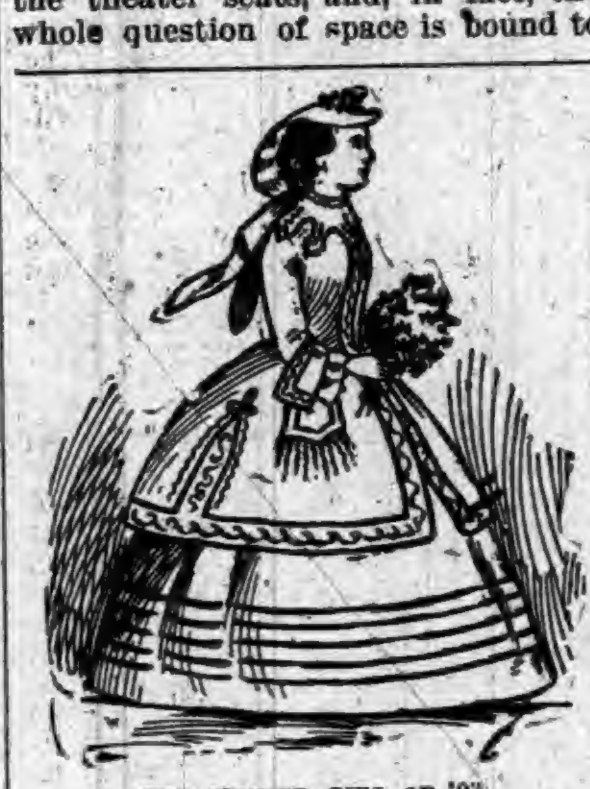
What surprises me, considering the vast number of ladies who preach the equality of the sex in everything, is that an effort is not made to secure equal rights in proposing. To marry is more important to a woman than to have a vote. Why, then, should proposing be limited to one sex? Men are naturally more bashful than women, and the result of the present one-sided rule is that many a man remains single because he cannot bring his courage up to the proposing point, and, as a necessary consequence, many a girl remains husbandless. An association of girls, each pledged to propose to any man whom she might deem a desirable husband, would be far more practical than an anti-crinoline society.—London Truth.

WHAT A SIGHT THEY WILL BE!

Dame Fashion Says Women Must Again Wear Hoopskirts.

Alas! poor woman! Worth, the great Parisian god of fashion, and Redfern, his lesser rival, have announced that the woman of style will be clothed in the ugly, uncomfortable, old-fashioned crinoline which was the abomination of our women in the '60's. Skirts will be five and a half yards wide and underneath them will be hoops of the same width. To add to the horror of the announcement is the fact that the head must be crowned with "droopsy bonnets of a weeping-willow style of architecture," as one writer says.

Fair sister, says the Utica Globe, if you would like to know in advance just how your charms will be displayed under the new fashion, study the accompanying illustration. Of course, it will be necessary to enlarge the theater seats, and, in fact, the whole question of space is bound to become a problem under the crinoline regime. Think of the elevators and street cars, and then the Easter parade! Carriages will have to be ruled off the street for the day, while the entire thoroughfare becomes a sea of billowy crinoline. There will be a great demand for carpenters. Just think of the doors and halls to be widened!



THE SUMMER GIRL OF '93.

As for dancing, that will have to be done at arm's length. A system of signals should be devised, such as hoisting colored lanterns or waving different flags, so that partners may communicate with each other. Kissing will probably become a lost art, at least among women.

HE STRUCK BILLY PATTERSON.

And, Owing to Billy's Size, He Did Not Say Anything About His Deed.

Who struck Billy Patterson? About fifty years ago this was a question asked very frequently to illustrate the unexpected defeat of a candidate or a doubtful or unknown matter. But who struck the blow was never found out. An exchange professes to have found out, and says it was George W. Tillerton of Georgia. This is the story:

Last evening we published an exhaustive review of a famous case—that of William Patterson of Georgia, the same Billy that was "struck." This week we publish what is believed to be an authentic answer to the well-known conundrum. Mrs. Jennie G. Conely of Athol, N. Y., says that her father, George W. Tillerton, who lived at Franklin, Ga., at that time, and who has long since died, struck that historic blow. As related in "Notes for the Curious," last week, Patterson was a Baltimore merchant, who had retired to his estate near Carnsville, Ga., where he became entangled in the famous broil and received the blow which caused him to repeat the question, "Who struck Billy Patterson?" Being a powerful man, with a fist like a sledge-hammer, Patterson searched long and patiently for the man with audacity enough to strike him, but his search availed nothing. Tillerton kept the secret from his own family until the old man became so persistent in his efforts to discover the perpetrator of the deed, even going so far as to leave the country when he feared the $1,000 reward would cause some one to reveal his identity to the enraged Billy. After the death of Patterson, Tillerton refused to mention the affair, which was the best course to pursue, as his friends would doubtless have twitted him with playing the "live sheep racket over the dead lion." It is only recently that Mrs. Conely has heard of the reward waiting a claimant in the Franklin County (Georgia) Court of Record. The writer has not been informed whether or not she will make an effort to secure the $1,000 offered as a reward for her father's rashness. Future developments will add a third and last chapter to this interesting bit of history.

SACRED DEER IN JAPAN.

Tame Creatures to Be Found in a Queer Mountain Town.

Humphrey B. Kendrick, a former resident of Santa Barbara, Cal., who has just returned to San Francisco after a residence of several years in Japan, gives the Examiner an interesting description of a little mountain town named Nara in that country:

"Everyone, or almost everyone in Nara has a deer," said Mr. Kendrick, "and they are as plentiful there as dogs in an American town, while around the temples are great numbers, all sacred to the Japanese. And they are very tame, coming up even to the stranger and almost begging for gingerbread, of which they are very fond, and which the tourist is expected to buy for them.

"When the Emperor, a great many years ago, came into Nara, and Nara, you know, was the first capital of Japan, he rode on a white deer, and that at once made the deer sacred, and at the same time it became fashionable to own one, and now they are the most common thing to be seen in the place, unless it be lanterns, which are actually without number, and of every kind and quality. A lantern in Japan is very different from one here; for there they are stone pillars, although there are some of metal, and made to be suspended. I saw some of bronze in one of the temples which had been brought from Holland long ago. But, while there are so many, the Japanese will never count them.

"That would be a very wicked thing in the sight of the gods, who keep the number a careful secret. And though sacrilegious foreigners have made the attempt no two of them have ever counted the same. Another feature is the goldfish ponds—no such fish as you see here, but 12 and 14 inches long, and of such a deep color, darker than orange even. And those with the fantails are beautiful. All of the ponds and lakes are full of them, and as the water is very clear it is a marvelous thing to stand on the shore and watch them dart through the ripples, and when out in a boat the very bottom assumes a golden hue."

The Weekly Cleaning.

Why a house should require such frequent going over, so much and so regular administration upon in the way of sweeping and dusting, furbishing and polishing, is a never-ending puzzle to the masculine mind. To a man's eye the house is always clean unless it is aggressively dirty. Dust thick enough to form a coating on which one can write his name, muddy footprints on the piazza or the hall carpet, disorderly and dingy apartments evidently in need of the broom, offend his taste if he be in the least fastidious, and he comprehends that soap and water have their uses in emergencies. But the periodical, systematic and radical cleansing on which good housekeepers insist every Friday or Saturday appears to the ordinary husband a work of supererogation. He passes it over as one of his wife's amiable and womanly weaknesses, pitying her that she wastes her time and strength, as it looks to him, in so unnecessary an effort.

The fact is, however, that if you would have a house clean and sweet and shining, and inviting to eye and smell and touch, you must go over it often from attic to cellar. How great the labor of rendering it clean, and keeping it so, depends very largely on the locality of your home.

If your residence be on a public street in a thronged town, you will have to wage a never-ceasing fight against dust; against disease germs borne on the wings of air-laden dust: against the grime and soot which permeate everything, rob furniture and hanging of their freshness, and detract from the impression of beauty you would fain have your house make on your family and friends.

Dust sifts through crannies, drives through windows and doors, lodges in papa's coat and Johnnie's ulster. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and of cleanliness. Only by careful daily dusting and by weekly thorougness can you rout the foe.

In the country life is, in this regard, easier; but the temptation here, in houses not warmed throughout, is to shut up a large part and pay attention only to living rooms. Who does not know the vault-like mustiness, the damp, as of the grave, in the closed and darkened refrigerator known as the parlor in many a country house. A habit of going over the whole house weekly would do away with the danger which comes of breathing stagnant air.

No; we cannot help what our good man friend may think. The women must clean house every week, and spring and fall, too!—Harper's Bazar.

In Magellan Straits.

It is a lucky thing for the natives of Southern Patagonia that the navigation of the Strait of Magellan is dangerous. Vessels often anchor in the strait for the night on this account, and this gives the crooked-legged natives a chance to come out in their canoes and trade with the ship's company. The chief articles offered by the natives are furs of various kinds, especially of the sea otter. These they sell for a trifle, or more often barter for a few things they need. The best otter skins are worth as much as $600 to $700 when brought to civilized markets, but Patagonians offer only poor skins.

Job Lot of Waifs.

The late Samuel E. Adams, of Richmond, Ind., was fond of telling of a remarkable coincidence which happened several years ago. During a severe thunder storm a canary bird flew into the house. Within a few minutes a shivering and badly frightened spaniel was found begging for admission. The dog was let in. Less than an hour afterward a child was heard crying on the outside and the door opened to admit a little tot scarcely 2 years old. The child, dog and canary were never claimed. Mr. Adams found a comfortable home for the little one, while he continued to care for the dog and bird.

Gave Saxon the Preference.

Dr. Samuel Johnson spoke vigorous Anglo-Saxon English, but in writing exhibited a fondness for Latin polysyllables. Just the reverse of this was true of Lord Tennyson, who used many words of Latin origin in his conversation, but in his verse showed a preference for simple words. He was asked once if he took pains to rewrite and polish his poems, and answered: "Yes; and I find that in the case of almost every correction I have substituted a Saxon for a Latin word."

What Makes the Dimples.

Accrding to an old legend the baby's dimples mark the spot where angels' fingers touched the child in bearing it from heaven to earth, but unromantic doctors have a different explanation. They say that dimples probably result from defective development of a muscle. When the muscle is called into use the defective portion fails to respond, and a hollow is left, into which the flesh and skin of the cheek, for example, fall, and thus the dimple is formed.

No Longer a Vision.

One of the visions of Jules Verne is likely to become a reality. Experiments have demonstrated to the satisfaction of experts of the navy that a ship can be constructed with a capacity for submerging itself and moving below the surface of the water rapidly and under strict control.

Successful Reformatory.

The Children's Aid Society of Pennsylvania has met with gratifying success in its farm colonies for pauper and incorrigable children, and a bill is now before the Legislature conferring on the society the official custody of the children committed to it by the courts.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..........APRIL 20, 1893.

WORLD'S FAIR is to be open May 1.

YOUNG doctors will be appointed pension examiners on local boards. So says the new secretary of the interior. This will be good news to some of the young doctors of the democratic faith in DeKalb county.

FORTY or more of the biggest war vessels of the world will be at Fortress Monroe by the last of this week, to take part in the great naval parade. Their men will number over 12,000, and the total cost of the vessels will be over thirty millions.

FT. WAYNE thinks Auburn is trying to gobble up another of her prospective industries, as we did the Keeley Institute. This time it is the great invention of A B. Austin, his rock breaker, a locomotive engine that can break up stone to ballast a railroad track or a wagon road, as it moves forward. Or it can stand still and crush the stones. A factory for making these engines would be a nice thing for Auburn.

BLOUNT, our agent recently sent to Hawaii has stopped the foolishness of having the United States flag floating over a country we do not own, and supporting an alleged government over which we have no control. As the COURIER said at the start; we will take the Islands if the people desire it. If they do not, then we have no right to take them. But we should see to it that no other nation gets them.

Esterly Machines.

I will make a canvass of this section for the sale of the popular Esterly Binders and Mowers. Wait till you see me and get the best machine in the market. I will keep a full line of repairs for the same at my residence in Jackson township, 4 miles southeast of Auburn.

SAMUEL MORR.

City Caucus.

The democratic caucus for the nomination of town officers, was held in the court room, Thursday evening of last week, April 13. There was a large attendance, and quite spirited contests for nearly every place. J. F. Aber, one of the committeemen called the meeting to order, and H. J. Shafer was made president. W. B. Brown made a motion that we first adopt a plan of voting, and the secretary read that of last year. This was adopted, viz: That the chair appoint a committee of three, one to take the ballots and the others to receive them and to help count. The voters were to file past the committee those from the south part of the room first, Nominations were then declared in order, beginning with marshal and following the order in the clerk's election notice. The names announced for marshal were: Joseph Robbins, E. T. Cochran, Alvin Baker and Samuel Fretz. For clerk, Frank Dills and Ernest Sheets. For treasurer, C. H. G. Jones For trustee second ward, L. J. Miller and Geo. Lanning. For trustee fifth ward, J. E. Ensley and D. Y. Husselman. On motion of S. J. Brandon Mr. Jones was nominated by acclamation for treasurer. The vote was taken for trustee of the second ward, and resulted: Miller 98; Lanning 82. For the fifth ward, the vote was Ensley 99; Husselman 79, and Husselman moved to make it unanimous. For clerk, the vote stood: Dills 95; Sheets 78. The vote on marshal was the exciting one, as there were four candidates. The result was, Alvin Baker. 105; Cochran, 59; Robbins, 13; Fretz, 10 Total 187; necessary to a choice 94. Baker was declared the nominee, the other candidates asking to make it unanimous The old committeemen, J. F. Aber, F. A Borst and W. B. Brown were elected to serve another year. Meeting then adjourned. It was the largest attendance ever seen at a caucus in Auburn, being 187 against 149 of the year before.

Our Old Papers.

The century old papers we publish this week will be read with interest Notice the prices in pounds, shillings and pence, of various articles then. A shilling, at a rough estimate, is about 30 cents of our money, so that a bushel of wheat at 5 shillings would make the price then about $1 15, a much better price than we get now. Then there is a matter about a pension a Revolutioary soldier wanted, which sounds quite familiar at this day. And a recommend for a teacher, also a familiar subject, Note the peculiar wording of the notes, receipts, etc. A receipt in full was "from the beginning of the world." A note promised to pay "the just sum in cash or merchantble wheat," etc. The papers are dated all the way from 1766 to early in this century. They were papers belonging to Samuel Marvin, great-grandfather to J. L Marvin, an employe of the COURIER office. The old gentleman was evidently a fair scholar, though he now and then mis spelled a word. His accounts were as well kept as many would keep them now. The writing showed painstaking, was made with quill pen, on the rough paper used in those days. The letter "s" looks like an "f". The paper is now yellow with age, and the ink somewhat faded. But nearly every word can be easily read. Mr. Marvin was evidently a weaver, but it would seem as if he had a little store in connection, as the charges of "two quarts of hot rum." "log chains," etc., would indicate. The article will be valuable for the scrap book.

CITY POLITICS.

All the town tickets are in the field now. The democratic candidates are named elsewhere. All are excellent men and it would be folly for any democrat to refuse to support them. We hear that the republicans are resorting to a false issue, as they always do if a false issue can be found. They never seem to have a real issue, or if they have, they either can't comprehend it themselves, or are ashamed to use it Now, they are fighting the school house. Auburn needs more school room to accomodate its increasing school children. The present town and school boards are getting ready to build a house to accomodate them. We are told that at the republican caucus last Friday evening, they made their men pledge themselves to oppose building a school house. This they did, either because they oppose giving our children decent school privileges, or because they hope to catch votes, and don't care how many children are neglected, so they can catch votes. The first reason we dismiss till we hear further from them. Now for the second. It is a false issue to raise in this election, because the candidates to be voted for will not be able to control the matter. Notice this: The clerk, treasurer and marshal have no voice in the school matter, whatever. Why then should this issue gain or lose them votes. Then we may drop the matter as to them. The only men who will have a vote on the school matter are Mr. Ensley and Mr. Miller, the two candidates for trustee. Suppose this issue was to defeat them, there would still be left three members of the board, who are already committed to giving the children a school. These three men hold over a year more. Then again, the matter is more in the hands of the other board, the school board. This is made up of three men who are already committed in favor of the school house. One of them will go out of office in about two months, but before then the matter will be cleaned up. But even after one man goes out, there will again be seen the three holdover members of the town council, who as we said before, will constitute a majority of that board and can, and probably will appoint either the same one now on the school board, or another of the same views. So it will be seen that to make the school question a test on our town candidates, is to make up a false issue, merely to catch votes, for if every democratic candidate were defeated the work could, and probably would go right on the same as before. So, why should any democrat refuse to vote for every democrat named on his ticket. Then there is another false issue raised. As soon as Mr. Baker, candidate for marshal, was nominated, a story was industriously circulated that he was not a democrat. The only reason we can find for believing this, lies in the fact that his relatives are all republicans. Mr. Baker, himself, has always been a democrat. So here is another false issue exposed. But even if Mr. Baker had been a republican until lately what advantage would it be to a democrat to refuse him a vote, and at the same time vote for a man who is still a republican? Let every democrat stand by his ticket. It is, to say the least, as good a ticket as the other and is on the right side. Neither Auburn, nor DeKalb county, both of which are democratic, ever gained anything by electing a republican.

The Candidates.

The men chosen as candidates on the democratic ticket for town officers at the caucus last Thursday, are all good men, and as far as we know, well qualified for the positions they are to fill Mr. Miller, for the second ward, has been county treasurer two terms and is a capable business man, and quite popular. Mr. Ensley, in the fifth ward, has served two years, and has done, as far as we have heard, acceptable work as a member of the board. Mr. Baker, for marshal, is a new man, but by the way he walked over the track in getting the nomination, he must be popular. We expect to see him get a big majority and to make a thorough-going marshal. Mr Jones, for treasurer, has filled the place several years, and with success. No one can urge anything against him. For clerk, Frank Dills, is one of the very ablest of our young democracy, and will make a clerk that will be a credit to any town board. We do not know of a single thing that can be urged against any of these men, and we believe the feeling is so strong in their favor that all will be elected by good majorities. Let us see that the majorities are furnished.

It does the work. Mr. Chas. Gochs, Gaylord, Michigan, says; "I am asked, 'Did Brant's Balsam do you any good?' Well, I should say it did! Confirmation services at the Catholic church in Garrett Sunday called out a good deal of interest. A bishop was sent for and a big crowd met him at the Junction with a special train, causing him to open his eyes at the sight of the crowd that turned out to do him honor. He evidently did not expect such an ovation.

W. D. Rickel sent home from North Galveston, Texas, last week some of the products of the Lone Star state, to his partner, T. H. Sprott. It was a package, which on being opened, revealed some horned toads, the kind peculiar to that region. Tom was inclined to be afraid of the "big bugs," as everybody else is apt to be, and got rid of them as soon as he conveniently could. John Nedl has one in his saloon window.

W. H. Mader has established a local agency for the sale of all kinds of buggies and carriages of the best standard makes. His room is the Weemer building, next door east of the south block of the Kiblinger factory, that is on the south side of west Eighth street, opposite Ed. Baker's. Mr. Mader is an experienced man in this line of business and a good judge of good work. It will pay those who are in need of a buggy of any sort, to look over Mr. Mader's line of goods.

Rev. J. N. Wilson preached two very acceptable sermons at the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning and evening. He had come to attend Sunday school, and to listen to Mr. Healy. But Mr. Healy was away, attending the Presbytery at Lagrange. He had engaged Rev. C. E. Kriebel of Butler to take his place, but Mr. Kriebel was afterward called to Chicago. But the congregation, not knowing all this had assembled, and Mr. Wilson was asked to preach, which he consented to do, and though with no time for preparation he gave an excellent discourse.

Mr. Baker, who arrived here last week from New York state, had a queer and rather dangerous experience. On Tuesday last, he was walking down the Wabash track towards the Junction, for he was stopping with Peter Dittmar's when he suddenly became dizzy and faint, and finally fell on the track. He tried to arise, but could not, and there he lay for some time. The fast train going west after 5 p. m., was about due, when some men came along and helped him up and him off the track. Just then a team came down the Avenue, and he was put into the buggy and taken to Mr. Dittmar's. He soon got over the trouble, but remained weak for several days.

One more of Auburn's respected citizens, Mrs David Hough, informs us that she has been fully cured by Dr. Townsend, and is well as ever. We are glad to hear it. Her complaint was heart and lung troubles. The Doctor found a good many patients awaiting him at his visit Tuesday, several of whom came to thank him gratefully for the cures he had done them.

Several good items have been crowded out each week for some time. Among these is the organizing of a new M. E. church at Auburn Junction, Sunday, April 9, by Rev. W. L. Meese. This church and that at Grove Bethel and Norris Chapel will make a circuit and be known as the Auburn Junction circuit. Rev. Mr. Barton a young man from Taylor University at Ft. Wayne, will have charge at present. Spencerville will be joined with Leo to make a circuit.

Lagrange Democrat: The Legislature passed a a very strong law which will be a good thing if officials will look after its enforcement. Dealers are not only prohibited under the penalty of a fine from selling boys under sixteen years of age tobacco in any form, including cigarettes but everyone is prohibited from giving youths tobacco. It will be hard to enforce the law, but if officials at the start will make a few examples the use of tobacco among the Hoosier youths will be decreased to a large extent.

J. J. Thomas last Thursday brought in another letter from Joseph Shade, Honduras. His brother, Will Thomas, who went to Central America with Mr. Shade, Mr. Talbert and the rest, had just returned, making the trip in about two and a half weeks. He brought back some of the products of that far off country, including bananas, pineapples and plantains. The last named, was something new to his neighbors, and when cooked were pronounced good eating. Mr. Thomas had planted a part of his land before leaving, and expects to return this fall.

The killing of Warren Blackwell at Butler last Wednesday evening, is noted by our correspondent. It appears he was drunk and as usual when in that state was abusive. He had been fined for this several times, and now swore he would not be arrested again. He some way got out of town, and the officers went out to his farm to arrest him. He was found heavily armed and in a dangerous mood, and failing to arrest him, they went back to town for help. On their return, they tried it again, when he shot at the officer, but missed. Then he snapped again, then drew his revolver, when the officer shot him, and he died in a few minutes.

"The MacKaye Spectatorium" at Chicago, has two immense restaurants and a roof garden at a height of over 100 feet; towering 150 feet above is the immense dome from which a grand view of the world's fair grounds and buildings can be seen. In order that people may reach these altitudes with comfort, speed and safety, the Columbian Celebration Company has made a contract with the Standard Elevator Company of Chicago to supply fifteen of the largest, swiftest and best elevators ever built for passenger use. These elevators will have a capacity for carrying 10,000 persons each hour and be in themselves an exhibit of no little interest.

Death has claimed another promising young man who has thus been called suddenly from our midst. Egbert M. Hodge, son of Mrs. Julia Hodge, died suddenly at Chicago Sunday morning. The sad tale is briefly this: April 6 he was taken down with a chill, but it was not considered a serious matter till later, when it developed into pneumonia, and as it became serious, Mrs. Hodge was sent for on Wednesday, and reached his side the next morning, April 13. At this time he seemed a little better, and all felt encouraged. But on Saturday he grew worse and Mrs. Hodge telegraphed for Dr. Buchtel, who is their physician. The doctor reached there that night and remained with him, but found him very sick. But in the morning there seemed more hope, when suddenly, with little warning, he grew worse and died, breathing his last about 9 a. m. Word was sent home and Mrs. Hodge reached here with the remains that night, coming in over the B. & O. road. The funeral services were at the home of the family, at the north edge of town, Monday evening at 5 o'clock. The impressive Episcopal burial service was read by Rev. A. S. Wooton of the M. E. church, and then all that was mortal of Egbert Hodge was laid to its final rest in the family cemetery. He was a young man of most exemplary character and was universally esteemed. He had studied law in Mr. Hartman's office for about two years. Then he went to Chicago about three years ago and resumed his studies and we believe had entered on the practice of his profession at the time he was so suddenly called away. Everybody feels a deep sympathy for Mrs. Hodge and her family in this terrible hour of trial and bereavement.

If You Don't Know where to go, follow the crowd to Cowan Sisters and see the new summer goods before you buy. Egbert Mott Hodge.

Died in Chicago, April 16, 1893, of pneumonia, Egbert Mott Hodge, aged 25 years, 5 months and 23 days, beloved and respected in every relation of life. Loving son, precious brother, faithful lover, true and loyal friend, upright and conscientious man, he won the esteem and affectionate regard of all who knew him. Gifted by nature with unusual intellectual powers, he found in the law a vocation suited to his ability and his taste. Ambitious, hopeful, earnest, the future was full of promise to him. And the end on this earth is a grave. But this life is not the end of all.

"This is Eternal life that they may know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Baptized in early childhood, confirmed at the age of twelve by the late venerated Bishop Talbot, of Indiana, he grew up with faith in God, the father, Son and Holy Ghost and kept that faith and trust until the tie between body and soul was severed.

"When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory."

ANY one can readily tell the difference between custom-made clothes and ready-made clothes by simply looking at the bill.

MRS. JENNESS MILLER complains that bald heads are inartistic. She's right, no doubt, but they are easier to look over in the front rows than feminine tall hats.

EIFFEL emerged from the Panama scandal thoroughly tarred. He will, however, escape being feathered. The available feathers were all, it is believed, utilized in providing a lining for the Eiffel nest.

MRS. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON is a portly, gray-haired woman, who was a grandmother when she became Mr. Stevenson's wife. She is a remarkably clever woman, a talented writer, and a chatty and cheery conversationalist.

IN Missouri vagrants are put up at auction. Of course there is sentimental objection to this system. The sentiment is so strong in fact that if the vagrants would refrain from indorsing it so loudly it would probably kill the imitation of slavery days.

A BOSTON (yes, Boston) firm advertises "Gen. Butler's Autobiography, Written by Himself." We think that all will agree that this is the best way to have autobiographies written; they are so much more interesting than when written by some one else.

AN Eastern journal refers to Omaha as the center of culture. Omaha may not exactly resent this, but to have been called the center of the hog-raising industry and the home of the corn-fed steer would have illumined the city with a glow of pride.

IF the charges now made against Col. Streator are true, it wouldn't be a bad idea to give him a dose of the medicine he gave Private Iams last summer. A drunken, overbearing, abusive old Colonel dangling by his thumbs would be a warning to other martinets. And what a lot of satisfaction Iams must be getting out of these late developments.

A HORTICULTURIST says there is no plant so universally detested by the animal world as the castor oil plant, that even the goat will starve before biting of a leaf, army worms and locusts will pass it by, though eating every other green thing in sight, and there is no surer way to drive moles away from a lawn than to plant a few castor beans here and there.

A WOMAN correspondent of several German newspapers went away disappointed after visiting the tenement-house district in New York with a charity physician. She looked in vain for the deep poverty of continental cities, and was astonished at the little attempts at ornament in the tenement-house homes. Above all, she was surprised at the sight of orange venders in the streets. The poor, as she had known them in Germany, would regard oranges as an unattainable luxury.

HERR AHLWARDT, who has the honor to be a member of the Reichstag, recently accused Prince Bismarck of making corrupt bargains with Jewish bankers at the expense of the state. Ahlwardt said that he had the documents to prove the truth of his assertions. When he produced the documents it was found that they had as much to do with the accusation as with a small boy's theft of green apples. Ahlwardt was hooted down, and only saved of the charge of talking through his hat from the fact that the expression is recognized as slang, and also that he was bareheaded at the time.

ENFORCE the Chinese exclusion act as we may, Cupid is a smuggler that no revenue officer can hope to detain. For what is handsome Commander Whiting of the Alliance, late at Hawaii, about to do? Nothing less interesting than marry one of the prettiest and most popular Chinese belles on the islands. The girl is Miss Etta Ah Fong, one of fifteen daughters of a millionaire merchant who married a woman of mixed blood. It is all well enough for the great ships of the Atlantic squadron to be prancing around in a Columbian dress parade, but here comes an old wooden cruiser in the Pacific with the commander dead set for a Chinese engagement. War, war, war with Cupid astride the bowsprit laughing fit to kill.

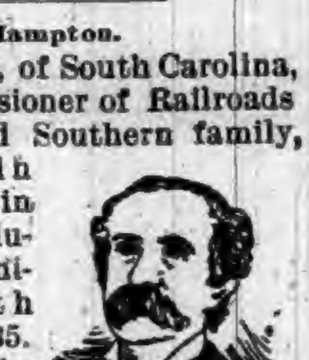
TRINITY CHURCH, Omaha, Neb., has adopted the nickel-in-the-slot idea as the means of liquidating its church debt. At the close of each session of the Sunday school the superintendent brings forth an artistically shaped, red-lettered box with a slot in the lid. It is called the birth day box. The man of discretion invites all who have had birthdays during the preceding week to come forward and deposit a nickel for each year of their age. It is supposed, of course, that none but the superintendent and the cheerful giver sees and counts the nickels as they drop into the box, which, as a precautionary measure, is padlocked. The scheme is reported to be a great success, as from one to three persons pay tribute and make silent confession each week. The report fails to state whether the superintendent ever forgets his discretion or whether the bottom of the receptacle is padded to prevent would-be snoopers from counting the nickels as they plink-plunk, plink-plunk into the box.

WHAT physicians do not know about the bodies of those on whom they practice their art is shown in the death of Colonel Elliot F. Shepard. Both ether and Colonel Shepard were presumably well known to the doctors, but the effect of combining them was a surprise. Much of the practice of medicine is a groping in the dark. The processes of the body in health and disease are largely hidden from observation, and the doctor has to guess at what is going on inside, and to guess again in regard to what will be the effect of pouring in drugs. The science of medicine has made many advances in the present century and even in the past ten or twenty years. But the main advance has been in surgery and in the prevention of disease. It is natural to suppose that the greatest progress must be made along the latter line. The wisest may not know what a disease or a drug may do to a man when it gets inside of him, but when it is discovered how a disease is caused it does not need more than good common sense to explain to this man that it is best for him to keep away from it.

THE murder of Effie Clark by E. Ross Smith at Evanston was a brutal and unprovoked crime of a class that unfortunately is becoming too common. The only palliating circumstance attending the tragedy was the fact that the murderer was his own executioner, and thus the State was saved the trouble and expense of hanging him like a dog as he deserved to be hanged. He was a suitor for the young lady's hand, but his advances had been repelled, and this fact is given in extenuation of his desperate deed. But that is no excuse; it is rather an aggravation of the atrocity, and stamps the young man as a wretch far more inhuman than the desperado who kills for lust or sordid gain or to avenge a real or fancied wrong. The sentiment that finds in love an excuse for a heinous crime is mawkish, illogical, idiotic, dangerous to the public weal. It is a perversion of human nature as repulsive to all right-minded persons as is the indulgence in any other mode of torture. Murder it is, and murder most foul at that, and the perpetrator is deserving of the utmost loathing and execration of mankind.

THE murder of Keeper Haight and the escape and recapture of Convict Latimer are the climax of a number of sensational occurrences in the Jackson penitentiary that must be discouraging to prison reformers. For a long time Jackson has been exemplary of the application of mild discipline to convicted criminals. The former Warden, a man of kind heart and high notions, instituted a system which departed notably from the old ways of dealing with prisoners. Many privileges were permitted to the convicts, an extraordinarily good quality and large quantity of food was allotted to them, their work was light, their hours of work short, and their terms were relieved by many entertainments. Warden Hatch tried to make good men out of his convicts. The convicts retorted by blowing down the walls of the prison with dynamite. Warden Davis, who followed Warden Hatch, adopted methods only slightly modified. Intercourse between the prisoners and the guards was remarkably free, and discipline was relaxed in every case where that seemed possible. A life convict deliberately poisoned the keeper, opened the prison doors for himself and fled. The good men and women who are prepared to cry down any suggestion of a return to the old severe methods of prison government for Jackson will derive small comfort from this latest development in the "moral reform" penitentiary. They denounce the wardens who treat convicts "as if they were tigers." What would they suggest as the best means of guarding against the tigerish craft and treachery of such a man as Latimer? The influence of prayers, music, theatricals and social intercourse may mellow the heart of a man who has murdered his father and mother, but a quicker and more efficacious remedy is the old one of ten hours a day in the stone yard.

Wade Hampton.



Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, named as Commissioner of Railroads comes of an old Southern family, and was born in Columbia, S. C., in 1818. He was graduated from the University of South Carolina in 1835. When the war broke out he was known as one of the largest planters in the South. He had served in both branches of the Legislature, and was a man of great influence. Though opposed to secession, he entered the Confederate army and organized and took command of the Hampton Legion. He served with great gallantry, and attained the rank of Lieutenant General. After the war Gen. Hampton became a prominent advocate of the policy of conciliation between the whites and negroes, and in 1876 was elected Governor of South Carolina on this platform. He was re-elected at the expiration of his term, and then was sent to the United States Senate, where he served two terms.

THE FARMER'S RIGHT.

THE TARIFF BURDEN MUST BE REMOVED.

Why the Reform Club Advocates Ad Valorem Duties—Schedules of the Bill Prepared for Congress' Consideration—Occupation of the New "Calamity Howlers" Gone.

The New "Calamity Howlers."

"Calamity howlers" have changed sides since Nov. 8. Before election all who did not think we could tax ourselves into prosperity, and who quoted statistics of increasing mortgages and millionaires, and gave some of the facts in regard to the hundreds of bounty-fed trusts that were advancing prices at one end of their factories and reducing wages at the other end, were "calamity howlers;" so the McKinleyites said. Since election the protectionists have turned about-face, and are doing some howling on their own account, or at least have begun to tune up their howler instruments; for, up to date, by some singular freak of fortune or misfortune, there has been, outside of the wage reductions in the pearl button industry and the cessation of that other great McKinley protege—the tin industry—nothing to howl about. Instead of the protected industries getting ready to start "to destruction on a toboggan slide," as some of the protectionists still promise, the most of our important industries are not only prosperous just now but are looking ahead, under the promise of free raw materials, to even greater prosperity. The manufacturers of cotton and woolen goods have been so unusually busy since the country fully decided to pay its own taxes and go to the dogs that wages have advanced from 5 to 10 per cent. in the cotton industry, and the price of wool has gone up several cents per pound. The iron and steel industry also is not preparing for the "utter destruction" to which it was doomed if the free-traders should get control of the government, and diminish the supply of the pap to this whopping infant. The enlargements and improvements now occurring in this industry in anticipation of free ores and an enlarged demand for finished products are sufficient to give the blues to this second crop of calamityites. Here are a few of the latest of these tantalizing items:

On April 1 it was reported from Pittsburg that the Carnegie Steel Co., the largest of the kind in America, was preparing for a boom by increasing the capacity of its four great plants at Braddock, Duquesne, Beaver Falls, and Homestead. At Braddock the capacity of the blooming department is to be doubled, two immense underground heating furnaces to be added, and the big foundry and machine shops increased to provide employment to 200 more men. At Duquesne the capacity is to be more than doubled, and steel rails as well as billets will be made. The 1,000 employes will be increased by several hundred. At Homestead a new press for the armor plate works will be put in. It will cost over $1,000,000, and will be the largest piece of machinery of the kind in America, probably in the world. It will enable the Carnegie Co. to make the greatest forgings in the world. A plate weighing 200 tons can be worked in one mass. At Beaver Falls two open hearth furnaces will be added. The total cost of all these improvements will be at least $2,000,000.

It was also announced that the Tyler Tube Works, at Washington, Pa., which now employs 270 men, is to double its capacity; the Gautier Steel Works, of Johnstown, Pa., is adding a new building for the manufacture of merchant steel, which will provide work for 100 new men. Many other mills are enlarging and others that have been closed are starting up. The pig-iron trade is in excellent condition and the wrought iron pipe mills have orders ahead for six or eight months. In some other lines orders have been received for more than a year ahead, a most discouraging condition of affairs to contemplate for the tariff editors on Republican papers, whose hopes for promotion depend upon the fault they can find with free-trade rule.—Byron W. Holt.

Paying for Reciprocity.

It will be remembered that President Harrison, under the so-called reciprocity sections of the McKinley bill, issued his proclamation declaring coffee imported to this country from Venezuela, Colombia and Haiti subject to an import tax of three cents a pound, because those countries were derelict in meeting the administration's reciprocity ideas in admitting American products free of duty. They alleged they could not do so as it would break up their revenue system. The excuse was not accepted, and reciprocity as to those countries became retaliation. Well, what has been the result, and who pays the piper?

In 1891, before the retaliatory proclamation was issued, we imported about 520,000,000 pounds of coffee, of which 87,500,000 pounds came from Venezuela, Colombia and Haiti. This was a monthly average of 7,300,000 pounds from these three countries. Under the President's proclamation this has fallen off to about 835,800 pounds a month, valued at $150,000. This was the report for January. The decrease was the effect of the exaction of a duty of three cents a pound so far as the quantity received from those countries is concerned. It cut down our supply to that extent. We received one-sixth of our consumption from them. It was what is known in the trade as mild coffees, and cutting off their supply enabled other countries producing the same grades to exact higher prices. The price of mild coffees to American consumers has been increased at least 1½ cents a pound, the increase in the aggregate amounting to several millions of dollars annually. The retaliatory proclamation has not only increased the price of coffee from the three countries, but has also affected the price of the large quantities of coffee that are on the free list.

It has been stated that President Cleveland has called on the State Department for information as to our trade relations with the three countries; and this suggests what is probably a fact, that he may rescind President Harrison's proclamation imposing the tax of three cents a pound. As the operation of McKinley reciprocity has been to add to the cost of coffee to American consumers, it would seem to be the common-sense thing to do to wipe it out. It only adds another to the stupendous failures of McKinleyism.—Pittsburg Post.

Several corrections should be made in the above table. Thus the duty on silk spun in skeins, etc., is put at 15 per cent.; the present duty is 35 per cent. and the value of the imports $1,093,384. This amount should be deducted from the total for silk. The duty on woolen yarn is changed from 63,70 to 15 per cent. The value of the imports is $710,537, which should be deducted from the total for woolens. The value of the imports of pig iron and scrap iron should be deducted from the total of iron and steel. The table is slightly inaccurate in other ways, but will serve to give an idea of the rates of duties.

Press Comment.

Following are the opinions of some of the leading papers concerning the tariff bill prepared by the Reform Club:

The tariff bill of the Reform Club of New York has at least the advantage of representing the business side of the tariff question. It is not assumed to be the conclusive word on the question when the next tariff bill is framed, but is part of a variety of information sought with a view to guidance. It is the antipode of that on which the McKinley committee most relied. Their system of action was to call the manufacturers of the country together, ask them how much duty they wanted, and then admit their claim, thus paying them for campaign contributions to the Republican party rendered and establishing a basis for further assessment.—Boston Herald, Ind.

This method of drafting a tariff bill is entirely novel of late years, but it is thoroughly Democratic. Hitherto it has been the custom for manufacturers, the direct beneficiaries of protection, to pool their interests, and then make demands upon a Republican Congress which promptly yielded to them. The great mass of the people were not consulted in such matters. * * * The best feature of this new undertaking of the Reform Club is that it will serve to direct the attention of the industrial world to the fact that reductions of the tariff will be made within less than eighteen months.—Albany Argus, Dem.

The services of the Reform Club in advancing the cause of tariff reduction have been inestimable in value. In season and out of season this club has sent speakers to all parts of the State, and sent its literature to thousands of citizens, and has pursued the protection fallacy to its death. The gentlemen who prepared the schedule bore the burden of the battle when the battle was burdensome. A report such as they have prepared merits study and courteous consideration.—Utica Observer, Dem.

Why Ad Valorem Duties?

The tariff bill proposed by the Reform Club contains only ad valorem duties. The only actual tariff composed entirely of ad valorem duties was the "Walker Tariff bill" of 1846, a bill which gave greater prosperity to all classes, and especially the farmer, than was ever enjoyed before or since. Here is one of Secretary Walker's reasons in favor of this feature of his bill:

"The tax upon the actual value is the most equal, and can only be accomplished by ad valorem duties. * * * All specific duties should be abolished and ad valorem duties substituted in their place. * * * If an annual tax of $30 was assessed on all houses, without respect to their actual value, making the owner of the humble tenement or cabin pay a tax of $30 and the owner of a costly mansion a tax of but $30 on their respective houses, it would differ only in a degree, but not in principle, from the same unvarying specific duty on cheap as on fine articles."

How Trousers Originated.

The women of Judah, it seems, were the first wearers of garments in bifurcated form, and man, perceiving the convenience and comfort of this article of dress, evolved by the superior intelligence of woman, appropriated it to his use, and doomed his womankind to incumber their limbs with flowing robes, which render it impossible for them to cope with man in the useful avocations.

CATARRH IN CHILDREN

For over two years my little girl's life was made miserable by a case of Catarrh. The discharge from the nose was large, constant and very offensive. Her eyes became inflamed, the lids swollen and very painful. After trying various remedies, I gave her S.S.S. The first bottle seemed to aggravate the disease, but the symptoms soon abated, and in a short time she was cured.

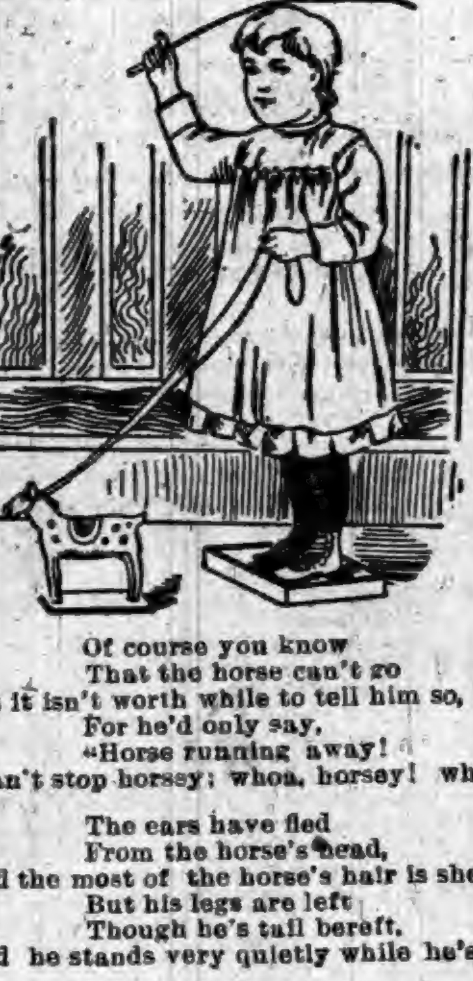
The Young Driver.

His horse is fed
On gingerbread,
And its stable is under the trundle bed;
And he has a cart
That has been a part
Of a button-box—and the reins are thread.

But his heart's as bold
As his hair is gold,
And he handles the lines with a "coachman's hold;"
"Good-by!" he cries,
And his sparkling eyes
Are as bright as the stars when the night is cold.



Of course you know
That the horse can't go
But it isn't worth while to tell him so,
For he'd only say,
"Horse running away!
I can't stop horsey; whoa, horsey! whoa!"

The ears have fled
From the horse's head,
And the most of the horse's hair is shed;
But his legs are left
Though he's tail bereft,
And he stands very quietly while he's fed.

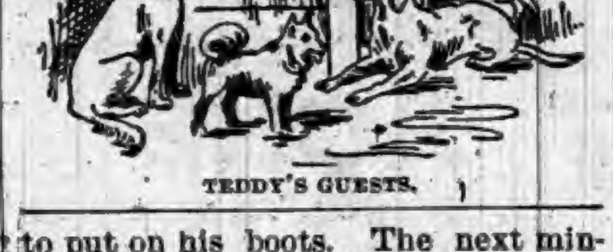
What's this? a race?
And at such a pace!
Why, the driver is getting red in the face!
"Get up, I say!"
And he whips away—
He says there's a pack of "woofs" in chase.

May the wolves, my dear,
Be never more near
Than they are on the floor of the nursery here,
And your eyes as bright,
And your grasp as tight
As now—on the reins of a proud career.
—Nursery Days.

Teddy's Party.

Teddy was 5 years old last week. The birthday came on Sunday. It was very hard to keep Sunday last week. Some way his new boots, his birthday present, would kick and prance even when they were going to church. Once he whistled. That night he put the boots under his pillow.

Monday morning everybody knew how old he was. He jumped out of bed in his nightgown and only stopped to put on his boots. The next minute he gave five kicks apiece at every chamber door.



TEDDY'S GUESTS.

"I'm as old as that!" he shouted. "Aren't you glad?"

"Are you going to give a party?" asked Uncle Tom through the keyhole.

"Ho!" said Teddy. "I expect somebody will give a party to me."

"Well," said Uncle Tom, "come up to my room after school is out and you shall have one."

"It's a whole year to 3 o'clock," said Teddy a dozen times that day. But at last he ran upstairs, two steps at a time, and knocked at Uncle Tom's door. What do you think he saw?

Why, the party of course, and the queerest party! Dogs! Yes, dogs! Dogs of all sorts and sizes. Eleven dogs! And Teddy said he made twelve. There was a little mastiff, a little St. Bernard, a little Newfoundland, a little shepherd, a little spaniel, a little greyhound, a little watchdog, a little terrier, a little bulldog, and two little shaggy dogs that Uncle Tom couldn't tell what they were. Teddy was to have his choice.

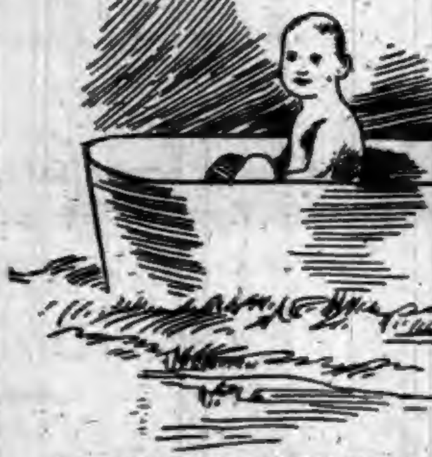
It took him a long time to choose, but after spending an hour running from one to another he chose one of the ugly, shaggy little fellows after all. Uncle Tom said he looked like Teddy. Teddy says he shall have a cat party next year. Wouldn't you like to come?—Edward Rimpo, in New York Recorder.

Babykins and His Bath.

Babykins always liked to have his bath. He never wanted to come out when Nursie was ready to dress him.

Babykins told Judy that a bath would be nice for her. But Judy went on lapping up her milk, or purring by the fire, as if she could not hear him.

Babykins had very nice times with Judy. Nursie would tie a spool to a string and roll it on the floor, and Judy would jump at it, until Babykins would laugh to see her antics. But he thought it was too bad that he could never catch Judy when he was going into his bath.



BABYKINS TAKES HIS BATH.

Sometimes when Nursie was quite through washing Babykins, she would give him the sponge and let him play with it a few minutes. It was great fun.

Babykins would try to wash Nursie, and would rub his own little face with it, for he knew what a sponge was good for.

Sometimes he would kiss it. For whenever Babykins loved anything very much he would want to kiss it.

Altogether a bath was very nice, and Babykins would have been glad to have a bath four or five times a day, if Nursie had liked it as well as he did.—Babyland.

Getting Out of Bed the Wrong Way.

Whenever little boys and girls are cross it is a sure sign they must have gotten out of bed the wrong way.

As a general thing Leonard is a very good little boy, indeed, but even the best little boys will sometimes get up in the morning feeling cross at everything and everybody, without knowing just why. When this happens to Leonard his mamma will say: "Oh, Leonard, jump right into bed again, quick."

"But why, mamma?"

"Oh, I'm sure you got out of bed with the wrong foot, so get into bed again, dear, and try to get out with the right foot this time."

So Leonard will take off his shoes and stockings and climb into bed again.

"Which foot must I put out first, mamma?"

"I don't know, Leonard," says his mother, "only be sure and put out the right foot. I can always tell two minutes after you get up if you have put out the right one."

And then Leonard is so busy looking for the right foot to put out of bed first that he forgets he ever was cross.

I think if every little boy and girl would follow Leonard's example and get back into bed again when they get up cross in the morning and stay there until they find the right foot it would be ever so much nicer. Don't you think so, too?

Baby Ruth's Lullaby.

Big and little folks all know Baby Ruth Cleveland, but not everybody knows the pretty lullaby Baby Ruth's mamma sings to her every night, as she rocks her to sleep. Here it is:

Rockaby, lullaby, bees in the clover,
Crossing so drowsily, crying so low,
Rockaby, lullaby, dear little Rover,
Down into Wonderland,
Down to the Wonderland go.

Rockaby, lullaby, rain on the clover,
Tears on the eyelids that waver and weep,
Rockaby, lullaby, bending it over,
Down on the motherworld,
Down on the other world, sleep.
—St. Louis Republic.

MRS. JONES' MISTAKE.

She Jumps at a Conclusion and Gets the Wrong Idea.

"How long is it since you've seen Hank Smith?" asked Mrs. Jones, as she washed up the silver and put it in the china closet.

"I saw him yesterday," said Mr. Jones pensively; "he was buried——"

"Mercy goodness, Jeptha! You don't mean to tell me that great strong Hank Smith was buried yesterday! Dear, dear, what are we coming to? And so Mrs. Hank Smith's a widow! I do wonder how she'll look in black. Won't she splurge round, though, on Hank's money! She ain't a little bit good-looking, but she thinks she is. Poor Hank, the world isn't worth much to a man when his wife's a widow. Something has stained that butter knife black. Do you suppose it's sterling silver? I know Mr. Sterling's name is on it somewhere. And so poor Hank Smith is gone?"

"Gone where?" asked Mr. Jones, looking up with a curious twinkle in his eye.

"How should I know, Jeptha? That depends on how he has lived. What was it that carried the poor fellow off?"

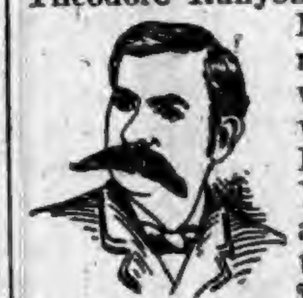
"Who said anything about his being carried off?"

"Why, you did, Mr. Jones, you said he was buried yesterday."

"So he was, but you chipped in, as usual, and interrupted me before I got to the end of my sentence—he was buried in thought."

"The land sakes!" exclaimed Mrs. Jones, as she dropped a dozen teaspoons on the floor, "what a turn you've given me, Jeptha, and all for nothing."—Free Press.

Theodore Runyon.



THEODORE RUNYON.

Among the appointments made by Mr. Cleveland this week was that of Theodore Runyon, of New Jersey, as Minister to Germany. Mr. Runyon was born in Somerville, N. J., in 1822. He is an alumnus of Yale, being graduated in 1842, and afterward he studied law and was admitted to the New Jersey bar in 1846. In 1857 Mr. Runyon was appointed Brigadier General of Militia for the county of Essex, and when the war broke out he went to the front as General of the First New Jersey Brigade. This force, under his command, was the first to go to the defense of Washington. It reported at the capital nineteen days after the first man had been mustered in. He served with the brigade till it was mustered out and received the personal thanks of Mr. Lincoln for his services in the presence of his Cabinet. Mr. Runyon was a Presidential elector in 1860, and for two years was Mayor of Newark. In 1873 he was nominated Chancellor and was reappointed to that office in 1880.

A Simple Government.

The village of Chincoteague, on the Virginia island of that name, is without other government than that administered by a local justice of the peace and a county constable, although the place has more than 1,000 inhabitants. Good order prevails, however, in spite of the fact that a great many men are idle for many weeks in summer. A strictly enforced local option law might be esteemed in part the cause of the prevalent good order, but for the fact that the working of the law is considerably mitigated by a lively "jug trade" with the mainland.

Live Oak Is Scarce.

In former times live oak was largely used in naval construction, and warships had their frames and planking principally of this wood, so that a web of historical sentiment and romance had been woven about the tree. The wood is still used to a considerable extent in building ships, but its value has increased largely on account of the diminished quantity now available

The New Bread.

The favor with which the new bread, made with Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast, has been received by our best housekeepers and most expert bread-makers, is really wonderful. "It saves all the hard and tedious work of kneading and molding," writes one. "Less than an hour from dry flour to the most perfect loaf of bread I ever saw," writes another. "Fresh bread every day," says another, "and that the lightest, finest, and most wholesome, is something to live for." "We relish the bread better than the old kind." "It is ahead of any yeast bread I ever baked." "The bread was whiter and softer." "Best of all," writes an enthusiastic housewife, "We can eat the Royal unfermented bread when freshly baked, or even when warm, with perfect impunity. It is actually an anti-dyspetic."

"This bread has a 'nutty' taste that is peculiarly pleasing," writes still another. This is owing to the fact that the active gas-producing principle of the Royal is derived from the pure grape acid.

The great value of this bread arises from the fact that in it are preserved all the most nutritive elements of the flour, some of which are decomposed and destroyed by the action of yeast. The loss of these properties is what makes fresh yeast bread unwholesome. The use of Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast is found to make a finer, lighter bread, devoid of all dyspeptic qualities. The same gas—carbonic—is produced as where yeast is used, but it is evolved from the baking powder itself and not from the flour. Thereby the bread is made more wholesome and actually anti-dyspeptic. The greater convenience, where a batch of the finest bread can be made and baked in less than an hour, with no danger of a sour or heavy loaf, must be appreciated by every one.

The receipt for making this bread is herewith given, and housekeepers will do well to cut it out and preserve it.

To make one loaf—One quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for poundcake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

Perfect success requires the most careful observance of all these details.

The author of the receipt emphasizes the statement that Royal Baking Powder only can be used because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

To every reader who will write the result of her bread making from this receipt to the Royal Baking Powder Company, 106 Wall street, New York, that company will announce that they will send in return, free, a copy of a most practical and useful cook book, containing one thousand receipts for all kinds of baking, cooking, etc. Mention this paper.

Female Drummers in Europe.

Women drummers have appeared in Europe, and, while not very numerous, those that are known are conspicuous for their ability and success. A young Swedish woman travels for a Scandinavian firm of machinists. She travels all over Europe, and expects to extend her territory. She recently arrived in London direct from Moscow, and was then expecting to start for Melbourne, all in the line of her business. One London manufacturing firm employs several women commercial travelers, and several makers of dress goods have at least one each. They find a woman's taste of great value in this especial line, and it is said would engage more women to travel if they could find them with the necessary business capacity, good appearance, good manners, and good physique.

An Arduous Profession.

Weary Watkins—I dunno. Seems to me like a profession where a man does $1,000 worth of work to get $500 for his client, must be purty hard hustlin'.—Indianapolis Journal.

"I cannot speak in too favorable terms of the good qualities of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have had a bad cough for nearly two years, coming on after the grip. I tried physicians, went twice to the Hot Springs of Arkansas, but all did no good. I got a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it gave me relief at once. The second dose seemed to go to the right spot. I afterwards got six bottles, and have taken nearly all of it, and know I am much better every way. So many medicines are advertised that do no good, I would not say anything in favor of any unless I was fully satisfied it was good and worth trying. I believe Hood's Sarsaparilla is good." After Middle Age.

Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller, the well-known writer on birds, did not know one bird from another till she was past middle age. At that time a friend who was an enthusiastic ornithologist visited her, and to entertain her Mrs. Miller took her through the New York parks, and made with her various excursions to the suburbs of New Jersey and Long Island. It was while endeavoring to prove a sympathetic companion to her bird-loving friend that her own interest was suddenly awakened. Her ardor and knowledge grew constantly, and to-day she is an accepted authority on all matters concerning the feathered species. Mrs. Miller goes soon on a trip to Utah, California, and the Yellowstone Park in pursuit of her favorite study.

What They Knew About Washington.

An Everett school-teacher whose charges range in age from 5 to 7 years determined to celebrate the anniversary of the natal day of the father of his coutry by asking a few questions. This was the interrogatory which she propounded: "What can you tell me about George Washington?" And these are a few of the individual answers:

"He was the savior of us all."

"He was the owner of the soldiers."

"He was the man who can shoot straight."

"He discovered this country."

"He was the first man in the world."

"He was the man who never bragged."

"He is the only man in the world who never told a lie."—Boston Journal.

Full of Peril

Are those disorders which, beginning with an apparently trivial inactivity of the kidneys or bladder, terminates in Bright's disease, diabetes and cystitis. The first two not only interrupt the functions of the renal organs, but destroy their structure with as much certainty as tubercular consumption does that of the lungs. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an excellent diuretic, promoting the activity of these organs without over exciting them, thus averting the deadly maladies in which their inaction is so prone to culminate. The removal from the blood of impurities which the kidneys should, but do not, when inactive secrete, is another beneficent effect of this incomparable medicated stimulant and depurent. The Bitters is, in all cases, too, a fine restorative of vigor and aid to digestion, remedies malarial disease, and banishes liver complaint and constipation.

Six Ways Around the World.

The time required for a journey around the earth by a man walking day and night without rest would be 228 days; an express train, forty days; sound, at a medium temperature, thirty-two and one-half hours; cannon ball, twenty-one and three-fourths hours; light, a little over one-tenth of a second; electricity, passing over a copper wire, a little less than one-tenth of a second.—Philadelphia Press.

Unlucky Numbers.

An Ohio editor returned the other day to General Passenger Agent Charles O. Scull a Baltimore and Ohio pass book, which had been issued to him on account of transportation. The book was No. 13, and the editor regarded the number as unlucky. A new book numbered 823 was issued to him. As the total of the figures 8, 2, and 3 is 13 it is expected that he will return the second book if this fact is noticed.

Gentlemen;—I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the suffering. I had been afflicted with catarrh of the head, throat and nose, and perhaps the bladder for fully twenty-five years. Having tried other remedies without success, I was led by an advertisement in the Sentinel-Democrat to try Hall's Catarrh Cure. His Measure.

Hoffman Howes (desperately)—Gimme a gun! I want to blow my brains out.

Successful Always.

Why is Cubeb Cough Cure called the one minute remedy? The following from Harry Elliott, vice-president of the State Insurance Company, Des Moines, explains his first experience. His wife recently became so hoarse from a cold she could not speak above a whisper. One dose of Cubeb Cough Cure afforded great relief and a few doses removed the hoarseness entirely. He also says his children have never been so free from coughs and colds as they have been since he keeps Cubeb Cough Cure in the house.

Tom—Did you enjoy yourself in the country?

Dick—You bet! And the funniest thing I seen was the hired man unmilkin' the cows.

People Wonder.

People wonder at the great results obtained from the use of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. It is a remedy that is giving universal satisfaction wherever used. Mothers praise it as a medicine for the children. It can be given to children without danger, it is very pleasant to the taste, and children cry for it. This cough syrup is a family medicine and should be in every house. You cannot afford to be without Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, it is guaranteed to give satisfaction. By dealers everywhere 25 .50 and $1. 5

Little Dick—There was a panic at the theater I went to last night.

Little Johnny—Wot's a panic?

It Cured Her.

My wife was confined to her bed for over two months with a very severe attack of rheumatism. We could find nothing that would afford her any relief, and as a last resort gave Chamberlain's Pain Balm a trial. To our great surprise she began to improve after the first application, and by using it regularly she was soon able to get up and attend to her house work. E. H. Johnson, of C. J. Knutson & Co., Kensington, Minn. 50 cent bottles; for sale by Robbins & McCord.

Johnny Billows—It's awful on a boy to be born an orphan.

Willie Felloys—Yes; he can,t never get a lay-off from school on account of his mother bein' sick.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

An attempt was made to establish a market for produce and James W. Case who continued in business at his old stand, reached out and bought wheat, clover seed, and other produce with a zeal beyond discretion and in consequence of lack of capital and inexperience became financially involved as did also, Isaac M. Thomas, a miller and sawyer whom he took into partnership and who later essayed to conduct the business alone.

Much tact to keep in touch with the market, to note its fluctuations and to hold or rush sales, is requisite to a successful grain dealer, a condition possessed in a high degree by Lafayette J. Miller, an ex-county treasurer and one of the most experienced and able grain buyers in this section.

The popularity attending the purchase of produce at Corunna was largely owing to the liberal dealing of Mr. Miller and the excellent market for grain at present in Auburn had a like origin and existence.

With the road came the commercial traveler with his trunks and sample cases and the cars brought goods and groceries ordered by our dealers, promtly to hand.

Enterprising Ft. Wayne merchants advertised low prices to Auburn patrons who found the advertisements truths and continued their trade. Here Auburn wrongfully suffered. It is not always right or good policy to buy where we can buy the cheapest and he who pays his money for home supply or work of any kind, indirectly helps himself. Every dollar's worth of goods and groceries bought of our merchants and grocers, every article of furniture, hardware, millinery, all wearing apparel from hats and bonnets to boots and shoes, every buggy or wagon ordered of home dealers and manufacturers, any and all job work and printing awarded home newspapers, promptly paid for, goes towards encouraging and assisting all these interests thus insuring their prosperity and, in turn, when business is remunerative and cash forthcoming, the town flourishes and the humblest citizen ultimately is a gainer.

It was to the farmer's interest to have a cash market close at hand not only for his grain, hogs, cattle and wool, but for hay, wood and much that is bulky, weighty and perishable; and the more employment, the more workmen and the more people, the greater supply needed to feed them.

The citizens of Auburn have come to appreciate these principles and as a result our business men have been warranted in laying in stocks from which the most fastidious have no difficulty in making satisfactory selections. There was not yet banking facilities in our town and money for deposit was still sent to Ft. Wayne, in whose banks drafts were purchased and notes were negotiated and this was a necessity, but those who went there to trade, influenced by a cut in prices, not infrequently receiving inferior goods at greater cost than what they could have been got at home, did their town an injury, indirectly lost by it themselves and for a time the consequence was felt to be a great check to Auburn's trade and prosperity.

Meanwhile the town life varied little from past years. A protracted meeting begun in the Methodist Episcopal church in January, was continued for three weeks and brought a score of accessions to the membership. The Good Templars prepared a festival, which proved a pleasant occasion and some profit to the organization.

On May 9, Kuhlman's addition to the town was officially annexed to the corporate limits, showing the readiness of adjacent land owners to respond to any call for expected expansion but despite all that could be done or said, departures kept pace with arrivals, and the census of 1870, as said, showed that on Sept. 1, the population of Auburn numbered but 677, and this was an increase of only 38 during an entire decade.

The common pleas court convened with Judge Clapp on the bench and Joseph L. Morlan as prosecuting attorney, and a full docket of cases occupied attention. A part of one week was taken up in considering a great ditch case from Wilmington township. Even at this early period, before the sinister shadows of an ambiguous and illy-executed ditch law had clouded the hopes of the DeKalb county farmer and robbed him under the guise "of personal benefit and public utility," attempts were made to secure justice from the courts, but the expense, the failures, the general sufferance finally induced an acquiescence, a helpless apathy from which the community now taking heart, is slowly recovering.

In March, an application was filed with the auditor to be presented to the board of commissioners, asking a division of Union township. Action was indefinitely postponed and the integrity of the township was destined to remain unbroken for years, to the manifest economical conduct of its affairs. In view of the substantial advantages of exceptionally low rates of taxation and the number and location of schools, it is difficult to determine what causes led to a division and the formation of Grant township from the northern portion.

(To be continued next week.)

Deserving Praise.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. Robbins & McCords druggists. 1

Dear Sir: A box of Headache Capsules were handed to me and I have used them with perfect success. They cannot be recommended too highly. Could not possibly do without them in my house. I recommend them to sufferers with this common though terrible complaint.

The pronunciation of the deposed Hawaiian Queen's name is a simple matter if one remembers to give the "u" the value of "w." It then sound like Leeleewoka-lanny.

Her digestive organs were in a very bad condition; she complained of pain in the limbs and we were very much alarmed about her. We tried everything we could think of but nothing had the desired effect until we found PITCHER'S LIVURA. CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

The L. M. C. met Tuesday evening with Mrs. Benage Long.

The Philadelphia bell went through to Chicago Tuesday the 25th.

House cleaning is the order of the day notwithstanding the cold weather.

Jasper Waterman was ordained as an elder in the Presbyterian church here last Sunday.

Mrs. Winslow is having her lawn in front of the length of her property on Railroad street graded.

Men are at work setting out flowering and decorative plants in the railroad grounds at the station.

Mrs. Sam Fisher and daughter returned to their home after visiting some time here with relatives and friends.

Wednesday of last week rain commenced falling, the weather became cold and the storm continued four days, with more or less rain ever since. We have required about as much fire as in the winter.

The usual town tickets are in the field now. both sides having made their nominations It is quite a compliment to Frank Fisher to receive the nomination for marshal again and proves that his services heretofore have been satisfactory.

Last week Thursday evening one division of the M. E. church prepared supper to which a general invitation was given, at the residence of W. A Patterson. Your correspondent has not learned the result. It rained during the evening, and may have affected the attendance somewhat.

Mrs. Day, whose husband died several years ago, is sick at present suffering from a relapse. When recovering from the first attack of sickness, her father died, and she attended his funeral. The journey, exposure and sorrow combined were too much for her, and she is again under the physician's care.

The "Y" has part of it been built over a sink hole, as has been disclosed. A large quantity of earth has been filled in seemingly sufficient, but within a short time the sunken place has fallen two feet lower. It would seem as if there is no water below to swallow the sinking earth, since as it sinks it rises in proportion on each side.

Mrs. Florence Waterman met with what might have been a very serious accident last week Tuesday evening. Mr. W. being away she attempted to start the fire in the furnace. She seems to have put coal oil on the coal and lighted it, but after a little finding it did not burn, opened the door to discover the cause when an explosion took place, throwing her down and burning her face, hands and wrists. The burns have been exceedingly painful, but Mrs. M, thinks they will heal without leaving scars, unless, it may be on one wrist. Another caution to be careful in the use of coal oil in lighting fires.

A lady who included in her purchases at one of the groceries in town, a small bag of eating apples, and left her basket while she went to other places. Upon her return, her basket was moved to the front of the counter, the bag not found as left, and part of the apples gone. At the same place a man, who had made no purchases, was seen to put a handful of eggs into his pocket, twice while seemingly handling the eggs simply to examine them. Probaly every business dealer has losses of this kind, often of much greater value, to complain of and while it is trying, and in the aggregate sums up to a large amount in the course of a year, there seems no help for it, unless by increased watchfulness and examples made of the person when discovered. If all business men would combine for this purpose, a check at least would be put to this petty pilfering.

BUTLER.

W. F. Gengnagle is reported somewhat ill.

With all the Wabash scare, there is scarcely an empty house in town that is tenantable.

Romain Campbell and wife will set up housekeeping in the Gengnagle house on East Pearl street.

John Crouse jr. has rented his farm to a Mr. Bachtel of Waterloo, and will probably re-enter the ministry.

The basket factory scheme nears materializing. Nearly $600 has been secured for the purpose of starting it.

J. H. Boon, a well known old time resident of Butler, now of Decatur, Ind., is visiting with his daughter, Mrs. W. W. Tomlinson.

The first quarterly meeting of the M. E. church will take place next Sabbath. The presiding elder, Mr. Woolpert, will be noted by his absence.

Mrs. Noble Cherry who has been near death's door for a time we are glad to report as convalescing. Her son Henry has returned to his home in Texas.

Bro. Gardner of the Review, has purchased the McLain property on West Depot street and will make a vigorous effort to become a permanet citizen.

The ladies of the M. E. church, netted over $100 at their "experience meeting" last week. We have often been reminded of the fact "that experience was a dear school."

Mr Hiner's blacksmith shop was successfully burglarized one night last week and about $50 worth of tools carried off. The night watch said he never thought of burglars carrying off a blacksmith shop.

The 74th anniversary of Oddfellowship in the United States, will be celebrated by an address by Rev. Mr. Kain, and other appropriate ceremonies at the M. E. church at two o'clock p. m. Sunday, April 30, 1893.

The Wabash people are gathering up their odds and ends and slowly evacuating their untenable quarters at this place. It is rumored with some show of accuracy, that the vacuum created by their departure, will be a void but for a brief period. At least we would advise those holding real estate here to be slow about parting with it at less than a fair value.

School Report.

MR. EDITOR: If you will kindly allow me a little space in your paper I would be pleased to give your readers a few pointers in regard to our school which closed Saturday, April 15.

The school referred to is, or was formerly known as the Beard school house in Richland township but is now located one-half mile east of the corners from where it was first built many years ago. This school was taught by N. B. Hathaway of Albion, Ind. He is a married man and at present discharging the duties of J. P. in his township.

Speaking of a well governed, well disciplined school, we as citizens and householders, think we had the model school. Not a jar or discord by way of faultfinding occurred during the whole session, which speaks very highly in favor of him as an able and efficient teacher.

Mr. Hathaway is a religious man; a man of good morals and great decision of character, and these golden characteristics he tried to and did instill into the minds of his pupils, while at the same time he so successfully led them along step by step in their text books which the average grade of each goes to show. Fearing that my articles may become too lengthy I wish to give your readers a few items in regard to the proceedings of the last day of school.

The school opened as usual and toward noon visitors with well filled baskets kept coming in until the house was well filled and when the noon hour arrived a table was spread the whole length of the house, and when the contents of the baskets were spread out with the many good things it certainly would have made ye Editor or any one else feel hungry, even if they were not quite well. After all had done ample justice in partaking of the good things, the tables were cleared away, school called to order and the closing program, prepared for the occasion, carried out, which consisted of songs, declamations, select reading, orations and such other exercises as are generally had upon such occasions.

At the close of this Mr. H. was presented with a very beautiful quilt gotten up by the pupils and on each block appeared the name of the giver. This was presented at the hands of Mrs. S. Nichols in behalf of the school and kindly responded to in a very neat little speech by the recipient. Then came the hearty handshakes, the affectionate good bys, and all wended their way homeward as did also our beloved teacher carrying with him the good wishes and kind congratulations of all concerned. I want to say in conclusion that any district wanting a good experienced teacher will find one in the person of Mr. Hathaway. As an inducemene to return to this field of labor our trustee has offered him extra inducements by the way of more pay to come and teach in his township next winter. If Mr. H. will come and teach our school again next winter our door strings are out for him.

HONDURAS LETTER.

PORT BURCHARD, HONDURAS,
March 21, '93.

EDITOR COURIER:

From the sunny clime I speak again to the readers of the COURIER. We are now in the midst of our planting season On every hand can be seen the busy laborer making new banana plantations. The immense profits of banana growing have brought many of the best northern men to this place and a very large acre age is being planted. Many of the plantations made five years ago are now paying from 200 to 500 per cent on the money invested. A new American town is springing up at this place on a most beautiful site. The owners of this concession have raised the price of the land to $20 per acre, and all the water front has been bought by settlers. I still have in my control three pieces of land that can be had for the following prices: one piece of 21½ acres situated on the Sangreliah river only one hour easy boating from Port Burchard. The location is the best on the river. Twelve acres is cleared, planted to bananas and will bear fruit next January for market; price $500, three hundred to be paid down, the balance from the first crop. Another farm of 21½ acres, eight acres cleared and planted to bananas. The land lies on this lagoon, a broad beautiful waterway, one of the very choicest lots in this country; price, $400 cash. Another piece of 43 acres, no improvements, on this same lagoon, one hour boating from the sea, fine land; price, $500, three hundred and twenty-five to be paid down, the balance in one and two years. All three of these tracts are the richest clay loam, admirably adapted to the raising of bananas, oranges lemons, cocoanuts and all other tropical productions and are a great bargain at the prices named. If any of my DeKalb county friends wish any of these tracts they should act quickly as they will not be offered at that price long. payments can be sent to me at Port Burchard. Send bank drafts as they are safe and I will send you deed by return mail. I am busy now planting orange trees. I will plant lemons also for they bear the largest crops here of any place in America. No frost, no storms, no fertilizer or irrigation needed. I wish you could see my winter garden. It wins the admiration of all who see it. Northern energy will make a paradise of this place in a few years. I still love old DeKalb but this healthy charming climate and rich soil offers attractions too great for resistance. I send my love to all the readers of the COURIER.

Yours Truly,
JOSEPH A. SHADE,
Port Burchard, C. A.

Mad Race of a Locomotive.

[Lagrange Democrat.]

Quite a commotion was caused at Wolcottville on Monday morning by a run away engine on the Wabash road. It had been left standing with the throttle open and on being fired up by the hostler in the morning, started out as soon as sufficient steam was created. The machine thundered down the new track at tremendous speed, left the rails once and jumped back again. A freight was coming up the G. R. & I. road at the time and as nearly as the spectators could tell the two would meet at the junction. Just as a terrific collision was anticipated, however, the runaway gave a lurch and crossed the junction just as the nose of its competitor's cow-catcher touched the rails. The engines were less than a foot apart. The Wabash speeder then ran about two miles down the track and stopped without further damage.

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

ON A GRADE RAILROAD IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Many Persons Killed and Injured—Children Cremated—A Mother's Tears Will Save a Murderer—Clark Gets Four Years—Revolution Ended.

IT RAN AWAY.

Terrible Accident on a Grade Railroad in Pennsylvania.

Somerset (Pa.) special: The report of a wreck which occurred on the Bare Rocks Railroad four miles south of Somerset, has just reached here. The Bare Rocks Railroad connects with the Somerset & Cambria Railroad at Woys Station, at which station the wreck occurred, only meagre details of which can now be learned. The road is two miles in length and runs to a large stone quarry. The grade is about 150 feet to the mile. In coming down this the train became unmanageable and dashed down the grade with a frightful velocity. At the foot of the incline were several loaded freight cars, into which the passenger train plunged. On the engine were Engineer Neff, his son, and John E. Pyle, with his wife and daughter. The three latter were buried under the engine, as it leaped from the track and were instantly killed. Neff and his son were fatally scalded.

On the cars were a large number of workingmen, some of whom jumped from the runaway train and escaped with slight injuries. The balance were crushed in the wreck. How many is not yet known. Seven bodies have already been discovered. The wildest rumors as to the number of persons killed and injured are afloat, and intense excitement prevails, as many of the persons known to have been on the train are residents of Somerset or have relatives living here.

The Crop Report.

Washington special: The weather bureau has issued the usual crop bulletin of which the following synopis is made:

Indiana—Unfavorable to crops; snow, ice, and light frost did not damage fruit very much.

Ohio—Wheat, grass, and oats improved, but small growth; barley and clover doing well; tobacco plants in good condition; some oats and potatoes rotting in the ground; farm work delayed; early cherries and peaches on low lands injured by frosts in southern portion.

Michigan—Weather rather favorable for crops, fruit buds in good condition and prospects of large yield favorable; oats, barley and wheat at a standstill; clover grass and meadow in fine condition; scattered counties report fairly good progress in all crops.

His Mother's Tears Will Save Him.

Albany (N. Y.) special: It may be stated with semi-official positiveness that Gov. Flower will save Carlyle W. Harris, the convicted wife murderer, from execution. It may also be stated with equal certainty that this information has been conveyed not only to Mrs. Harris, but to young Harris thimself. Gov. Flower is a very kind hearted man. He does not believe in capital punishment. He may believe that Harris is guilty, but the intercession of powerful political friends and the tearful wails of his mother have produced the desired effect and Harris will escape death.

Capture the Train.

Chicago special: A train load of Sules on the Illinois Central Railroad, bound for the World's Fair took possession of the train and imprisoned the conductor and brakemen in the baggage car. The savages claimed that one of their number had lost some property and they held the trainmen responsible. A wagon load of policemen met the train at Sixty-first street and quieted the savages and rescued the imprisoned railroad employes. The Sules were then transferred to the fair grounds.

Revolution Ended.

News has just been received which indicates that the revolution in Honduras is at an end, and that peace has been restored. President Ponciano Leiva has invested Gen. Domingo Vasquez, Minister of War, with the powers usually exercised by the executive. Gen. Vasquez is really President of Honduras. As a result of the assistance given by Nicaragua to the revolutionary leader, Policarpo Bonilla, war may be declared between that republic and Honduras at any moment.

Clark Gets Four Years.

The jury in the case of the State against Clark, the second person tried for conspiracy to murder ex-Priest Rudolph when delivering his lecture, "Why I Left the Romish Church," in the Opera House at Lafayette, has returned a verdict of four years imprisonment in the penitentiary and a fine of $2,000.

Children Cremated.

On the farm of R. A. Hones, four miles south of Aberdeen, Miss., a colored tenant named Edwards, and his wife, left their three children, all under five years of age, in the house alone and went out to work. During their absence the house caught fire and was completely destroyed. The children were cremated.

John C. New Coming Home.

The Hon. John C. New, the retiring American Consul General in London, will sail for the United States on the 3d of June. Patrick A. Collins, the new Consul General, has assumed his duties.

Eleven Persons Reported Killed.

A tornado swept over the country near Norman, Oklahoma, doing immense damage. Eleven persons are reported killed. The wires in the Territory are down and details cannot be gotten.

A Missing Ordinance.

Indianapolis special: The discovery was made public the other day that the ordinance granting a charter to the Citizens' Street Railway Company, passed in 1864, is not on file, but instead, what is regarded as a true copy of the original, has been placed on record. The whereabouts of the original document is unknown. It is said that the fact that the original was missing has been known to a favored few for several years, and that they kept still for fear that some change might be made in the copy, with no opportunity to prove the same by comparison with the original. Just what figure the missing document will cut in the present street car difficulty is hard to conjecture.

DID NOT STRIKE.

Union Carpenters at the World's Fair Are Sensible.

Chicago special: President A. P. Russell, of the Building Trades Council, went down to Jackson Park to see why the carpenters had not obeyed his order to strike. The pass on which he entered the grounds specifies that he shall not interfere with the workmen. Mr. Russell disregarded this, however, and ordered the men at work on the German building to quit. They refused to do so and as Mr. Russell persisted in his efforts to induce the men to strike they called on the Columbian guard to eject him from the building. After a lively scrimmage in which Mr. Russell got a black eye and one or two of the guards were knocked down, Mr. Russell was put in the patrol wagon and carted to the police station. His pass was taken from him and by direction of Director of Works Burnham he was escorted outside the grounds and released.

Not one of the carpenters employed at the World's Fair grounds obeyed the order to strike, and so far as can be learned it is the intention of the men to continue at work regardless of the order of the leaders.

THE WALL FALLS

Carrying Forty Men Down Into the Cellar.

A partition wall in the electric light building, now being erected at the southern corner of Hunt Street and Broadway, Cincinnati, collapsed, precipitating fourteen workmen into the cellar, a distance of forty feet. At the time of the accident there were nearly fifty men including carpenters, bricklayers, and laborers, at work in the various parts of the building, a majority of them being on the fourth floor. The four outer walls were completed but the partition walls had just begun to peep over the fourth floor. The center section gave way, carrying the workmen with it.

John Hull, a married man, 55 years old, was instantly killed.

The fatally injured are: Frank Wienewuth, head crushed; Ed. Wienewuth, crushed about the body; A. Schumas, internal injuries, and Elijah Johnson, internal injuries.

The seriously injured are: William Thompson, aged 38, back crushed; John Rowan, head cut, and John Fox, head cut.

SEVERAL MEN INJURED

By a Gas Explosion in a Bank at Detroit.

A gas explosion occurred at the Dime Savings bank, located at the corners of Griswold street and Lafayette and Michigan avenues, Detroit. One man was seriously injured, several others badly scorched and burned, and the office of the institution wrecked. Only a few of the employes were in the office when the explosion occurred. One of them entered the vault and lighted the gas and the explosion followed. John Stein, collection clerk, was thrown with great force against the cage of his office. He was frightfully burned about the head, face, and hands, the flesh on his face being literally cooked. William Harris, individual book-keeper, was the most seriously injured next to Stein. Several other employes were also badly scorched and burned. All the windows on the north side of the building were blown out, and the heavy front doors were lifted from their hinges and blown like feathers into the street.

A GREAT FLOOD.

The Red River of the North Is Out of its Banks.

Grand Forks (N. D.) special: The Red River of the North is forty-two feet seven inches above the low water mark. The rise was just a foot Tuesday an the water is still creeping upward. For miles north of this point the ice is still solid, and a gorge may form at this point at any moment which will flood a million acres of the Red River valley to a depth of from one to ten feet. A large number of families of this city were forced to move by the encroaching flood. A number of houses which formed a portion of the settlement in the rear of the Gotzian block were carried down stream against the trestle work approach of the Great Northern bridge. Considerable quantities of wreckage, small houses, barns, outbuildings, trees, wood, and carcasses of dead animals are floating down past the city.

They Meant It.

About two weeks ago Tom Tarpley of Verona, Tenn., was notified by White Caps to leave the country or be killed. Failing to do so he was spirited away by them a few nights afterward. Diligent search was made for him, but no trace could be found. A day or two ago, while Joe Tillman was squirrel hunting near Berlin, which is not far from Verona, he was walking through the woods looking up into the trees when he came face to face with Tarpley, apparently standing erect. He soon saw that Tarpley had been hanged and dead for some time. The stretching of the rope and his body had let his feet to the ground. The White Caps had executed their threat.

Judd Will Resign.

St. Louis special: Max Judd, Consul General prospective of Vienna, is a little disturbed by the report that Count Kalnokey, the Austrian Premier, had refused to accept his credentials. The cablegram stated that the Premier had given notice to the American Minister, Fred Grant, that the Austrian Government would not grant an exequatur to Mr. Judd, because of former Austrian allegiance. Mr. Judd is quoted as saying that if the Austrian Government offers any objection to his appointment he will tender his resignation to President Cleveland at once and save him further trouble.

Indiana Gas Fields.

A deal that has been pending since last summer, closed recently by a Cincinnati brokerage firm. It is the first move of a largely capitalized syndicate to gain control of the natural gas fields of Indiana. Among the syndicate are many capitalists who now become controllers of 40,000 acres of natural gas territory. It is their intention to immediately enter into competition with the Chicago Pipe Line Company and the Indiana Gas Company. They have plenty of capital, it is said. Thomas Liggett the gas man of Pittsburgh, will remain on the ground to conduct the business.

Citizens of Kansas City Must Vote.

Two general city elections have been held in Kansas City since a charter was adopted which contained a provision imposing a poll tax of $2.50 on every male citizen over 21 years old, the same to be remitted if he voted at the general election. No attention was paid to the provision, and nearly $100,000 stands on the books against citizens who failed to vote. In a test case on the constitutionality of the law Judge Gibsen has decided it valid, and that every tax could be collected with interest and costs.

Wants Civil Service Reform.

The Civil Service Reform Association of Philadelphia, of which Wayne McVeagh is President, is not entirely satisfied with the way President Cleveland has been parceling out the offices since his inauguration. At its annual meeting several speeches were made criticizing Mr. Cleaveland's administration and when the annual report was read it expressed the hope that the President would give less of his time to the spoilsmen of his party.

Panic in a Church.

Naples special: A fatal panic occurred in the church of Torre Annunziata. During the services, which were attended by a very large number of persons, part of the draperies about the altar were blown against a lighted candle. The flames spread with great rapidity and the congregation made a rush for the doors. The wildest excitement prevailed and women and children were thrown to the floor and trampled upon. The fire was quickly extinguished, and when some semblance of order was restored, it was found that eight women and five children had been crushed to death, while hundreds of others had been more or less seriously injured.

The President's Plans.

The President expects to be absent from Washington about a week in attendance upon the naval review and the opening of the World's Fair. He will go to New York and remain until the official ceremonies connected with the review are over. A short rest will follow his return to Washington and he will then leave for Chicago to be absent three or four days. The details of the program have not been arranged. All the Cabinet ladies will be with the President and the members of the Cabinet in New York and it is probable that they will also accompany the Presidential party to Chicago.

An Extra Session of Congress

The present condition of the Treasury has led to a revival of the talk of an extra session of Congress to act on the Sherman law. The President has not had anything to say on the subject to any of his Congressional callers as yet, however, and it is probable there will not be an extra session before the 1st of September, when it is understood Congress is to be called together to consider the administration plan for the revision of the tariff. The President will doubtless at the same time take occasion in his message to urge immediate action on the monetary question, and will, it is said, advise the immediate repeal of the Sherman act.

Another Big Crash.

Philadelphia special: The Pennsylvania Steel Company has gone into the hands of two receivers. The appointments were made by Judge Pennypacker under application of Alfred Earnshaw and Robert Cox, creditors of the company. The company is capitalized for $5,000,000, of which $4,500,000 has been paid in. The debt of the company amounts to $4,000,000, and the secured indebtedness is $1,000,000. The plant and machinery are valued at $3,000,000. The company does a business of $8,000,000 a year, and 4,400 men are employed. A large amount of liabilities will soon mature.

Two Murderers Escape.

Murderers Thomas Pallister and Frank Roth under sentence of death, escaped from Sing Sing prison, New York, one night recently. The guards were overpowered, one of them being blinded by pepper thrown in his eyes. The guards were locked into the cells of Carlyle Harris and Murderer Osmond, whose cells were opened and the two invited to escape, but they refused. The murderers then climbed to the top of the cells and then to the roof, knocking off the scuttle. Warden Brown has a posse after them, and has asked the Governor to offer a reward for their capture.

A Storm Tossed Vessel Arrives.

San Francisco special: The ship Hyderbad arrived here after 272 days sailing from Swansea, Wales. On September 9 the ship encountered a terrific gale which badly damaged her and shifted the cargo. On October 12 the Hyderbad experienced another gale of severity which left it in an almost helpless condition. The question of abandoning the vessel was seriously considered but it was finally decided to put into the Falkland Islands, where it took until Jan. 25 to put the battered ship in repair. The Hyderbad had a rough time of it also from the islands to this port.

Looks Like Peace.

Omaha special: The Federated Committee representing the boilermakers, blacksmiths, machinists, molders, and pattern makers, who struck last week on the Union Pacific system, met the railroad officials recently at the railroad headquarters to arbitrate differences. A proposition was made by the Union Pacific to give apprentices who had served their time standard wages, provided they were competent. This is better than the strikers asked. The main point upon which the strike hinged will be in all probability settled to-day.

Fatal Explosion of Glycerine.

Fred Badger, George Lyons, and William King were killed and their bodies horribly mutilated by the explosion of the glycerine house of the Climax Powder company at Williamsport, Pa.

Hit by a Tree.

Edward McClure, a young man about 25 years of age, residing two miles east of Sidney, Ohio, was struck by a falling tree and seriously, if not fatally injured.

SHAMEFUL ADMISSION.

WORKINGS OF A HIGH TARIFF BROUGHT TO LIGHT.

Another Industry Admits that Protection Enervates and Pauperizes the Business and Results in Higher Prices—Commercial Freedom Would Stop Canadian Exodus.

An Open Confession.

Willett and Gray's Sugar Journal of April 6 puts on an injured look and asks why the sugar refining industry should be singled out "for special attack on the ground of too much protection." It quotes the latest statistics to show that in over twenty principal manufacturing industries the protection varies from 27 to 113 per cent., while it is but 13.98 per cent. on refined sugar. This certainly does look unfair. While Uncle Sam is lending a helping hand to the manufacturing industries, he should endeavor to be impartial. Then the Journal proceeds to make a confession which it is well for the country to understand. It says:

"The advantages derived from the above noted discrimination against refiners are not very apparent. Contrary to general opinion, the prosperity of refiners is probably owing in a considerable degree to the small measure of protection accorded them compared with all other manufacturers. This small protection forces economies of management and concentration of manufacture, by means of which profits can only be made and dividends maintained, and prevents competition from the building of new refineries."

This is not the first industry that has made this shameful admission. The window glass manufacturers have admitted, in the National Glass Budget and other glass journals, that too much "protection" has made them careless and wasteful in their methods, so that instead of making good use of our abundant natural opportunities—cheap gas, fuel, sand, etc.,—and making the best and the cheapest glass in the world, we have become so slothful that we can make only inferior glass at nearly twice the European cost of good glass. The Budget frankly avows that if it had not been for "protection" and the absence of natural competition, the unsurpassed facilities for glass production coming from free natural gas would have given us the markets of the Western, if not of the Eastern, world. With protection we are still using antiquated pots instead of modern tanks, used all over Europe, and with the declining supply of natural gas we will have lost the opportunity of an age. Nature is withdrawing her bounty; protection has defeated it. Other countries less favorably situated and supplied with raw materials will continue to supply the markets that should now be ours.

The woolen men claim to be in the same nasty, measly predicament. Not long ago, when they were clamoring for more protection, they were pretending that it would stimulate home competition and cause prices to decline. Now, since the jig is up with them and their shoddy claims, and considerable of their protection is to be withdrawn, they are ready and willing to go back on all past statements and to make the most shameful admissions to save as much as possible of their unconstitutional and unholy bonus. Here is what the American Wool and Cotton Reporter of Feb. 23 said:

"Were the Mills bill put in operation to-day the measure of protection afforded by it, so far as pertains to the woolen industry, would be less than would have been realized at the time the bill was formulated. Conditions have changed considerably during the past four years, and what would have been a sufficient measure of protection then would be inadequate to-day. The foreign manufacturer, because of the obstacles of higher duties, has been forced to a lower plane of economy, while the domestic manufacturer, with a wider market than formerly to cater to, has had less incentive to restrict and economize. These conditions have widened the difference between them, and has increased the advantage the former has over the latter."

Higher prices and slovenly methods of manufacture, then, are the heritage of thirty years of protection and high taxation. Instead of strengthening our weak industries and fitting them to stand alone and to produce goods at competitive prices, it enervates them and makes them a heavier and heavier burden upon the taxed consumers. Like indiscriminate charity it increases the evils it seeks to remedy. Once pauperize an industry and allow it to draw its support from honest, self-supporting industry and it will soon lose that self-reliance and independence which is the mainspring of success.

If, as the Sugar Journal says, "small protection forces economies of management and concentration of manufacture, by means of which profits can only be made and dividends maintained," the Journal ought to be thankful at the prospect of continuing and increasing this economic and profit-producing system, which the present Congress will surely inaugurate, by greatly reducing the amount of protection now enjoyed, or rather wasted, by their spendthrift pauper industries. They should rejoice at the prospect of earning an honest living, and sixty millions of consumers will join with them in the chorus.—Byron W. Holt.

Why Canadians Emigrate.

We are told by the Mail and Express, and other high Republican authorities, that the Canadian Government is unable to stem the exodus of its people from the eastern provinces into our New England and Middle States, and that, to counteract this loss, "nearly three hundred agents are constantly employed traveling about the Western States to encourage emigration to Canada, and offering $10 bonus to a head of a family and $5 for each member. Besides this, free homesteads are provided." Yet the tide is running strong from Canada to this country and the last census shows that there are nearly 1,000,000 Canadians here.

The Mail and Express says Canadians come here because "they are convinced that on this side of the dividing line lie opportunities for thrift and industry." This is undoubtedly true. Why, then, are there greater opportunities for thrift and industry here? Both countries have high protective tariffs, and both have millions of unused and fertile farm and timber lands. It is not nature's fault that opportunities are greater in this country; it is man's fault. The artificial restriction of trade and commerce by "protective" tariffs is mainly responsible for the present exodus. It would drive the oppressed out of any country which has no greater variety of climate than has Eastern Canada. "Protect" Michigan or Maine from the rest of this country, as Canada is now protected from it, and the cost of living will go up and wages down so much that thousands will emigrate to the other States and great offers of cash will be necessary to allure them back to their "protected" homes.

The pinch of protection is felt more in small countries, which lack a great diversification of soil and climate. Germany, Austria, Italy and Russia are being depopulated by protective tariffs, and their oppressed come to this country because it is the greatest free trade country on the globe; trade being absolutely free from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans, and from Canada to Mexico. Five years of McKinleyism would cost old England one-fifth of its population and the manufacturing and commercial supremacy of the globe. One decade of high protection has started Canada on the down grade and has brought about a reaction there which it took three decades to bring about in this great country. The sentiment for annexation is growing rapidly there. On April 4 the Hon. Honore Mercier, Prime Minister of Quebec from 1886 to 1892, addressed an immense audience in Montreal, "On the Future of Canada." He pictured the great advantages that would follow union with the United States, and advocated political independence as the first step to annexation. The meeting passed a resolution in favor of immediate independence.

Practically all to be gained by annexation, of real benefit to the people, could be obtained by the removal of the two tariff walls between the countries. Canadians are responsible for one of these and could remove it any time. We will promise to remove half of our wall and to take the McKinley barbed wires off the top during the next two years. It is not likely that we will stop the good work at once, and who knows what may happen before the twentieth century arrives? Slaves who realize their condition and who could appreciate freedom, are already half free; and freemen, who do not appreciate their liberty and cannot govern themselves wisely, are half slaves. When Canadians have studied their conditions and understand the nature of their bonds they will virtually be free, even though politically and nominally subject to Great Britain.

There's a Good Time Coming.

Our principles lead to a refusal of bounties and subsidies which burden the labor and thrift of a portion of our people. We shall challenge "wild and reckless pension expenditure." Our Government rests on the equality before the law which is guaranteed to every citizen.—Grover Cleveland's inaugural address.

No bounties! No subsidies! Stricter pension laws and all.
Fewer taxes on necessities! My goodness what a fall
For the gluttons and the greedy 'uns who've lived up our needs!
What a raking off of barnacles, what a digging up of weeds.

What a cleaning out of parasites, what a hoeing out of cant,
What a howl they will be setting up, and oh! my eye, what rant
We shall hear from Dan to Beersheba, from farthest North to South,
When these disgruntled, pampered hogs shall one and all give mouth.

They've lived so long on other folk they felt quite well assured
That for another century they'd surely be endured,
And now they find they've got to quit, and that right mighty quick,
The pain they feel is out of all proportion to the prick.

For after all they'll get their due, as much as all the rest,
But then for years they've fattened upon nothing but the best;
And that they now should be denied the right to filch no more
Is what they didn't bargain for, "Equality in law."

Equality's a doctrine in which they don't believe,
Unless it be the doctrine of equality to thieve
An equal share in subsidies, or bounties, or a tax
By which they each could richer grow and fill their treasure sack.

But now we kind o' seem to see as how them days are done,
And a brighter, better, juster reign of equality's begun,
A time in which the good old phrase, equality in law,
Means what our founders meant it should, the same for rich and poor.
—Jack Plain, in American Industries.

Who Is Afraid?

The Tribune remarks that "a 25 per cent. tariff on woolen goods alarms people, quite naturally."

Indeed! What people? Are the people who wear woolens alarmed at the prospect of a reduction in the taxes upon them?

Or is it the manufacturers? If so, why should they be alarmed? They will get their raw material free, as they did under the tariff of 1816–19, when the duty on manufactured goods was 20 to 25 per cent. If that was sufficient to protect this "infant manufacture" seventy-five years ago, why is it not adequate now?

The duty on manufactures of wool was only 25 to 30 per cent. in 1861, under the original war tariff, and but 30 to 35 per cent. in 1862–63. Why should the people pay two or three times as much now?—New York World.

THE Hon. John De Witt Warner gives some sound advice and strikes straight from the shoulder when he says: "No one will question the right of a party to put as many recommendations in its platform as crammed the one adopted at Chicago. It was perfectly understood, however, that tariff reform was the issue we made. In that sign we conquered. If we permit ourselves to be diverted from it before our pledges are fulfilled we shall be horsewhipped at the polls the first time the people get a chance at us."

POSSIBLY Gov. McKinley's recent experience has convinced him that the foreigners don't pay the tin-plate tax.

RIVALS.

A Story of the Vengeance of the Sea, Written for This Paper.

BY MAXWELL GRAY.

CHAPTER I.

The village straggles over a windy, treeless level above steep cliffs, the bases of which are eaten away and tunneled under by the perpetual action of the sea. Thence in quiet weather comes the low lullaby of a scarcely audible surge; there at the broken base of the storm-battered wall it murmurs on caressingly through sunny noons and moonlit nights, rarely quite still; it deepens at times to a mellow roar, when a white sheet of surf spreads over the far-stretching reef.

From this low roar, through many a crescendo, the sea music rises to a complex symphony of warning thunders and blending harmonies, heard far inland, then the soft surf rolls and rages into tumbling avalanches, the breakers rise and rush up the cliffs till these are half sunken in a white waste of foam and crowned by a blinding spray mist. Sometimes the billows rush like winged monsters out of the very heart of the sea and hurl themselves crashing on the limestone walls, till the spray flies far over the summits and dissolves, dream-like, upon the windy waste. That is why the square, rock-like tower, rising above the graves of shipwrecked strangers, is often crusted over with fine salt, and only sea-loving things grow near it.

All this fury of waters has so wasted the shore that only the hardest rocks remain in towering cliff and ragged reef; the sandstone has either been torn out by the sea or worn out by a tiny rill wandering seawards and making a chasm, irregular and broken into many a ledge, steep at the bottom and shelving broadly toward the top.

Here is short, scant pasture, and many a sea-loving plant, with heather and gorse feathering, away at the top. And here, high in a sheltered nook, commanding the southward sea, is, or rather was some years ago, Mary Deane's low stone cottage, in its well-tended garden, with its shining myrtles and fuchsia bushes.

Walled from the north and east by the cliff, partially screened from the west and fully open to the south, this garden was a paradise, and was for many years the chief support of Widow Deane and her son, now a strong, broad-faced man of much resource, partly fisher, partly gardener, and partly boatman, who tended the cow, the pigs, the few hardy sheep browsing on the broken cliff, and the donkey which drew garden stuff, crabs and lobsters, eggs and butter to market weekly. Robert Deane could knock up a shed out of a few planks of driftwood, and most things out of odds and ends. He was a comely, square-built fellow, with bright, merry blue eyes, and short, curly brown beard and hair.

One gray still October afternoon he was whistling in front of a lean-to shed at the foot of the cliff chopping firewood, of which he had already piled a good stock, made chiefly from the spars and ribs of a bark that went to pieces on the reef in the last winter. Through the open cottage door he could see his mother sitting at work by a crackling hearth fire, over which a swinging kettle sang. An oak-cased clock ticked cosily by the staircase. The dark oak dresser displayed its gleaming crockery. Flowers bloomed in the window. All was tidy and clean, including Widow Deane in her white cap and gray hair. Sea shells, coral and foreign figures on the mantelpiece, the shell of a large tortoise, and the model of a full-rigged man-of-war gave the little cabin a full sea flavor.

Presently Robert's rough-coated dog Reefer cocked his ears, Robert's face brightened, foot steps sounded along the cliff, the gate clicked open, and two women stepped up the single path.

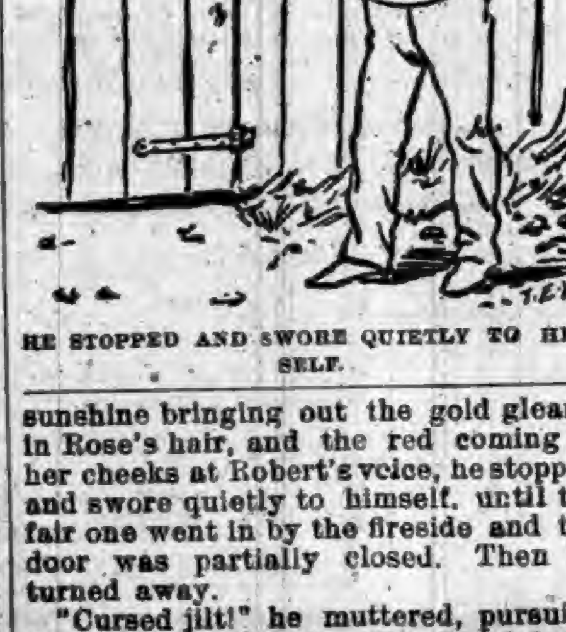
"Here we be, Robert," said the elder of the two.

"Ay, ay, Mrs. Fielding," he replied, dropping his bill-hook and coming forward; "here you be, and welcome you be, and here's a fine lot of fire-wood for Rosie come winter."

The younger woman colored with happiness and spoke to the dog dancing round her.

"Reefer knows the new missus already," said Widow Deane, coming out and kissing Rosie's fresh, firm cheek.

A man was passing down the steep path, screened from their sight by a fuchsia-tree growing by the gate, but not so thickly that he could not see through its outer sprays. When he saw the two mothers and Robert and the sunshine bringing out the gold gleams in Rose's hair, and the red coming to her cheeks at Robert's voice, he stopped and swore quietly to himself, until the fair one went in by the fireside and the door was partially closed. Then he turned away.



HE STOPPED AND SWORE QUIETLY TO HIMSELF.

"Cursed jilt!" he muttered, pursuing his downward path, with his lobster pots on his shoulder. "Ay, Bob Deane, you smiles superior on me, do ye? Married a Monday and me to ring your bells, eh? George Attrill ring for another chap's wedding his own girl! Look to yourself, Bob Deane; a deal may chance between this and Monday!"

He stopped again at a lower turn of the narrow patch and looked once more at the faint glow from the cottage window, fronting the moaning sea, then he suddenly dashed his lobster-pots to the ground and himself beside them, face downwards. The wail of a sea-gull flying homewards and the low murmur of the surf at the cliff bases alone broke the silence of the desolate place.

"But I'm not to be mistress here," Rose was saying, standing in the glow of the hearth, so soon to be hers; "the house and all is yourn, Mrs. Deane; 't'sn't even Robert's." So she said in her courtesy, looking round the pretty neat nest she meant to keep and arrange so carefully.

"'Taint all shipshape yet, Rosie," said Robert; "but mother and me reckons to get all trim and taut by bed-time."

"To be sure, Robert worked like a horse," added his mother; "but things is thirtover when anybody's in a hurry."

Everything was perfect, the Fieldings said. They admired the various contrivances effected by Robert's ingenuity—the fresh curtains he had nailed up, and the sofa he had made out of a chest, covered with chintz, the new crockery, the large new family Bible.

"And father's present ain't come yet," Mrs. Fielding said mysteriously. Rose grew brighter as each treasure was displayed. She thought of the short winter days, when Mrs. Deane was to be with a brother ten miles away, and she and Robert were to be alone together. How sweet the cottage would look in the early dusk, when Bob came home tired and cold to his bright fire and his tea. And then the long evenings with the concertina and a book and her needle, and his pipe and the pleasant chat. And then——

"Come on, Rosie," Robert said, holding the stair-foot door open; "mother is gone upstairs."

She woke from golden dream to golden reality, took and returned Robert's kiss, and followed him up the steep stairs opening upon the sitting-room below to the sleeping-rooms above, one on the right hand, which was Mrs. Deane's, and one on the left, screened from the open stair by a partition of Robert's contrivance, with an adapted door bought second-hand and put into a rough lintel of his making.

"That is nice," Rose exclaimed. "Why, Robert, you're as good as any 'prenticed carpenter!"

All was made ready, neat and spotless by Robert's deft hands. A satisfied smile crisped his brown face when he looked at the simple plenishings and askek if all were as Rose wished.

The mothers commended and commented; Rose, looking shyly on, thought everything perfect; the new looking-glass, the clean, coarse linen, the geraniums blooming in the small diamond-paned window set nest-like in the thatch; the row of pegs fixed against the gay, new wall-paper for the wife's gowns; Robert's wedding suit folded neatly on a chair.

Rosy morning sunbeams would steal in through that window, turning to gold and tracing a cross-barred pattern on the boarded floor that she would keep so white—on the strip of carpet and on the patchwork quilt. Through dark winter nights the sea would roar its hoarse lullaby, shrieking winds would coil themselves round the safe cottage-nest till it shuddered in their grasp; at times the deep groundswell would boom through the stillness of the coming storm. Summer moonbeams would weave a silvery glamour about the room, while soft airs stirred the myrtle-blossom, and the low murmur of surf on the beach sounded faintly through the charmed silence.

The mothers were busy putting some final touches; Robert called Rose's attention to a lettered scroll on the wall: "Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations."

A sudden bewildering, half-grasped sense of the deep significance of life, the solemnity of human ties, and the divinity enfolding all, rushed up from hidden depths to the girl's unawakened soul and broke upon her, just as a giant billow rushes out of the sea's heart, and breaks on the cliff-face in storm; her face crimsoned; her heart throbbed.

Robert led her to the window.

"Look," he said; "a vessel in the offing! Many a craft you'll make out of a summer's day. And here's myrtle still abloom."

He leaned out of the open casement and plucked a spray, leaning over it and talking of the sea, while the mothers laughed with nodding heads and hands held before their mouths, together.

A robin was piping softly in the sheltered garden. The song of the sea came up from below, louder now and with something more of menace in it than a while since. Robert's brown face was traced upon the wide, slow-heaving sea-plain; and far down at the mouth of the chasm, by the white surf-fringe on the yellow shingle, was the figure of a solitary man, too far off to be recognized.

But it came into Rose's mind that it might be George Attrill, and the thought was like a cloud passing across the sun.

"'Tis a pleasant lookout," she said, taking the myrtle blososm. "I never could seem to get on for long without I could see the sea."

"Me and you like the same things mostly," he replied; "I seem lost away from the sea. Look at her now! Storm's coming. There's a groundswell growling. Mother, she can't abide the groundswell. Minds her of father," he added, in an undertone. "But it's meat and drink to me to hear it. Many a time I've said I should never have nor a wife, only the sea. She was my first sweetheart."

"That's true enough," broke in his mother, for whose sake Bob had given up his wish to follow his shipwrecked father's calling.

The inspection over, and all pronounced in order, they went down stairs. The earthenware teapot was set on the round table, and Bob took up the mushrooms and potatoes which had been roasting in the wood ashes, and they fell to with country heartiness, while Reefer looked on, bolt upright, with his paws dropping beseechingly on his chest, and a heedless and improvident kitten played with his tail and frisked about in irresponsible gayety.

Many details had yet to be discussed, because, as Mrs. Fielding said, "Folks don't get married every day," and each arrangement evoked some reminiscence of her wedding and that of Mrs. Deane, and they suggested some sage counsel to Robert and Rose, so that before they rose from table dusk had begun to close in, with little shivering gusts of wind and ominous rumblings in the chimney. The sea-song was rising in fitful crescendo; the firelight played upon Rose's face and bright braided hair. Her lover thought her more and more like her own flower, especially when he drew something bright from his pocket and fitted it on her finger under the table.

"It's a big 'un for to last," he whispered, replacing it in his pocket.

Just as the Fieldings stepped out onto the winding path on the way home with Robert they almost ran against a man climbing up from the shore.

"Good night," Bob sang out.

"Good night," the other returned, gruffly, shrinking back in the dim light that still lingered.

"Why, 'tis Jarge Attrill," cried Robert; "come on, Jarge, say you'll come a Monday. Me and you was always mates, you mind."

"Me and you'll never be mates no more, Robert Deane," he growled, striding on, a tall, strong fellow, with a sailor's gait and dark eyes flashing through the obscurity. Then he turned on a sudden and shouted: "When that light wench gets tired of you, same as she done of me, you'll wish you'd a let marryin' alone, Bob Deane," and marched on again, whistling.

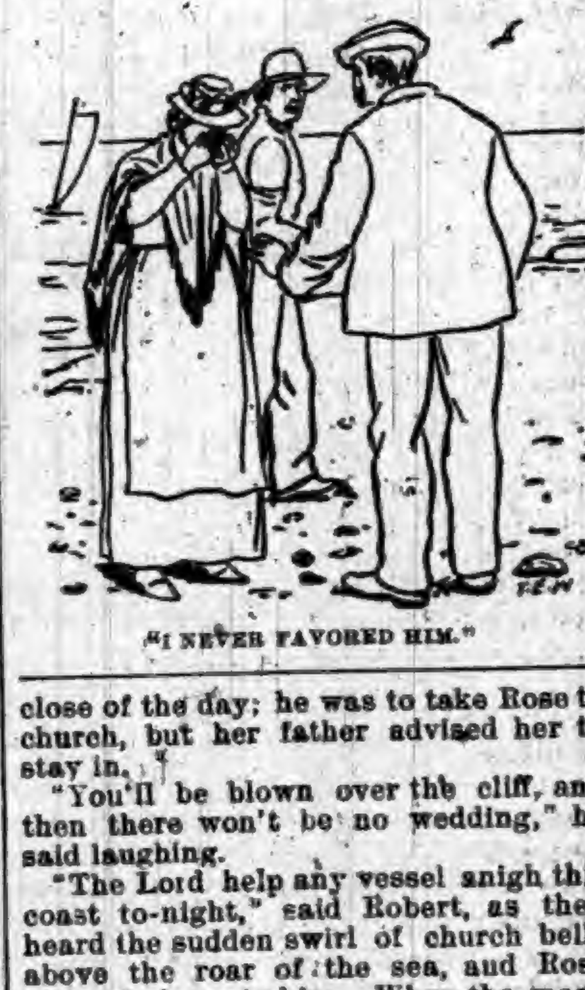
All that night the sea's song was loud and exultant. Next morning the waves came rolling in like long-ranged cliffs of glassy green, with beetling foam summits, raging into snow cataracts and clashing up the cliff face in blinding masses of spray; the groundswell sucked the shingle back with a threatening rattle that sounded like an angry cry above the continuous thunder of the breakers. Men stood gazing seawards, battling with the gusty wind, and talking of the lifeboat house in the adjacent bay, saying that it could never round the point with such a surf.

Rose was little troubled by the gathering storm, her heart was too full of personal matters. The church bells rang out from the windy tower in fitful clashes as the sound was caught and tossed about by the gale, now pealing loud on the blast, now unheard for minutes together, and then pealing out, jangled again. She did not go to church, partly because her banns were called, and the hours flew swiftly on to the wedding day.

Robert came up to tea in the afternoon, all blown about and staggering in the gusts, which grew fiercer with the close of the day; he was to take Rose to church, but her father advised her to stay in.



"I NEVER FAVORED HIM."

"You'll be blown over the cliff, and then there won't be no wedding," he said laughing.

"The Lord help any vessel anigh this coast to-night," said Robert, as they heard the sudden swirl of church bells above the roar of the sea, and Rose pressed closer to him. When the moon sailed out from the wrack they could see the great breakers caught sideways by the wind and thrown up in tall white columns, moving ghostlike and vanishing in a white whirl of foam; misty white wings of it flew over the land, the salt was in their faces and hair.

The church was some way inland by the village proper, a second village having grown up about the seaward gorge, the ancient haunt of smugglers and wreckers. When the lovers reached the church they drew up breathless in the lee of a buttress to recover before going in. Rose was to go home with her brothers, Robert having promised to get back early to his mother, who was lonesome in storms.

"So good-night Rosie," he said, "this here's the last unmarried kiss, my dear. Ten o'clock sharp, mind."

As he spoke, a low, sullen boom sounded, through a slight lull in the wind. The heavy stroke fell as if on their hearts. "Hark!" cried Bob, and through the fury of the storm and the broken pealing of the bells they heard the low boom again, the guns of a ship in distress.

"The Lord keep her off this coast!" said Robert, lingering after Rose went in, and looking seawards in a moon-glimpse, and seeing nothing but the raging waste and the light on the headland.

His heart yearned to his first love, the beautiful, terrible sea; she was calling him; he did not go into the church. Try as she would to fix them on the prayers, Rose's thoughts wandered to the iris-tinted future, and George Attrill's words haunted her. Conscience told her that she had given him some slight encouragement before she knew that Robert cared for her. Poor George! She heard him come in with the other ringers after the service began.

The clergyman's voice sounded thinly through pauses in the wild revelry without. The church shuddered at the fierce onset of the winds, the roof shook, now and then a bell gave out a tremulous vibration, the storm noises were multiplied and prolonged in the lofty spaces of the high vaulted building, which had battled with and echoed the tempests of centuries.

The congregation was small and thinly scattered about the large, dimly lighted church; the responses died in ghost-like murmurs; the clergyman's raised voice was drowned from time to time in louder gusts of wind; the hymn was like a faint cry of distress heard fitfully through the tempest.

Oh, hear us when we cry to Thee
For those in peril on the sea.

rose quaveringly from the choir, when through the dying cadence of the last line there broke forth a loud and hurried knocking on the solid church doors, which were shut and barred against the storm.

The organ rumble stopped abruptly, the more resolute voices beginning the next verse were left solitary and ceased in half-uttered notes; the knocking was repeated more loudly and urgently, a veritable stroke of doom to some present. It was the call for such of the lifeboat's crew as were there.

The congregation stood silent and expectant. The heavy tramp of men's feet down the windy aisles sounded through the rumble and crash of the storm, and echoed in the hearts of women. Rose was ignorant of Robert's absence; the young men sat behind her; but she knew, though she could not see, that George Attrill, one of the crew, went out, as did most of the men. A heavy sadness fell upon her; the sound of the church doors closing with an echoing clang struck to her very heart.

The organ rumbled out again, the grand hymn, with its surge-like rhythm and long-gathering swell, became, in the tremulous women's and boys' trebles, a piteous wail, dying away into the storm and darkness. Rose's full voice failed her, and she sang no more. The sparse congregation were visibly disquieted, they could scarcely keep their seats, the pulpit candles went out in a gust, the unheeded sermon broke off prematurely, the clergyman dismissed his flock, and went down to the shore.

Late that night Rose's younger brothers came home with tidings that the vessel had struck on the reef, the lifeboat had twice gone out to her, and twice had to put back; nothing could live near her.

Midnight came, but Moses, the grown-up son, had not returned. The mother and daughter sat up for him far into the night, listening to the roaring storm and talking fitfully, now of bygone wrecks, now of the approaching wedding, until Rose was sent to bed, and immediately fell asleep, with the golden tissue of her dreams perpetually broken by that loud and hurried knocking on the church doors.

BLOODY REBELLION.

MORE TROUBLE FOR PRESIDENT DIAZ TO FACE.

Mexican Towns Sacked by Lawless Desperadoes—Government Troops Routed and Captured—Cold Weather and Excessive Rains Cause Damage to Crops.

Rebellious Mexicans.

A dispatch from Chihuahua, Mexico, says: A fugitive from justice in New Mexico named Amalia recently returned to his native mountains and stirred up a large force of ignorant malcontents, outlaws and religious fanatics, and, arming them, captured the town of Temaxachic, near Guerrero, an important mining town beyond the summit of the Sierra Madre. Little resistance was offered, but three men were wounded and the town was sacked.

Amalia then went southward towards Tomachich and had a skirmish with General Santa Anna and 300 men, who surrendered and afterward joined him.

The combined forces under the leadership of Amalia then marched on the town of Santa Tomas and captured it without resistance.

The rebels then took the town of Guerrero, which was garrisoned by volunteer troops, who surrendered without fighting.

At this point the Federal troops came up, and the rebels fled to Santa Tomas, pursued by the troops. The Federal troops were surprised at the latter place, and in the battle that ensued 130 of them were killed or wounded. The rebels suffered little loss, but the troops were completely routed. Several officers were among the number killed.

Re-enforcements of the Government troops arrived after the battle and will attempt to defend Guerrero.

RAIN DID SOME DAMAGE.

Showing Made by the Weather Crop Bulletin for the Last Week.

According to the weather crop bulletin issued at Washington, the past week has been cooler than usual, except in the South Atlantic States and in the vicinity of the lower lakes, where a slight excess in temperature was reported. The greater portion of the wheat belt, which was deficient in moisture at the last report, received during the week from one to two inches more than the usual amount of rainfall. The spring wheat region also received about one inch more than the normal rainfall, but in this section the moisture was already in excess. Generally the week was cold and not favorable for farm work throughout the principal agricultural States, except in the east portion of the cotton region, where the weather was generally favorable for farm work, but where rain is needed. Special telegraphic reports are:

Arkansas—Weather not so favorable; severe local storms of wind, rain and hail did considerable damage, chiefly in eastern portion; corn doing well; cotton planting general; small grains fine.

Tennessee—All crops looking well; low lands badly washed by floods on 13th and 14th; some damage to corn by cut worm; tobacco plants improving since rain.

Kentucky—Excessive rains retarded farm work; grasses and meadows improved.

Missouri—Fields generally look fair, but work retarded and ground too wet and cold for germinating.

Illinois—Oat seeding complete, some up and looking fine; fruit injured by frosts, especially in southern counties; wheat improving; meadows and pastures good in southern portions.

Indiana—Rainfall excessive; temperature and sunshine deficient, favorable to crops but not to plowing and seeding; wheat improved.

Ohio—Wheat, oats, clover, and grass made splendid growth; farm work, plowing, and seeding stopped by heavy rains.

Michigan—Crops have advanced slowly owing to high winds and cool nights; plowing for oats general; some potatoes and early vegetables planted; meadows and pastures in fine condition; fruit prospects excellent.

Wisconsin—But little farm work done during the last week, owing to freezing weather; the season is, however, ten days early; all crops and conditions are very favorable; cranberry vines wintered well.

Minnesota—Snow on ground in northwest; nothing done and little progress made elsewhere; soil too wet and cold; potatoes being planted in southern counties; weather during the week very unfavorable for seeding.

Iowa—In southwest district dry, cold winds have injured winter wheat; seeding practically completed; plowing in progress; corn planting begun in southeast district.

North Dakota—Excessive precipitation and low temperature has stopped all work since Tuesday; seeding, of which but little has been done, will be resumed this week should weather be favorable.

South Dakota—Seeding and other farm work retarded by wet, stormy, and freezing weather; bottom land wet.

Nebraska—Small grain mostly sown, but germinating slowly and unevenly when at all; much seed blown out of the ground by high winds; fall-sown grain killed in southeast portion, and below average elsewhere.

Kansas—Cold, rainless week except in southeast counties, where from two to four inches of rain fell; wheat, oats, and pastures making no progress; corn growing well.

To Change Bank Examining System.

A Washington correspondent telegraphs that at soon as Mr. Eckels, Controller of the Currency, assumes his duties, Secretary Carlisle intends to reorganize the system of examining national banks. The Secretary has expressed the belief that there are too many banks for the examiners to look into, and it is said he has decided to reduce their number. Banks are supposed to be examined annually, but under the present circumstances it is sometimes more than a year before an examination of the books is made. It is probable the States will be redistricted and the banks evenly divided among the examiners. It is thought that the Secretary will not appoint any examiners before June, and then the appointees will be practical bankers. He desires to prevent such dishonesty as shown in the affairs of the banks which recently failed in Boston, Philadelphia, and Nashville, and for that purpose, after making the redistricting, will ask Congress to enact a law giving the examiners more power in looking out for the perpetrators of frauds.

Terrible Disaster on Lake St. Clair.

A disaster, resulting in the death of two men, the probably fatal injury of a third, and the severe scalding of a fourth, occurred on Lake St. Clair Wednesday morning. The steamer Choctaw, Capt. W. W. Smith, coal-laden from Cleveland to Milwaukee, was entering the lake when the cylinder head blew out. Nelson Chambers, the cook, who was standing nearest the engine at the time, was so badly scalded that he died within ten minutes. C. Jones, fireman, died after being taken to the hospital. F. P. Thompson, oiler, was badly burned about the hands and head and in the mouth and throat from inhaling steam. His recovery is doubtful. The engineer, F. Smith, was badly but not dangerously scalded about the hands.

Many Hurt by a Cyclone in Arkansas.

At noon Wednesday a terrific cyclone passed through the valley just south of Fayetteville, Ark. Its path was about 300 yards wide, and it left a barren waste. Many houses were utterly demolished. Out of one family, whose name is Wright, consisting of eight persons, not one escaped serious injury; but it is probable that all except one child will recover. Parts of their house were carried miles away. A number of others were reported injured, but how many and to what extent cannot be determined. The citizens are doing everything possible for the distressed.

The largest vineyard in the world, according to a correspondent, belongs to Senator Stanford, of California. It consists of 3,500 acres of bearing vines.

FOURTEEN MEN PERISH.

LOST OFF MILWAUKEE IN THE FEARFUL STORM.

Working Upon the Waterworks Crib, Their Companions Unable to Reach Them from Shore, They Take Refuge in the Air Shaft Only to Die.

Tale of a Fearful Night.

In the fearful gale which swept over Lake Michigan Wednesday night fourteen men who were at work on the crib on the outer end of the intake tunnel at Milwaukee, 5,000 feet from the shore, met their death. One of them escaped in a manner almost miraculous and lives to tell the tale of terror and suffering.

The dead are:

Jack McBride, engineer.
Michael Dwyer, fireman.
George Gregg, miner.
Charles Johnson, miner, Chicago.
Gus Lerkowitz, miner.
William Preussner, miner, Chicago.
John Pisezu, miner.
Jack McConnell, miner.
Eben Allen (colored) cook.
Jim Murphy, miner.
Tom Healey, miner.
Jim (last name unknown), miner.
Joe McCarty, miner.
Filo Spenner, miner.

The dreadful storm raging throughout the night had lashed the lake into a seething mass of foam. Immense waves were rolled toward the shore by a furious east wind and carried away the house built on top of the crib at the mouth of the tunnel about three-quarters of a mile from the pumping works at the foot of North street. The house on the crib contained two stationary engines and the tools used by the men. It was built of heavy timbers fastened with iron bands, yet it was swept into the roaring waters like an eggshell and washed ashore. For a mile or two the shore of the lake was strewn with timbers, boards, tools and articles of clothing worn by the men in the ill-fated crib. At daybreak the men at the pumping station noticed that the house on the crib had disappeared, and the tug Welcome took a lifeboat with a crew of five in tow and headed for the tunnel.

The progress of the Welcome was watched by thousands of people. When Capt. Petersen succeeded in reaching the crib he was met by a horrible sight. One man, James Miller, was still alive and clinging to a post. About him were the bodies of two or three of his comrades.

Miller was safely brought ashore, and told a story of peril and suffering which has rarely been equaled on the lakes.

Fifteen men were on the crib. The lake had been very rough, the men on land had not been able to get out to them, the provisions gave out, and the doomed men ate their last meal thinking that certainly before nightfall the boat would be able to reach them.

In the evening the storm increased and the men became alarmed. They had confidence in the strength of their house, however, and contined their work. It was not until about 8 o'clock that the men fully appreciated their position. Work was stopped and the men, one and all, determined to seek safety in the air shaft. The big cast-iron cover was raised and the fifteen men descended into the tub, clinging as best they could to the ladder.

There out in the lake in the midst of the furious gale they listened to the storm outside and heard the waves beat against their refuge and literally tear their shelter apart. But they knew they were safe. The water could not get into the shaft, and under the circumstances they could live there for many hours. The steady click of the automatic pump forcing air and life into their subteranean prison cheered them to further efforts to save their lives.

So the hours sped on. All through that fearful night the men hung to the ladder and heard the waves which every second were smashing and pounding and tearing at the little house on top. Piece by piece and part by part the cribhouse was washed away, and at six o'clock the air pump, the mainstay of the imprisoned men, was washed away. They did not hear it go, but its loss was plainly made known to them by the slow but steady rise of the water in the tube and the increasing foulness of the atmosphere. Slowly but surely the water climbed up on the men, and they knew that the time had come for action. A consultation was held and for over two hours the men hesitated. Some were in favor of waiting in the shaft until the last moment, others thought a break for the top of the crib at once their best chance. It was at best a choice of two evils and almost certain death in either case.

It was decided to leave. Only five succeeded in reaching the outside. The nine men who were not strong enough to get out were drowned by the water coming into the shaft, and four out of the five who got out were mangled or drowned by the tremendous floods which were lashed over the crib.

The first known of the disaster was Thursday morning when those living on the shore missed the familiar building out in the lake. The shanty was gone and the beach was strewn with its broken remnants. The beach was filled with weeping women whose cries for lost husbands and fathers arose even above the sullen roar of the waves. The shore was lined with a large crowd gazing helplessly across the water. Finally some forms were seen on the deck of the crib. With the aid of telescopes it was made out that there were six men there who were waving their arms to the people on shore. Every huge wave swept over them and it seemed as if they would be washed away at any instant. For hours the crowd watched the men, and not until 11:45 had the weather moderated sufficiently to allow the lifeboat to go out.

As none of the bodies have been washed ashore the supposition is that they are in the airshaft where the men were drowned. Miller, the man rescued, went from Chicago not long ago. His family now lives in Milwaukee.

Thursday evening at 6 o'clock the revenue cutter Andy Johnson, with the life-saving crew and boat aboard, made two attempts to reach the crib, but the sea was so heavy that nothing could be accomplished.

Of the blame of this fearful loss of life little can be said. There is a feeling that the Chicago contractors were at fault in leaving such a number of men in an unprotected position. Others lay the blame at the door of the life-saving crew, whom they accuse of dilatory and half-hearted attempts to save the men. Capt. Peterson of the life-saving station was notified of the disaster shortly after 5 o'clock, and had prompt action been taken then it is possible that the six men alive then could have been saved. A pier was within about 1,000 feet of the crib, and a howitzer could easily have thrown a life-line to the men.

As it was, Petersen did not arrive at the scene until 7 o'clock, and then drove there in a carriage with a member of the crew. He walked up and down the beach for a time and decided then that nothing could be done and that he could not get his boat out. This, however, was housed some five miles away from the scene of the disaster. It is not improbable that popular sentiment will demand an investigation of his conduct

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY..........ARRIL 27, 1893.

ANOTHER earthquake in Zante, a Grecian city, has nearly destroyed it.

FIRST lake vessel, this season, passed through straits of Mackinaw April 17.

MRS. HANCOCK, widow of Gen. W. S. Hancock, died in New York last Tuesday.

THE Lake Shore road sent a fast train from Chicago to Toledo last week, that ran the 133 miles in 141 minutes.

INDIANA crop reports indicate an average yield of wheat. Reports from other parts show a worse outlook than last year.

A FORMER Greek, now a resident of Ft. Wayne, has sent the King of Greece a fine mackintosh overcoat made in Ft. Wayne.

WEATHER BUREAU at Washington is being investigated. Employes have been stealing many things, such as carpets, boxes of pencils, cases of type, etc.

LAST week a schooner with 500 Italian laborers on board, got fast in the ice at the lower end of Lake Huron, not far from Detroit, and it was some days before they could get away.

THE U. S. Officers on the Pacific coast are being investigated for helping to smuggle Chinamen into this country. They are supposed to have taken a great deal of money for issuing forged passports to Chinese just brought over.

THE INDIANAPOLIS SENTINEL, always good, healthy and strong, was a giant in its issue of April 20. It had twenty pages of seven columns each, and these filled to the brim with good words and illustrations of the city and its people. The entire first page was an illustration, a sort of allegorical picture of "Twenty-five years of progress." Surely the Sentinel stands on the watch towers of Indianapolis, as it has stood for many years, faithful, vigilant and fearless.

REPUBLICANS in Auburn are making a political issue of the building of a new school house. Of course they oppose it. The democratic party gave Indiana her splendid school system, and gave Auburn her splendid schools and the fine buildings that are now proving too small for our needs. We have faith that we shall win now, and that under the banner of victorious democracy, the wheels of progress will not be stopped, nor the advancement of our schools checked. Give Auburn good school buildings. Our schools are already good.

REPUBLICAN papers are nothing, if not silly. Now they are generally copying a lot of truck about 'tearing down the American flag" in the Sandwich Islands, and argue from this as usual that democrats are traitors, etc., etc. Minister Stevens, that Harrison had sent out as minister to the Islands, had raised the American flag over a country we had no more right to than we had to England. What would these blood thirsty editors say if our minister to England would raise the stars and stripes on the Parliament House in London? We presume, judging from the ignorance they display, they would think it all right. Then, they are finding fault with Mrs. Cleveland, because she drives a bobtail horse, and want to make this a national issue. Such an issue would be about the size of those who are fretting about it. One would think that these editors would some day learn that people are too intelligent to care for such stuff.

THE ARGUMENTS FOR

BRANT'S BALSAM

Large bottles, small doses, quick effect

How to Vote.

Don't forget that it is an easy thing to vote right, and also an easy thing to make a mistake and not have your vote all counted. Stamp the rooster, or stamp anywhere within the big square that contains the rooster. That votes a straight democratic ticket. But if any republican wishes to vote for one or two democratic candidates, then he must not stamp within the big square that encloses the eagle, but must stamp the small square at the left each name he wishes to vote for. This enables him to vote for some republicans and some democrats, and still have his ticket properly counted. Remember that last year at the town election, several voters on both sides stamped the first name on the ticket thinking that would vote it straight, when they should have stamped in the big square on the rooster, eagle, etc. The votes stamped at the first name were not full, straight votes, and were only counted for the first name. Remember that if your party device at the head of the ticket is not stamped, only such candidates will get a vote, as have the small square by them stamped.

NOTES.

As town marshal, where will we find a brighter or more thorough business man than Alvin Baker. Everybody knows him, and everybody respects him. He has the necessary age and experience, and his personal appearance is such that strangers who deal with the marshal, will be favorably impressed. Evil doers will find him a man of grit and muscle. Let us make it "Marshal Baker" by a big majority.

A vote for Ensley, means the continuation of the good work of reducing the municipal debt which the present board reduced about $1,300 during the past year.

A vote for Miller means a vote for the most careful and conservative business management of the city's affairs. Give Miller a big send off.

Vote for Charley Jones for treasurer. The town never had a more careful man in the office. He can always tell in two minutes, where every penny of cash is or where it went.

Frank Dills as clerk means to have a man in that place who can keep an intelligible account of all that is done and who will alway help the board to keep its varied business in a business shape. Vote for Frank.

Taxpaying.

Mr. Sawvel has just closed a busy season in the treasurer's office. Besides his regular assistant, Miss Showalter, he has for a week or two had D. Z. Hoffman, W. H. McIntosh and T. J. Saxton helping. These experienced men, proved valuable when the rush came. Right here might be said something in regard to errors. Many people complain of errors who make errors themseves. A man in Illinois sent to Mr. Sawvel last week a draft on the bank of Hanover, N. Y., for $14, but forgot to put in his name. Now, Mr Sawvel may any day get a letter complaining that this man's taxes are not paid. Another letter came from a distance saying he had twice before written to Mr. Sawvel to have his tax paid. This was true. Two other letters had been received, but not one of the three had a name signed. So here again, someone is liable to complain that Mr. Sawvel has neglected to attend to business. The facts are, we are all liable to make mistakes. Now, the books in the office have all been gone over and examined, and the matter of the first installment of taxes is closed.

Town Politics.

The heaviest taxpayers are willing to build a good school house. They don't want any additions or sheds. They may differ as to the location or the kind of building, but they are unanimous against leaning it up against the west side of the beautiful High School building.

A republican candidate, we hear, is asking democrats to vote for him, as he is opposed to a school house. The voter approached should ask what voice he will have in the matter. The marshal, the clerk and the treasurer have nothing to do about a school house. Only the town trustees and the town school board will have a vote on that matter, or any control over it.

The anti-education ticket is in a bad way. They need a device to head their ticket. How would a log school house do? It could have the sun shining in through a window pane of greased paper illuminating a split slab bench on which were the editors of the three anti-education papers, busily engaged learning to sign their names with a cross. The Australian law requires a "suitable device."

Let it be remembered that we are obliged to build some kind of a school house. A temporary affair will soon have to be doubled, and we will find it cost more in a few years than to build a proper one now. The difference in expense will not be felt, between one costing $7,000 and one costing $14,000. Our school children are now sitting around tables, or three in a seat, and in one room they have 80 pupils. What sort of a schooling can the teacher give under such circumstances? Some classes do not recite three times a week. And what as to the health of 80 children in one room with only ordinary ventilation. Then think of this same crowded room with the windows on one side covered by a "lean to," the plan some have proposed. And suppose a new school house does cost some money. How do we get much benefit of money paid in in taxes if not in our schools? Why not object to the money that even we here in town pay on ditches twenty miles away? Why not object to helping to pay for bridges we never cross? Why not object to paying for the support of an expensive court that 99 in a hundred of us will never use?

We have said a good school house will cost money, but that we can afford it. It will not be a great burden. Most of those who are objecting do not pay heavy taxes, and it would not cost them more than 10 to 50 cents extra each year. Many of those objecting will pay this daily, in things not necessary to say the least. If a man's assessment was as great as Auburn's, say one million, he would be really worth at least a million and half. What would a debt of $13,000 to $16,000 be to such a man? Suppose A. owned every piece of property in Auburn—the entire town, would he be afraid to go in debt $15,000? Let the people talk up the matter fully, and learn how greatly our children need more school room, more healthful quarters, better ventilation, better security as to health and comfort, and when these needs are fully understood, we have faith enough in the intelligence and liberality of our people to believe they will not sacrifice our money by building a cheap-John-makeshift for school houses that must soon be replaced and that will always be a menace to the lives and health of our children.

A Modern Eden.

Up-North farmers toil, sweat and fertilize to eke out the barest living from their worn-out soil, while North Galveston fruit lands will yield from $225 to $1,000 per acre with half the labor. This gulf region offers to farmers, manufacturers and invalids everything to be desired.

The climate is mild and healthful twelve months in the year; The land bristles with manufacturing resources, and is a farmer's paradise. If you've the slightest tinge of curiosity about this industrial spot, apply to Rickel & Sprott, the local agents of the North Galveston Association. The address of the general office is Box 963, Minneapolis, Minn.

WHO Cares to pay for name or fame in this the Nineteenth Century? When we buy goods we buy them on their merits

WHEN We are asked as we often are, "Why do you sell goods so much lower than other houses?" we usually answer, "We DO because we CAN." One reason

WHAT We say we have — the Goods, the Amount, the Quality and the Price. Another reason is that we know exactly

WHERE Cash can buy them the cheapest, and all we ask is for every sensible person to do likewise and you will surely come to the Boston Clothing Store. A most reasonable reason—

WHY We can leave others behind in the race and sell first class goods for 15 to 25 per cent less than others can, particularly when it comes to advertising certain goods, is because our patrons know that when we advertise goods at a certain price we have just

HOW when and where to buy goods, so that we can undersell all others. Now, if you are wise and desire to save money on a fine class of goods, this is your greatest of opportunities. Please call and examine these goods, remembering that always and in all cases WE DO AS WE ADVERTISE.

Warsaw Union: Some time since, after the election, a number of republicans in Seward township made up their minds to wreak vengeance upon an old man because he voted the democratic ticket when they probably thought he should have voted the republican. It seems that his vote was challenged but upon explanation the challenge was withdrawn and he voted. Afterwards he was arrested and taken to Indianapolis for trial on charge of having violated the election laws. He was brought before the United States district Judge, who examined him after which he was told to go home as there was no case against him. The old man is poor and was taken to the capital without money and thus compelled to foot it home. The case ended just as anyone knowing the facts expected. The question is now shall it end altogether? We think not. We shall hear more of it. The law provides protection against malicious prosecution.

People were surprised last Friday morning to find snow everywhere. It lay nearly an inch deep on the board sidewalks, though it had mostly melted from the ground. It was a disagreeable day.

The Dispatch is always singing praises to the great cause of education. But when it is likely to cost money its song dies away in small notes softly sung, then to utter silence, and at last to clamorous objection. Republicans have a reputation for opposing educational progress.

The Honduras letter we publish this week was brought home by Will Thomas of Richland, and the one we have for next week, came across from Honduras by boat to Mobile, and was mailed there. This shows how varied and uncertain are the mail facilities in getting from some distant countries to the United States.

Quality way up, price way down. Poorly made furniture is dear at any price. Shoddy filled carpets will quickly fade and wear out. Quality should always be the first consideration. Nobody sells well made furniture and good carpets as low as you can purchase them of the Foster Furniture & Carpet Co. at Ft. Wayne.

Ezra Foltz recently had one of the finest four-bladed pocket knives in town. Now he hasn't it. Some one whose love for fine cutlery exceeded his honesty, has taken it. Mr. Foltz knows who got it, and if it is returned in ten days, it will be all right and no trouble made. But if not returned, he will have the one who took it arrested.

H. P. Stroh was in town Monday, and during a conversation, called attention to a big goose egg he had just given his little nephew, Frank Pommert. It was the product of a goose belonging to Mrs. J. Mr. Healy has resigned his position as pastor of the Presbyterian church, greatly to the sorrow of his congregation. He has been faithful in all things and most energetic in his work, and we know of no dissatisfaction with him. But we presume a wider and better field of labor is offered him, and if so no one can blame him for accepting it.

Henry Shull our popular milkman has a joke on himself. He has a big lot of pasture land that he rents of Phillip Finke, and not long ago some one asked as a favor, to put a cow or two in there for a day or two till other arrangements could be made. He consented, thinking it was a mere matter of a day or two. Now he learns they have been doing a wholesale business, and his fine pasture has been fed down to the roots.

Mr. Click and his helpers have put the public square in nice shape, as far as they had anything to do with it. The only rough place left is the trench where the heater pipes go from the jail to the courthouse. This has been left because the trench must be opened again to put in a larger pipe. The ground leveled so far has been seeded, and where there is not two much shade, will soon be green again. The north part of the ground will probably never show much green sod again, as the shade of the trees is killing it, and worms have eaten it out to some extent. The trees will have to be greatly thinned out if the grass ever grows. And even for the good of the trees this will be necessary.

Hicksville News—The Muncie Herald says all the wise men are not yet dead. Indiana harbors a Solomon, and his habitation is near the town of English. He is a justice of the peace and demonstrates his fitness by his decisions, one of which was as follows: Two men went coon hunting, taking along another man's coon dog. They caught three coons, and the owner of the dog claimed a share of the game in payment for the services of his dog. 'Squire Dumont was called on to settle the case, and he took two of the coons for his fee in the case, the third coon he cut in two and cut off the tail, gave half of the coon to each of the hunters and the tail to the owner of the dog. A free fight ensued between the parties, and the 'Squire will get additional fees when their cases come up for trial.

The burglars now rusticating at the Hotel de Ralston, have made a sort of confession, as will be seen by the "poetry" we publish this week. It was not badly gotten up, and was inscribed to "the sheriff's wife," as a token of gratitude we suppose for the good board they are getting, no doubt the best board they have had for some time. After telling this "true story" the boys might as well come into court next month, plead guilty and save expense to the county, and take their medicine like men. Men as intelligent as they seem to be, ought to keep out of such scrapes in the future.

We have just received a large number of samples of wall paper from ALFRED PEATS, the Wall Paper Merchant, Chicago—together with a small pamphlet on Economy in Home decoration with advice how to hang paper. These samples are much finer than anything we have ever seen before for the price, some of the gilt papers being as low as 5cts. per roll, and heavy embossed gold papers as low as 10 cts. per roll, all arranged with wide borders and ceiling papers to match according to the latest style. These samples are sent free to anyone who will write to ALFRED PEATS, Department D, 136 138 W. Madison St., Chicago, or to 30 32, W. 13th St. New York, and will enable anyone desiring to re-decorate their house to buy the latest style of papers at about wholesale prices.

Warren Miller is the new postmaster at Newville and G. H. Oberholtzer at Auburn Junction. We know of no reason why they will not be satisfactory. Later. We see by the papers, that W. W. We are glad to see Mr. Rockhill so gracefully remembered.

The Butler Burglars.

[Presented to the Sheriff's wife,]

Dark was the night; not a star to be seen.
The moon was hid behind a misty screen.
The wind howled dismally; it began to rain.
You could hear the rumble of a distant train.
In the town of Butler, the scene of my tale,
Everything was quiet; success could not fail.
Such thought the burglars as they looked carefully around,
Watching for the nightwatch, noting ev'ry sound.
No one in sight, they went boldly up the street,
Determined, without fear, with soft treading feet,
"It is well," said he whom the other called Ted,
"Now we can work while the owner is in bed."
Softly they crept to a side window of the store,
And each daring burglar a determined expression wore.
Said Ted to his companions, "This is what we'll do:
Put one to watch outside while we go through,"
No quicker said than done, but "Oh!" says he.
"Some one is coming; quick; let us flee!"
But soon, undaunted, they returned with noiseless feet,
And says to Billy, "Keep a good watch up the main street."
They quickly gained an entrance to the inside of the store
And began to change new raiment for the shabby ones they wore.
They hustled and bustled around in their haste,
Heeding nothing from without, for they had no time to waste.
"Nothing here below," says Ted, so up stairs they went,
Not daunted, on their unlawful mission bent.
There before their eyes the clothes lay in large piles,
Satisfaction was shown by the exchange of broad smiles.
"No more tattered garments, my boy, shall we wear."
And both started to renovate then and there.
"Hark!" whispered one, as the other came near,
"There is someone without and we are discovered I fear."
The sound of loud voices came up from below.
"That is not Billy's voice, come, let us go."
And down they went, crestfallen and dumb,
Found they were surrounded, and soon must succumb,
Without stood the watchman. The outside man had fled,
He swore if they moved he would shoot them dead.
"I have got them," he cried as he called for more aid,
And as they came running, the poor burglars' hearts were staid.
With their fond hopes shattered and no help nigh,
They stood listening patiently, and their breasts heaved a sigh.
"It is no use, my boy," says Ted to his pard,
"We will have to give in, but God knows it's hard."
So out they strode and threw up their hands
And quietly submitted to the watchman's demands.
They were arrested, tried, bound over under bail,
And quickly taken to the Auburn county jail.
That is all of my tale and I am glad I am through,
For the writer is a victim and 'tis only too true.

It ought to be a very easy matter to break the new plate-glass trust.

Where's the profit when sunshine makes us happy and gay if it makes all the microbes feel just the same way?

The Welch have a drink called Mysglsn Llanpairdysilipozogoch. It makes a man dizzy even to look at the name.

Why do our reportorial friends invariably speak of the "cool million" and crisp five-dollar notes? Why cool and why crisp?

The Count of Paris indicates a cheerful willingness to undertake the guidance of the French ship of state. All that seems to be lacking is the consent of France.

A lady is attempting to traverse the country by rail and throughout her journey not touch her Chicago foot to the ground. The value of accomplishing this ambition does not appear. What are feet for?

Members of Parliament have officially declared that they want pay for their services. Is patriotism dead over there? In the United States office is sought for its honors alone. At least such allegation has been made.

Here is a hint from the Household, which is commended to the attention of all who need it: "Ho, all ye dyspeptics!" says a quack at the head of his advertisement. But that is exactly what dyspeptics won't do. If they would hoe vigorously they might not need any medicine.

Eiffel is said to be a fugitive. The possibility that he may have climbed his own tower seems to have been overlooked by the police. If he has, some cunning engineering device may be expected to pull the tower up after him, and what would French justice do then? True, it might convict De Lesseps some more.

After winning glory for saving a train a man in Oregon has been arrested charged with having loosened the rail that gave him a chance to be a hero. So another idol tumbles, a spectacle always somber, but aggravated this time by the fact that the passengers theoretically snatched from death had given their bold rescuer a purse made up of contributions averaging 22 cents apice.

Juana Juarez, a Mexican girl of Durango, was in a casket surrounded by weeping friends, the occasion being her wake. Some careless mourner flipped a drop of hot tallow from one of the candles upon the waxen fingers of Juana and she bounced out of the casket with a howl that completely robbed the wake of its solemnity, and refused to return. It is so seldom that the chief figure at one of these ceremonials gets a chance to participate actively in proceedings, that Juana's experience is really worthy of record.

The plain old farmers who captured Latimer made the orthodox detective methods appear at a disadvantage. They simply invited the murderer to come along, gave him something to eat, loaded him into a wagon without so much as a pair of handcuffs to restrain him, and landed him safely in the Jackson prison, after having a pleasant talk on the way and eliciting some interesting statements from the remarkable prisoner. There was no flourishing of shooting-irons, no grand stand plays. It was simply a case of hitching up the team and hauling him back.

The killing of Mrs. Josephine Frill by a Grand Trunk engine, at Chicago, was one of the most cruel and pathetic murders ever perpetrated by the railway juggernaut. By her death her boy, a bright little fellow only four years old, was left without father or mother, the former parent having died only about a week before. The little fellow was taken to the Armory station, where he remained for several days in the care of strangers before any of his relatives learned of his whereabouts or came to claim him. The grade crossing juggernaut is an unsentimental and hideously cruel monster.

John Nowacki's wife made him happy by presenting him with a son on the 4th of March. John wrote to the President asking permission to name this inauguration boy Grover Cleveland, which privilege was granted. Thus bit by bit the simplicity of American life is being destroyed. In the olden time when a citizen wanted to name his heir George Washington or Thomas Jefferson he just went ahead and did so, with none to stop him or interfere in any way. Nobody thought of asking a President's permission for such a thing as that, as that was considered a part of the President's official burden, assumed with the rest of his obligations when he took the oath of office.

Professor Levermore, of Boston, advocates the establishment of a newspaper with an endowment of from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000 under the charge of a Board of Trustees having no pecuniary interest in the project. His theory is that by making a newspaper independent of popular support it would be enabled to exclude reports of scandals, murders, and prize fights, and to devote its columns to topics of a less sensational character. Advertising would not be debarred, but nothing of an equivocal nature would be accepted. Such a journal is, of course, possible, especially with a heavy endowment back of it, but it would be folly to call it a "newspaper." At best it would merely chronicle a certain class of events, much after the pattern of trade and sectarian papers. It is needless to say that the person who depended solely upon such a journal for current information would be totally unfit to form a correct judgment of events in the world about him.

Two hundred and thirty passengers on the north-bound Oregon express were saved from death or injury by the heroic conduct of a destitute gardener beating his way on the railroad. The salvation of the train and its load of human freight nearly cost the life of the man who saved it, and the beneficiaries of his unselfish act responded to the noble promptings of gratitude by raising a munificent purse of $50, representing a contribution of about 22 cents a head. Aside from the value of the railroad property saved from destruction, the Wells, Fargo & Co. treasure box, said to contain about $50,000, was preserved from molestation, it having been the evident intention of a party of miscreants to wreck and then rob the train. Rewards were offered for those who capture the criminals. It might be a stroke of policy and would certainly be a matter of justice to properly reward the man who averted the terrible catastrophe. To this both the railroad and express company might with good grace contribute.

Though injudicious to condemn a new law offhand, it is safe to say that legislation incorporated in the last army appropriation act prohibiting the enlistment of soldiers after ten years' service is of questionable expediency. And this is safely said, because the very people who should be most interested in applying the law are said to design its evasion. It appears that this removing of all prospect of the benefits of the retired list or the Soldiers' Home is liable to lose its best men to every regiment in the army when once their present terms of enlistment expire. To prevent such a disaster it is proposed that the law shall be construed as applying to privates only, and that men of other grades worth keeping shall be transferred, before reaching the ten-year limit, to some other classification, and upon being enlisted in such grades may be transferred back to the ranks if desirable. Seeing that army legislation in recent years has tended toward the elevation of army morals, and made soldiering a more attractive pursuit for a decent young fellow, it's a pity if we have now struck a law that is to nullify some of the results of the best of recent reforms.

A circumstance attending a recent murder trial in Texas has excited great public interest in that State. The trial occurred at Columbus. Arthur King was on trial for the murder of Frank Williams, near Eagle Lake, Sept. 11, 1892. The jury was impaneled, and it being late in the afternoon the court adjourned for supper. Evidently the Texas courts have expeditious methods which would shock the judicial aggregation and the bar of a Northern city. After supper the trial proceeded. The examination of witnesses was continued until 11 o'clock, when an adjournment was about to be had. At that moment Judge Beauregard Bryan, presiding at the trial, was informed that Jud Williams, a brother of the man for whose murder King was on trial, had secretly passed a flask of whisky to B. L. Willis, one of the jurymen. Whatever malicious wits may say of barbarous conditions at the South, nothing in this instance justifies their jests. The trial was stopped. Judge Bryan called up before him the juror Willis and Jud Williams. Both were severely reprimanded and Williams was sent to jail, to stay there until the further orders of the court. He then said that this flagrant misconduct would be calculated to throw doubt upon any verdict that might be rendered and discharged the jury. The action of Judge Bryan is universally commended and popular opinion regarding the administration of justice in Texas should be in its favor.

Our Growing Country.

That there are children now born who will live long enough to see the people of the United States number from one hundred and fifty to two hundred million, says Erastus Wiman in a recent number of the Engineering Magazine, is a consideration that should have great weight in contemplating the conditions that now are beginning to prevail. If in the ten years just closed the population has increased at a rate of nearly twenty-five per cent., and we now start out with sixty-five million, fifty years at the same rate of progression will bring the population up to very nearly two hundred million. But, even if the same rate is not maintained, and if only one hundred and fifty million is reached, the enormous growth will have consequences of a character that should be considered with special reference to enlarged territory and widened area of opportunity. There is hardly anything more certain under the sun than this growth, and its certainty should deeply impress every one who thinks at all with the importance of making preparations for an increase so momentous.

ITS STATUE IS CAST.

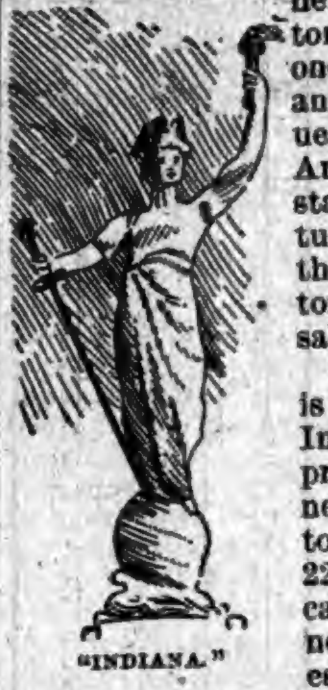
Completed in Chicago—The Colossal Form Will Tower 300 Feet in the Air—Will Be the Finest Martial Memorial in the World.

Built at a Cost of $200,000.

The colossal bronze statue of "Indiana" which is to surmount the State soldiers' monument at Indianapolis has been successfully cast in Chicago. This bronze casting is an ideal female figure, whose dignity of bearing and beauty of form are a credit to the artist. Thirty feet in height and several tons in weight—one of the largest and heaviest statues ever cast in America—it will stand in its solitude 300 feet in the air, holding a torch in its colossal hand.

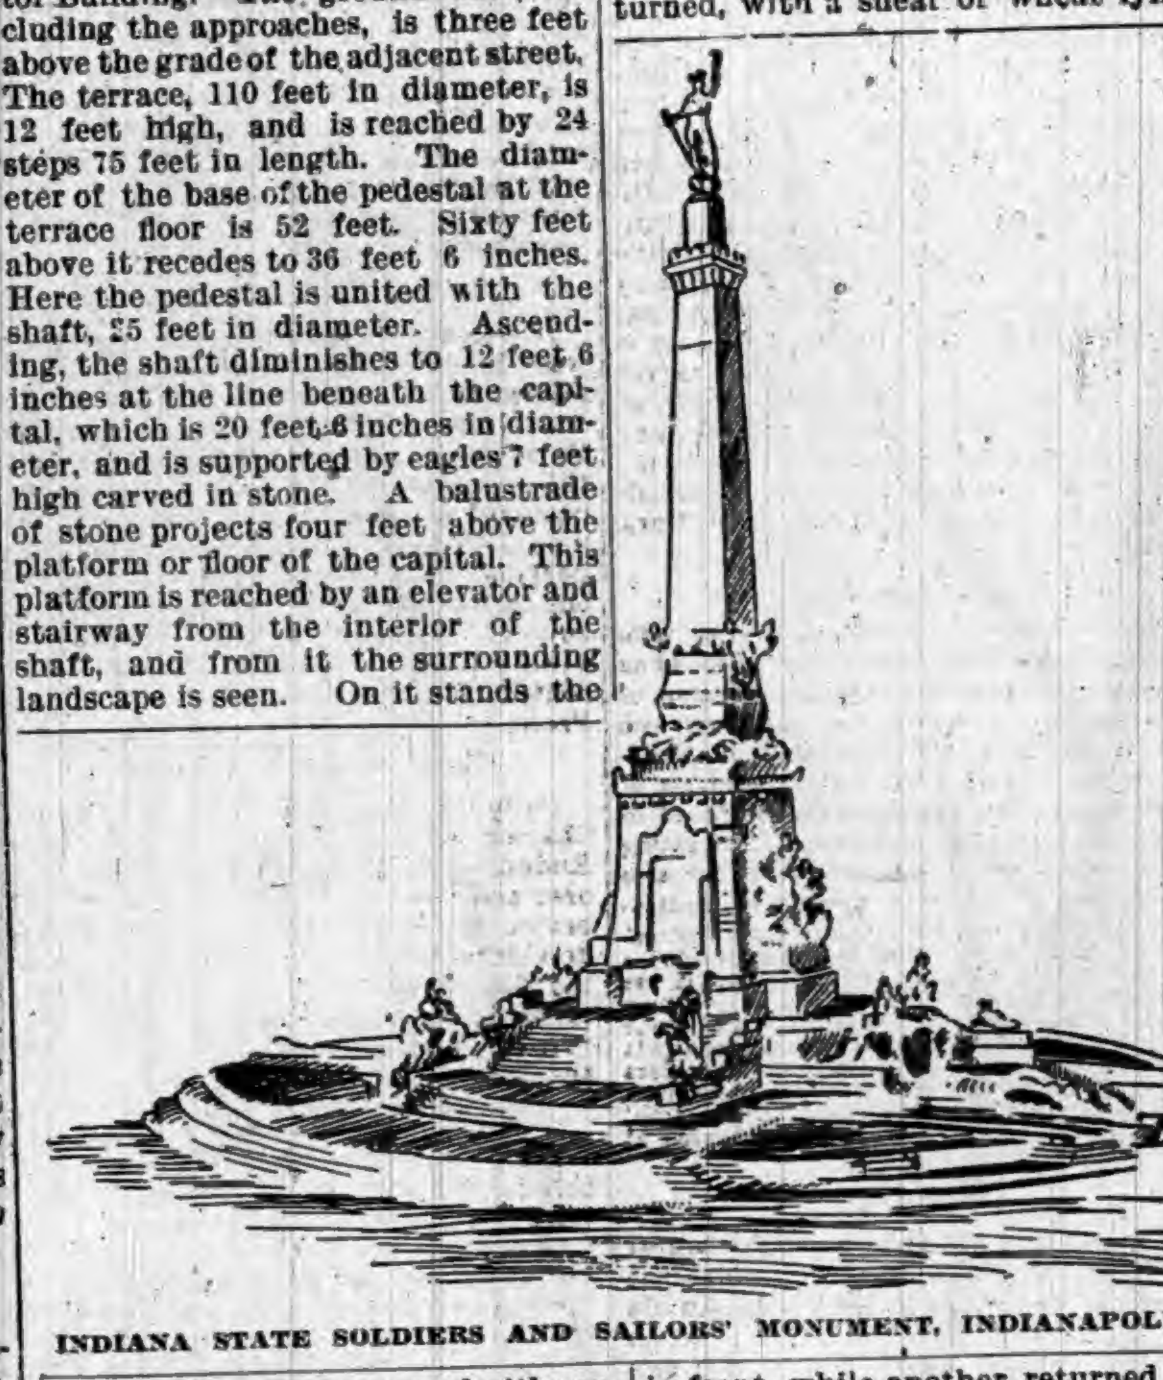


"INDIANA."

The monument is being built in Indianapolis at present. The corner-stone laying took place August 22, 1889. That occasion was pronounced the greatest demonstration ever witnessed in the State. President Harrison and members of his Cabinet were present and made speeches. Gov. Hovey, all the State officials, and the National and State departments of the G. A. R. were present. Special poems were read and campfires held at night. Indiana claimed that when completed its monument would be the noblest structure on the continent and that there would be no soldiers' monument in the world to equal it. People who have seen the plans say the statement is correct.

In Circle Park.

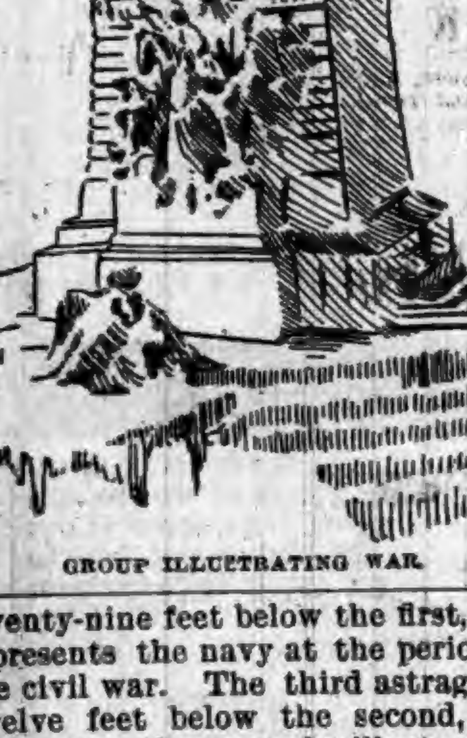
The nearly completed monument stands in Circle Park, near the Capitol Building. The ground base, including the approaches, is three feet above the grade of the adjacent street. The terrace, 110 feet in diameter, is 12 feet high, and is reached by 24 steps 75 feet in length. The diameter of the base of the pedestal at the terrace floor is 52 feet. Sixty feet above it recedes to 36 feet 6 inches. Here the pedestal is united with the shaft, 25 feet in diameter. Ascending, the shaft diminishes to 12 feet 6 inches at the line beneath the capital, which is 20 feet 6 inches in diameter, and is supported by eagles 7 feet high carved in stone. A balustrade of stone projects four feet above the platform or floor of the capital. This platform is reached by an elevator and stairway from the interior of the shaft, and from it the surrounding landscape is seen. On it stands the turret, an iron frame covered with copper, 8 feet square and 19 feet high. Upon this a bronze globe 8 feet in diameter will be placed, and on this the statue, "Indiana," thirty feet high, will stand. The pose of this figure will make a striking silhouette effect against the sky and its expression from every point of view is the elation of victory. In it is combined all that is represented beneath. It is the poem of the monument. The sword, held in the right hand with the point turned down, typifies the power of the army, to which the victory is due; the young eagle upon the head is emblematic of the freedom resulting from that victory; and the torch, carried aloft in the left hand, is the light of the civilization resulting from that victory and that freedom.



INDIANA STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' MONUMENT, INDIANAPOLIS.

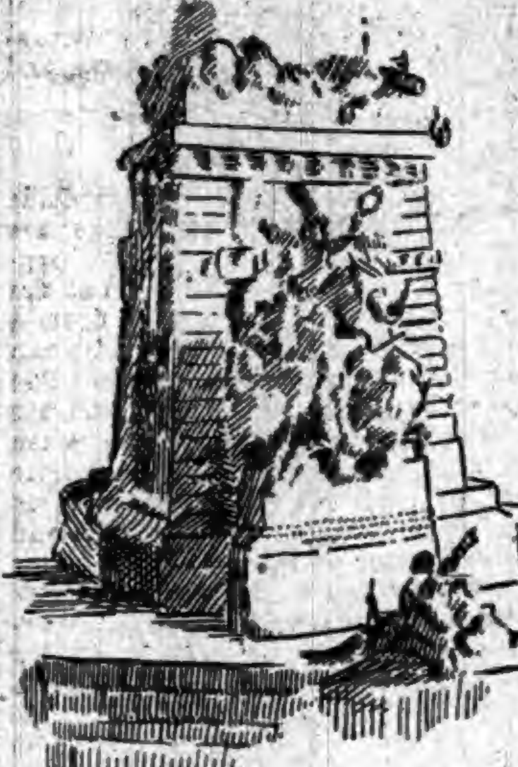
Heroic Periods.

There are three astragals. The first is twelve feet beneath the capital, and represents on the four sides of the shaft the years of the Mexican and civil wars, being the heroic periods of the State. The second is seventy-nine feet below the first, and represents the navy at the period of the civil war. The third astragal is twelve feet below the second, and represents the army by illustrations of the arms of the service and other symbols.



GROUP ILLUSTRATING WAR.

Eight feet above the terrace are platforms for groups of "War" and "Peace." The conception of "War" by the architect, as shown in the sketches upon the eastern panel and sub-pedestal of his model of the monument, begins with low and high reliefs upon the former, culminating in full projections, one being a winged figure, the Spirit of War, bearing a flag and cheering the army in advance and below on to victory; another, a mounted cavalryman, only the head of the horse and the arm of the soldier being in full projection as he charges toward the front. Below, and in advance upon the sub-pedestal, are the round figures, of some sixteen feet, completing the group, in various poses, charging over the fallen enemy that is being trampled under their feet, while in the front-center stands Columbia, with right hand raised aloft, as the inspiration of battle.



GROUP ILLUSTRATING PEACE.

The group of "Peace" begins in a similar way upon the western panel, on the opposite side of the monument from "War." In the distance, in low relief, the victorious army is seen marching off the field, while above, projecting from low into high relief, with arm extended into full projection, and partly over the group below, is the winged Spirit of War again, offering a wreath as a crown for the victors. In the right-rear of the group of round figures, upon the subpedestal projecting below, are soldiers celebrating their triumph by cheering; in their front a Union and rebel soldier are fraternizing, the latter in a recumbent position, as though wounded or exhausted, and the former offering him succor; on the right front of the group a soldier is sitting upon his plow, to which he has returned, with a sheaf of wheat lying in front, while another returned soldier is embracing his wife farther back. In the front-center Columbia again appears, with extended arm and wand, proclaiming peace.

Towers High in Air.

The shaft is 270 feet high. The bronze figure, "Indiana," completes the 400 feet. Bruno Schmitz did the architectural work and brought the plaster model with him from Germany. This did not include the Brewster figure at the top. The cost complete will reach $200,000.

The Late Leopold Morse's Little Joke.

Mr. Morse was too much of a man to be ashamed of his calling, and never failed to turn the tables on anyone who chaffed him about it. A story used to be told of a visit paid to his store in Boston by a Washington swell, who had met him at the Metropolitan Club here, and who thought to have a little amusement at his expense. As the visitor entered Mr. Morse was just in the act of bowing out a customer to whom he had sold a large bill of goods. "Ha, Morse!" cried the Washingaonian, "how I wish the fellows at the club could see you now! I watched the way you handled that poor wretch. It was artistic, but it wouldn't do to tell away from home. What will you give me to keep quiet about it?" The clothier looked his caller in the face without a smile. "I must gif you someding to buy your silence?" he asked, soberly. "Certainly. It's only fair that I should rewarded for holding a good thing back." Mr. Morse turned to one of his clerks: "Choseph," he said, "get down one o' dem monkey chackets ve sell vor two tollars and a quarter. Let dis chentleman 'af it for one toller and sefenty-fife cents—he's a frient of mine."—Kate Field's Washington.

A Pair of Pets.

Training will do many things, but it has seldom brought together two such incongruous mates as in this story told by the St. Paul Globe:

Little Barbara had been sick, but was convalescent.

"Are you my doctor?" she said, waking up suddenly and finding a strange lady at her beside.

"No, dear," said the strange lady, "I am your trained nurse."

"Ah, that's better," exclaimed the little girl. "I shall like you very much. Trained nurse," she continued, pointing to a cage hanging near the window, "let me introduce you to my trained canary."

About Perfect.

The far and "frontier" West does not appear to be peopled exclusively by tough citizens. At Winnemucca, Nev., a jury was formed last week of men whose average age was 27, who were all total abstainers from drink, none smoked cigarettes and none had ever chewed tobacco.

Pertinent Question.

Old Aunt Dinah was a colored woman, who had a remarkably strong voice, and would sing and cry "glory" with such vigor as to be heard above all the rest of the congregation, but she was of an unpleasantly "saving" disposition.

It was the custom at the missionary meetings of the church she attended to take up a collection during the singing of the hymn, "Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel!" in the midst of which Aunt Dinah threw back her head, closed her eyes, and sang away at the top of her lungs till the plate had passed her by.

The collector, who was a man of plain speech, observed this habit of the old woman's, and one evening when he came to her seat he stopped short, and, surveying her rapt countenance, said, bluntly:

"Look a-hea, yo' Aunt Dinah! What's de good ob yo' a-singin' an' a-singin', 'Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel,' of you doan' gib nuffin to to make her fly?"

Suggestive to Doctors and Scolds.

Dr. P. was not really a surly man, but the hurry of his large and arduous practice made him appear so sometimes. Directly opposite his office lived Mr. Bradley, whose wife was an inveterate and loud-voiced scold. She had never had occasion for the Doctor's services except for one thing, and that was to set her dislocated jaw several times. It had been first injured in an accident some years before, and had never fully recovered; any unusual strain was liable to throw it out of joint again.

One morning, as he was preparing in haste for a long round of professional calls, his ears were assailed by the din of Mrs. Bradley's scolding. She was giving her husband a violent "curtain lecture," and no doubt the Doctor was nettled by the sound.

"I hope she won't put her jaw out of joint with her clack, and come over here to have it set," muttered he to himself.

But the next moment in she came, holding her chin in one hand, and with the other pointing into her open mouth, which she could not shut, and mumbling, "Ah, ah, ah!"

"Yes, yes, I know!" exploded the Doctor; "you've got your jaw out a scolding your husband. I expected it! I expected it! Well, sit down here, and I'll put it down in a wink!" shoving a chair toward her as he spoke.

She began to sit down, but, just as she was almost seated, the Doctor discovered that the chair did not face the light as he wished, and gave it a slight turn. Somehow, between them, the chair was so misplaced that she missed it, and sat down with a tremendous thump on the floor. It is an ill mishap that brings nobody good. The force of her collision with the floor did a neater job in setting her jaw than the Doctor could have done.

Yet, all the same, Mrs. Bradley did not like such a style of surgery. Scrambling to her feet, she squared off, with battle in her attitude and fire in her eyes, to give the Doctor a lingual thrashing. But she had met more than her match. The Doctor flung open the door, and seizing her by the arm, marched her out and down the steps, exclaiming:

"Go right home and stop scolding forever, for I'll never set your jaw again."

Home she went, and it is said she never scolded any more. The incident is suggestive to doctors and scolds.

He Went to Walk.

There is a story of a French dog whose breakfast was forgotten, whereupon he ran into the garden, and returning with a sprig in his mouth, deposited it at his master's feet. It was a sprig of forget-me-not. The truth of this story is perhaps open to question, but a story almost as remarkable comes from a Florida correspondent whose veracity is undoubted. Jack is a handsome Newfoundland dog. Every evening at 9 o'clock he is taken to walk by his master, who has an orange walking-stick, which he particularly likes and usually carries.

Every evening on the stroke of 9 Jack rushes to the hat-rack in the hall, noses about among the walking-sticks and umbrellas until he finds the orange-wood stick, and immediately afterward appears before his master carrying it in his teeth. He wags his tail and prances delightedly about, and shows as plainly as possible that he will be a broken-hearted dog if his friend and master omits the usual evening stroll.

One evening the family were in the sitting-room with some guests. A shower had come up, and it was raining hard when the clock struck 9. The strokes had hardly died away when Jack danced gayly into the room with the orange-wood stick in his mouth.

"No, Jack," said his master, "we cannot go out to-night. It is raining too hard. We should get wet. Just listen to it rain, Jack."

With that the host turned his attention once more to his guests, and presently they heard Jack pulling over things in the hat-rack. They supposed he was putting away the walking-stick, like the clever dog that he is.

A few moments later a beseeching little bark was heard. There in the sitting-room door stood Jack.

He had an umbrella in his mouth. Everyone flew for the rubbers, water-proof, and hat of the man of the house, and that gentleman, bearing the umbrella so persuasively offered him, took Jack out to walk without further delay.

Work of a Marriage Bureau.

The Berlin Marriage Bureau, which has ramifications all over the world, has in the last eleven years received 19,959 propositions from all civilized countries.

In 12,706 cases husbands were desired, in 7,253 wives; 5,916 women and 5,104 men communicated directly with the main office; the rest made known their wants through agencies.

The youngest woman who asked for a man was 16 years and 4 months, the eldest 72. The corresponding ages of male applicants were 18½ and 79. The average of the women was 26½, of the men 29½.

Matches were brought about for 4,399 women applicants and 5,417 men. The average fortune of the men was £730, of the women £930. The smallest purse offered by a woman was £15. It was the whole fortune of a girl of twenty-one years.

The largest fortune of a woman applicant was £100,000. The properties of the men in search of wives varied between £73 and £30,000.

There were 516 women and 307 men who communicated with the Bureau who had apparent physical deformities. There were 2,311 men and 1,409 women who had been married, 1,129 men wished second wives to care for their first wives' children.

The occupations of the men were: tradesmen 5,002, members of learned professions and artists 706, army officers 63, state officials 809. The rest of the candidates did not give their occupations. Of the women 1,503 had their own business establishments.

Secret of Success.

Upward of thirty years ago, when David Maydole was a roadside blacksmith at Norwich, New York, six carpenters came to the village from the next county to work on a new church. One of them, having left his hammer behind, came to the blacksmith's to get one made, there being none which gave satisfaction in the village store.

"Make me a good one—as good as you know how," said the carpenter.

"But," said the young blacksmith, who had already considered hammers, and had arrived at some notion of what a hammer ought to be, and had a proper contempt for cheapness in all its forms, "perhaps you don't want to pay for as good a hammer as I can make."

"Yes, I do; I want a good hammer."

So David Maydole made a good hammer that perfectly satisfied the carpenter.

The next day the man's five companions came, and each of them wanted just such a hammer, and when they were done the employer came and ordered two more. Next the storekeeper of the village ordered two dozen, which were purchased by a New York tool merchant, who left standing orders for as many hammers as David Maydole could make. And from that day to this he has gone on making hammers, until now he has one hundred and fifteen men at work for him. He has never pushed, never borrowed, never tried to compete with others in price, because other men had done so. His only care has been to make a perfect hammer, to make as many hammers as people wanted and no more, and to sell them at a fair, reasonable price. Now, here is a bit of good advice, boys: Whatever you undertake, do it perfectly, with your might, and you will succeed.

A Train of Exiles.

All travelers in Siberia desire to see something of the criminal exiles. When, therefore, I was informed that a detachment was on its way from Tomsk, I took a conveyance and drove out to meet it.

We had driven a considerable distance without seeing the slightest signs of life on the deserted highway, when suddenly on the crisp, frosty air, I distinguished a faint, distant sound, so peculiar and weird that it at once attracted my attention, as it was evidently approaching us.

It was not unlike the noise which would be produced by hundreds of small birds singing all at once, yet I could see nothing of any sort anywhere on the vast plain. As well as I could, with my limited Russian vocabulary, I drew my driver's attention to it. To him it was neither novel nor interesting; he knew what it was at once.

"The arrestanti are coming," he remarked briefly; and shortly after, on ascending a rise in the road which had concealed them from our view, there came in sight a big body of men coming slowly along, and I discovered that the strange noise which had so impressed me was produced by the heavy chains they wore.

But then, alas! all preconceived illusions vanished, for it was a loathsome and depressing sight, rendered doubly so by the bright sunshine.

There was about it absolutely nothing of the poetic, such as I had been led to expect. It was simply a huge crowd of what looked like—and probably was—the very scum of the earth, for all races seemed to be represented, making as villainous and evil-looking a lot of men as one could possibly see.

The Taming of Animals.

There are few benefits which we owe to our forefathers greater than the endless skill and patience with which they tamed those animals which we call at the present day "domestic." It must have required a steady perseverance, extending through countless generations, to have succeeded in inducing such essentially wild and mistrustful animals as cats to lay aside their timidity and suspicion, and to become the faithful friends of man.

The people who accomplished this great benefit for posterity had more leisure than their restless and hard-worked descendants; they were, generally speaking, members of slave states, in which the food supply was plentiful, and in which we may suppose that both masters and slaves had plenty of time on their hands. In some cases the obvious utility of the animals caused them to be tamed; in some cases this very utility came to invest them with a special sanctity, which, as in the case of the cat in Egypt and the cow in India, afforded an additional guarantee for their preservation.

The ancients seem to have tamed almost all the existing animals known to them that were worth taming; had they known the American bison, they might have added him to the list of draught animals we possess; possibly, too, the weasel, stoat, and polecat might have been reclaimed and employed as a useful foe to vermin. It is certain that some animals which were once tamed have been allowed to relapse into a wild state, such as hawks, monkeys, and crocodiles in Egypt, and weasels in Greece and Rome.

Memories.

Among the numberless stories told of General Butler since his death is this, extracted from the Boston Globe. The narrator had an important law case on, and believed that "Ben Butler" was the man to win it. Butler was in Washington, so he went to the capital, and after two days succeeded in obtaining an interview with the General, who declared that he was overwhelmed with work. He would not take the case for a thousand dollars a day.

"General," I said, as he turned abruptly to his work, "I was born in the same town with you."

He grunted, but wasn't otherwise affected, so far as I could see.

"Do you remember little Miss ——? And the boy who used to send notes to her, and the boy who used to take them? I am the boy who took the notes."

"And I am the boy who sent them," said the General.

He held out his hand.

"I guess I'll take your case after all," he said. And he did and won it.

Life Insurance.

Of the $12,000,000,000 of life insurance written in the world, $5,500,000,000 is placed in the United States. Between the years 1880 and 1890 there was $2,500,000,000 new life insurance written in this country and but $1,000,000,000 in the whole British Empire.

Broken Hearts a Possibility.

Broken hearts have gone out of fashion with the three-volume novel and fainting spells. The girl with the hurt in her heart nowadays forgets it, or pretends to, in the glories of a career. She takes to typewriting, or the reformation of the coolies, or women's clubs, and rather enjoys the pain in an esthetic sort of way, because it means "growth," and is experience and all that. Now with the perversity of fate there has arisen a prophet in Israel who justifies the old romancers in killing off their disappointed heroines. From the recently published letters of Sir George Paget, who is not a romancer, it is interesting to learn that a broken heart is not a sentimental figure of speech. Great grief causing a sudden shock produces actual rupture of the muscles of that organ and death from exhaustion may follow.

Science Is Off.

The statements made in scientific works as to the reasons of things are very often misleading. A work on popular science, for instance, says that the velocity of a tallow candle fired from a shotgun is so great that the candle can be made to penetrate a pine board. The statement looks plausible to one who has never tried the experiment, but when once the effort is made to shoot a candle through a board, the experimenter, on examining his target, will find, instead of a hole, a lump of tallow as big as his fist sticking to the board. Scientific explanations are very well in their way, but when it comes to an actual matter of fact no amount of science will make a tallow candle go through a board unless a hole has been previously bored for its reception.

Nora's Balance.

During the excitement of bank failures in Indianapolis, while watching the anxious crowd besieging the doors of a bank that was supposed to be in danger was overheard the following dialogue between an Irish woman and her husband:

"Nora, draw yer money out."

"And sure, Pat, I won't."

"But, Nora, you must."

"Faith and I won't draw me money out."

"Don't yees know they'll loos yer money."

"And sure ain't they better able to lose it than me?"

Patrick was overpowered with this argument, and they left, apparently satisfied.

A Sympathetic Parrot.

Whooping-cough has been uncomfortably intrusive in this city this winter. In one family up town three children were afflicted with that ailment at one time. They coughed and coughed and coughed, and the family pet, an intelligent parrot, took it into his head to imitate them. Whenever any one of the children coughed he would accompany it with a coughing paroxysm so natural that it was impossible to tell whether it was one of the children or the parrot that was coughing. The bird seemed to enjoy having the whooping-cough, and after awhile he clamored for medicine whenever he saw that it was being administered to the children.—New York Times.

What Is Money

Weighed against that health it so often fails to buy? Dross indeed. While we can none of us claim a total exemption from that greatest of all ills to which flesh is heir—ill-health—we may do much to lessen the chances of incurring it, and this not alone by the adoption of such sanitary measures as are to be found in daily exercise, regular hours, prudence in eating and drinking, and a wholesome diet, but also by resorting to judicious preventive medication when the system is threatened by unhealthful influences. For instance, residents or sojourners in malarious localities should use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a defense against chills and fever, and persons who incur much out-of-door exposure should employ it as a safeguard against rheumatism. Travelers in the tropics find it invaluable also as a means of arresting liver complaint and constipation, and counteracting the debilitating influence of a torrid climate.

"Tumbler."

Has the origin of this word as applied to the drinking glass ever been inquired into? I have in my possession an old diary, kept by a great uncle of mine in the year 1803, in which occurs the following entry: "Had a few friends to dine, tried my new tumbling glasses; very successful, all got drunk early. I have an indistinct recollection of my parents being in possession of one of these "tumbling glasses," a glass with a bottom somewhat similar to that of a soda-water bottle, so that one had constantly to keep hold of it when in use. Is it not probable that this was the reason of such glasses being styled tumblers?—Notes and Queries.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Wanted a Bottle of Saliva.

From a correspondence in possession of a local music firm it appears that words of three syllables are not understood throughout the length and breadth of the State of Minnesota. Some time ago the firm sold a piston-valve cornet to a young man in the rural districts and shortly after a letter was received from him asking what could be done to remedy the sticking of the valves. A reply was sent to him stating that oil would gum and aggravate the difficulty and that a little saliva properly applied would be the easiest way to make the instrument work easily. But this seemingly lucid explanation was not appreciated, for in the course of a few days still another letter was received from the purchaser of the cornet inclosing 25 cents and saying: "Inclosed find postal note for which please send me a bottle of saliva. Our drug store don't keep it."—Minneapolis Times.

The World Is All Right.

Those who think the world is growing worse and that Satan is getting the upper hand in this country especially, should consider the fact that good people indulged in the same fears before most of us were born. About sixty years ago a somewhat typical minister of a Connecticut church made a visit to Boston and returned—a trip which was by no means as easy then as now. "Well, doctor," said one of his parishioners to him, "do you bring us any news from Boston?" "Yes," he replied; "the Lord reigns, and the devil is trying to." That was the summary and upshot of the news sixty years ago; and so it is to-day.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Retort That Cut.

It was at a "swell" hop and everybody was in full-dress but one modest little fellow, and he seemed to think that he was being "guyed" on that account. So during an intermission he stood up in the center of the floor and addressed the company as follows: "Ladies and gentlemen, I beg you will pardon my not appearing in full-dress this evening, but the fact of the matter is I have no dress suit of my own, and at every store in town I was told that their suits were all rented for this event."—New York Press.

Who Was Dolly Varden?

Dolly Varden was the heroine of Charles Dickens' novel, "Barnaby Rudge." She wore a gown of gay-colored and flowered print, with a pointed bodice, the skirt raised to show an underskirt of some solid material. Late in the '60s, or early in the '70s, this costume became fashionable again, and "Dolly Vardens" were common all over the country.

Not His Turn.

Cash Boy—Yep.

"Why don't you go to her?"

"'Tain't my turn. It's Jim Jimson's."

"Where is Jim?"

"He just fell down the elevator."—Street & Smith's Good News.

Clearly Wrong.

Hojack—The Irishman who said it was queer one never met a person going the same way was wrong.

Tomdik—Well, if he was I'd like to know where one can do that.

In a Hurry.

Judge—Have you anything to say before I pass sentence on you?

Prisoner—No; I ain't got any time ter waste talking 'ere. I want ter go!—Pick-Me-Up.

WHEN a wild young man dies, the proper thing to send to his funeral is a bouquet of wild flowers.

Outline of Romance.

Here's a story for the writer of Southern romances: Mrs. Julia Phinzy, formerly a slave, died recently in Atlanta, leaving property valued at $20,000. She made Marion Phinzy, son of her old master, her heir.

Patience.

Dr. Claude A. Southwell of Milwaukee, claims to have written 12,191 words on a small postal card. A good conception of the fineness of his work may be gained from the fact that he has written the Lord's prayer five times in the space of a dime.

Hatch's Universal Cough Syrup costs no more than others and benefits more.

Doubtful.

Why is Cubeb Cough Cure called the one minute remedy? The following from Harry Elliott, vice-president of the State Insurance Company, Des Moines, explains his first experience. His wife recently became so hoarse from a cold she could not speak above a whisper. One dose of Cubeb Cough Cure afforded great relief and a few doses removed the hoarseness entirely. He also says his children have never been so free from coughs and colds as they have been since he keeps Cubeb Cough Cure in the house.

MR. EDITOR:—California is a lovely country, the sick get well, the poor get rich, cyclones and frosts are practically unknown. A hundred to three hundred dollars per acre is made each year on fruits with irrigation. The California Land and Water Exchange, of Dayton O., control large quantities of land in California, which they plant cultivate, pay taxes for ten years, paying you $40 per year as your part of the profit, they keeping the balance for the care and cultivation. They give an acre of land away with each 4 certificates. All they ask you to do is to pay for the irrigation, which can be done in small payments each month. They will send you the names of 90 persons who last year received from $25 to $500 on one year's investment. President Harrison says, "half of the good things of California have not been told." The Hon. Jeremiah Rusk says. "Truly California is a poor man's paradise." To five-acre holders the California Land and Water Exchange of Dayton, O, give a free return ticket to view the property. Why should any one be poor when such a chance remains open and you do not have to do any labor or work to get the profits and do not have to leave home. A CALIFORNIAN.

How Grain will Shrink.

Farmers rarely gain by keeping their grain after it is fit for market when the shrinkage is taken into account. Wheat from the time it is threshed, will shrink two quarts to the bushel, or six per cent in six months, in the most favorable circumstances. Hence, it follows that ninety-four cents a bushel for wheat when first threshed in August, is as good, taking into account the shrinkage alone, as one dollar in the following February.

Corn shrinks much more from the time it is first husked. One hundred bushels of ears as they come from the field in November, will be reduced to not far from eighty. So that forty cents a bushel for corn in the ear as it comes from the field is as good as fifty in March, shrinkage only being taken into the account.

In the case of potatoes—taking those that rot and are otherwise lost—together with the shrinkage, there is but little doubt that between October and June, the loss to the owner who holds them is not less than 33 per cent.

This estimate is taken on the basis of interest at 7 per cent., and takes no account of loss by vermin.

ATTEST:

U. S. RAUT, Town Clerk,
GEO. L. LANNING, Pres. Board.

Stabling the School Children.

The Dispatch prides itself on inventing the plan of putting up a shed on the west side of the school building, to give room for stabling the overplus of our school children. These children are unfortunate in falling into the hands of a town that is able, but too penurious to give them decent school privileges. Let us hope that the Dispatch's plan will be sat down on by the better class of our people, and sat down on so heavily that it will never come up to disgrace the town again. Have our people no more pride, or spirit, or liberality, or interest in our children and our schools than to adopt such a course? What has become of the spirit of progress and intelligence that has put Auburn into the front rank of all enterprising towns of northeastern Indiana. We desire here, and now, to enter our solemn protest against such a penny wise course as that outlined by the Dispatch and so proudly adopted by the republican caucus. Fancy our beautiful school building that now shows so nicely, disfigured by a cow shed leaning up against its western side! What a lovely view it would present to the strangers approaching Auburn on the trains! If it is not a beautiful thing, no more is it a safe plan from a health and life standpoint. We will have about 500 children cooped up like sardines in a box, with only such ventilation as accidentally comes to them from the few windows not covered by the newly erected sheds. These sheds will cover all the west windows, the side from which much of the wind comes, and even the ventilation in the hall will be interfered with. Then as our school population goes on increasing, the same small spirit that builds a shed now, would build another on the south side. Later, we could have one on the north, and at last when we expand into a city, we could put up a sort of a calf shed on the east front for the little ones, and then people who like the Dispatch, and the republican caucus of last week, believe in stabling Auburn's unfortunate school children, can lie back on the comfortable beds they have purchased with the money withheld from the school expenses, and dream happy dreams of the success of "the plan suggested in the Dispatch of April 6th for solving the question of more school room."

Collect Your Debts.

Mr. Irving H. Dennis, state agent for Sprague's Collecting Agency, Royal Insurance Building, Chicago, is doing the city in the interests of his house, and is from day to day demonstrating the beauties of his collecting method to business men, by which the hardened and impermeable are forced into the performance of right-doing in the liquidation of debts of long standing. This system has the desired effect in all cases except where individuals are so lost to honor and self-respect that a moral obligation is looked upon as unworthy of serious consideration. Numbers of the business men of the state have taken hold of the plan with gratifying success, eloquently attesting their approbation of the system with testimonials of exuberance. Since his visit to the city Mr. Dennis has added quite a list of our leading business men to his membership roll, and will continue his calls, expatiating upon its advantages, until the city shall have been thoroughly worked. The system is self convincing and needs no special endorsement. The agency is reliable and its members are the gainers; to say more would be superflous.

A Leader.

Since its first introduction, Electric Bitters has gained rapidly in popular favor, until now it is clearly in the lead among pure medicinal tonics and alteratives—containing nothing which permits its use as a beverage or intoxicant, it is recognized as the best and purest medicine for all ailments of the stomach, liver or kidneys.—It will cure sick headache, indigestion, constipation, and drive malaria from the system. Satisfaction guaranteed with each bottle or the money will be refunded. Price only 50c. per bottle. Sold by Robbins & McCord. 2
